Chief Rivers of this Country, 1 Araxes, which rising out of Mount Aber, an Armenian Mountain, runneth Eastward as far as Media, and then bendeth it self towards the North: and after a long course is divided into two Branches; whereof the one falleth into the Caspian Sea, the other into, 2 Cyru, another great River of this Country. The fountain of this last in Mount Caucasus in the furthest North of Turcomania; and falling into a Lake, there meeteth with, 3 Cambyses, another great River of these parts; and so together hasten to the Caspian also. 4 Euphrates, by the Turks called Frab, by the Hebrews, Perah, famous in Scripture for its watering the Garden of Eden, hath its fountain in the hills which they call Niphates, as is said by Strabo. A River of great length and swiftness. For having forced it self a passage through the Mountains of Taurus, it runneth in the West of Mesopotamia, with a stream so violent, that they who go by water from Bir to Birrah, a Town on the North-west of Mesopotamia, to the City of Bagdad, are fain to come back again by land; selling those boats for eight Crowns which they bought for 50. At Apamia, a City of Chaldea, it is joined with Tigris, with which the greatest branch of it passeth thorow the City of Babylon, and so into the Persian Gulf: the rest of it being cut into many Channels, for fear it should overflow and drown the Country, are quite lost in the Lakes of Chaldea. 5 Tigris, a swifter stream than that, whence it had the name; the word in the Median Tongue signifying an Arrow. A River of so strong a course, that it passeth thorow the Lake Thibilis, without mixture of Waters, and affordeth it Armenians an easie passage to Bagdad: who on a few Rafs borne up with Goat-skins blown full of wind, and boards laid upon them, make their voyage thither. It is called Hiddekel in the Scripture, one of the four Rivers which watered the Garden of Paradise: situate in an Island made by the embracement of this River and Euphrates, with their several Branches. Rising originally out of the Lake of Thibilis, in Armenia Major, where now we are. It is presently almost swallowed by the gaping Earth; and falling under the huge bulk of Taurus, breaketh forth again; and compelling the East parts of Mesopotamia, which it divides from Assyria, meets with Euphrates, as before. Of which its first and second birth, thus the Poet Lucan.

At Tigris subito tellus absorbet hiatus,
Occulitque regit angustis, rursusque reatuum
Fonte novo flumen pelagi non abnegat undas.

That is to say,

Tigris, soon swallowed by the thirsty earth,
Finds there a burial where it had its birth:
But breaking out at a new spring, vouchsafes
With the salt Seas to mix its sweeter waves.

Mountains of most note, are. 1 Aber, glorying in the fountains of the great River Araxes. 2 Periadri, or Perisgeres, as Proklos, Pariedri, as Pliny calleth it, a branch or spur of the great Mountain Taurus. 3 Udasepes, another branch of that great Mountain. 4 Some part of Anti-Taurus. 5 The Mountains called Montes Mischis, more towards the North, abutting upon Cappadocia, and the Euxine Sea: which name they took from Misch, or Mosch the Son of Japhet, preserving the remembrance of his planting there. 6 Niphates, one of the fountains of Taurus, out of which the famous River Euphrates is said to issue. 7 The Gordian Mountains, conceived by many learned men to be the Mountains of Ararat, on one of the tops whereof called Baris, the Ark of Noah is most generally affirmed to rest. Affirmed by many ancient Writers of the Christian Church, and countenanced not only by Josephus, and some others of the Elder Historians; but by the Septuagint themselves: who in the 37 Chap. of Ista. v. 38. and 2 Kings 19. 37. have rendered Ararat by Armenia. And be it so, let Ararat be Armenian Mountains: yet doth it not follow hereupon, that the Ark rested on the Gordian Mountains, or any other of this Country, as they would conclude. We may infer as Logically, for ought I can see, that the Garden of Eden must be looked for in Armenia also; because situate in the circings of Euphrates, and Tigris, two Armenian Rivers. Those Rivers have indeed their fountains in Armenia Major, but compass not the Garden of Eden, till after a long course they encounter each other in the spacious Plains of Babylonia. And so those Mountains, though they have the name of the Mountains of Ararat or Armenia, because there first grown to a discernable and super-eminent height above all the Mountains of those parts, became not the resting place of the Ark, till after a further course towards the East, they were grown to their fullest height; which is in those parts of it betwixt Seythia and Persia, which are called Montes Caucasus: not that Mount Caucasus which lieth on the North of Caldia, and Iberia, out of which the River Cyru is said to rise; but that which lieth on the East-side of the Caspian Sea, where Mount Taurus and Imaus do cross each other. But of this elsewhere.

It was divided heretofore into many Provinces, the principal whereof had (I grant) its name from the Gordian Mountains, called in some Writers, Cordis; from whence the Province had the name of Gordiana, but most commonly called Cordene, bordering on Assyria. The Kingdom once of Zarbiennus, who siding with Lucullus against Tigranes King of Armenia, was by Tigranes murdered with his Wife and Children; but honored by Lucullus with a stately and magnificent funeral. 2 The second Province of note is called Cataene, near the Montes Mischis. 3 Tofarene bordering on the River Cyru. 4 Colbene on the banks of Araxes. 5 Sephene, near the turnings of the River Euphrates: mistook by some industrious and knowing men, to be the Syria Saba of the Holy Scriptures. 6 Bassine, on the North-west, near the Springs of that River. But what Cities did belong to each, I find no where specified.

Those of most consequence in the whole, 1 Artaxata, by Plinius called Caput Genis: of most esteem in those times, and the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Armenia from its first foundation. Built by Artaxerx, one of the Progenitors of Tigranes, at the persuasion of Anabal, whilst he abode in this Country: who liking the situation of the place, drew on it the model of a strong and gallant City, according to which Plat-form it was presently built. Taken and sacked by the Romans, as a daughter of Carthago, by Corbulo in the time of Nero, it never could revive again to its former splendour. In the middle ages called Eschia, and at this day Coy, or Coin; if not built rather out of the ruins of it. A City memorable for two great battels near unto it: the first between Lucullus on the one side, against Mithridates and Tigranes on the other; wherein the Romans were Victors: the second between Selimus Emperor of the Turkey, and Hysmael the Persian Sophy; wherein the Turkey were Conquerours, Anno 1514: A Victory which he bought with the loss of 30000 of his best men, and such a terror to the whole Army, that the Turkey to this day call it the only day of doom. The fields adjoining to the Town wherein this great battel was fought, called the Chalderan fields. 2 Sebastia, now Snassia, seated on Euphrates, where it meeteth with the Mountain Taurus; the residence of the Patriarch of the Armenians, at their first separation from the Seat of Constantinople; the Metropolis at that time of all Armenia: so named in honour of Augustus, whom the Greeks call Sebastus. But of late degraded of that dignity, the Patriarchal See, by reason of the fierce wars raging in this Country, betwixt the Persians and the Turkey, being removed to the Monastery of Eomeazin, near the City of Ervan in Persia; in the dominions of which King these Armenian Christians live in great abundance, by the name of Jephelini. 3 Tigranocerta, beautified and enlarged, if not first founded, by Tigranes above mentioned; by whom replenished with people of several Nations, whose Countries he had taken from them, and enriched in a manner with the wealth of all his Kingdom: there being no Armenian, either Prince or Peasant, who sent not somewhat towards the adorning of it. But taken by Lucullus without great resistance, those federal Nations not agreeing amongst themselves; and therein besides other Treasure, no less than 8000 Talents in ready money. The City situate near a River, which Tacitus calleth Niceforus. 4 Arasimata, by Pliny called Arimate, on the banks of Euphrates. 5 Chobala, so called in memory of Hul, or Chul the Son of Aram, one of the first Planters of this Country. 6 Barazis, by the Emperor Leo much enlarged and beautified; dignified with the new name of Leontopolis, and for a while made the Metropolis of the Province. 7 Asarata, by Strabo called Arxata. 8 Theodopolis, built on the foundation of some of the more ancient Cities, by the Emperor Theodosius, and of him thus named. 9 Colonia, the strongest and most defensible City heretofore, when possessed by the Romans. 10 Clamassim, a strong Town on the banks of Euphrates, taken by Selimus the first in his way towards Persia, and therewith livity and scijin of the rest of this Country, since wholly conquered by his Successors. 11 Charis, not far from the same River also, supposed to be the Chorisa of Pliny, of which not long since the ruins only; but in three weeks for repaired and fortified by the Turkey, Anno 1579, that it is thought to be impregnable. 12 Theffia, giving name of old to the Lake Theffius, and to the Region called Theffuris; but now not in being. 13 Arminum, now of greatest name, and esteemed the Metropolis of this Country: situate in that part of the Lake of Van (the Martianus palus of the ancient Writers) which lieth next to this Country: and by that well fortified: the only City of Armenia possessed by the Persians, who are the Lords of all that Lake, of which more hereafter. 14 Van, both for natural situation, and the works of Art, accompanied by the Turkey for their strongest Bulwark in these parts against the Persians; and for that cause well garrisoned, and as well maintained.

This Country was first planted by Hul or Chul the Son of Aram, and by Misch one of the Sons of Japhet, who with their Families or Colonies possessed the same: the one leaving the remainder of his name, in the Montes Mischis; the other in the Town called Chobala, and the Region called Colbene by Proklos, Chobatenis by Stephanus. Advanced to the honour of a Kingdom as soon as any, that of Babel excepted: Ninus the third from Nimrod finding Barzanes King heretofore, whom he forced to acknowledge his superiority, and to aid him in his wars against Zoraster the King of Badria. Kings of most note in times succeeding, (for we have no constant Catalogue of them) were, 1 Araxes, who being warred on by the Persians, was promised victory by the Oracle, on the sacrifice of his two fair Daughters. Willing to satisfy the Gods, and yet spare his Children, he sacrificed two of the daughters of Mischaleus, a Nobleman of this Country: by whom in revenge heretofore his own daughters were slain, and himself so closely followed, that swimming the River then called Helmas, he was therein drowned, and thereby gave unto that River the name of Araxes. 2 Artaxata, the founder of the great City Artaxata; spoken of before. 3 Tigranes, the most mighty King that ever reigned in Armenia, to which he added by his prowess, Galatia, and a great part of Cilicia, in Asia Minor, the whole Countries of Media, Syria, and Phoenicia: But siding with Mithridates, whose daughter he had married, against the Romans, he was by Lucullus overthrow in two great battels, and outed of the greatest part of his dominions. Hearing that Pompey had succeeded Lucullus in command of the Army, and trusting more unto his goodness than a wife man would, he put himself into his power: by whom condemned in a great sum of money for the charge of the War, and stripped of all the rest of his Estates, he was suffered to enjoy Armenia Major, Syria being made a Province, Sephene given to Ariobarzanes King of Cappadocia, Media left unto it self, and the lesser Armenia conferred on one of his Sons, who being found guilty of some practice with the King of Parthia, was carried prisoner unto Rome, and his Country brought into the form of a Province. 4 Artavases, circumvented by Marc-Antony, who led him prisoner to Rome, but (cateris, ne quid bonori eius desset, auris, as the Historian tells us of him) it was in Chains of Gold for his great honour; giving Armenia to one of the Sons of Cleopatra. And though, 5 Artaxias recovered his Fathers Kingdom, yet he and his Successors held it but as Vassals of the Roman Empire: the Senate after that confirming, and sometimes nominating the Armenian Kings. Continuing in this Estate till the time of Trajan, it was by him reduced to the form of a Province (made after that a part of the Pontic Dieceps) who adding Mesopotamia also unto his Dominions, made Tigris the Eastern border of his Empire, which Augustus thought fit to limit with the banks of Euphrates. But long it held not in that form, being governed by its own Kings, as it was before Trajan's time, in the reign of Constantinus, Julian, and the Emperours following; whom they acknowledged and revered as their Lords in chief, till the time of Julianus the second (he began his Empire Anno 687.) when subdued by the Sarcens. Recovered by that Emperor, but soon lost again, it continued subject to the Sarcens till the breaking in of the Turkey, Anno 844. of whom more anon. The greatest part of the Turkey emptying themselves into Persia, and other Countries which they took from the Eastern Emperours; the Christians of Armenia began to take heart again, and to have Kings of their own, by whom governed, till again subdued by Occidan, or Heccata the Son of Cim; the first Cham of the Tartari. Nor did the Tartars make so absolute a conquest of it, as to extinguish either Christianity, or the race of the Kings, Hathum, surnamed Armenius, rising after this, and going in person to Mongo, the great Cham of Tartary, 1257. And in our own Chronicles, in the Reign of King Richard the Second, we find mention of one Leon an Armenian King; who came hither to sue for aid against the Turkey: by whom then the King sent Embassadors to Constantine, desiring Ministers and Preachers to be sent to Iberia, to instruct the people in the Faith, which was done accordingly. Since that time Christianity hath flourished in this Country without interruption; though by Mahometans, and Pagans, on all sides encompassed; agreeable in doctrinal points to the Church of Greece, whose Rituals also the People do to this day follow. Not subject for all that to the Patriarch of Constantinople, (though of his Communion) but to their own Metropolitan only: who hath under him about 18 Bishops, and resideth for the most part, in St. Katherine's Monastery on Mount Sinai. By means of which remote dwelling of their principal Pastor, Mahometanism hath got some footing, and Jesuitism began to creep in amongst them. The occasion of which last was this.

About the year 1614, the Persians making an inroad into this Country, took the City of Cremen, and therein Cetaba, the mother of Prince Teimuraz; whom, leading her captive into Persia, and not able to prevail with her to turn Mahometan, they most cruelly murdered. Some of the Jesuits then travelling in those Countries, and willing out of that sad accident to advance the fame of their Society, together with the Catholic cause, cut off the head of a dead man whom they found in the way, anointed it with oyl and odours, brought it into Georgia, and signified unto the Prince, that they had with them the head of the blessed Martyr Cetaba: desiring leave to live in some Monastery, and have the keeping of the holy Relique committed to them. This easily believed, and granted, the head was placed with great honour in the Church of St. George at Aberdall; much refer to it from all parts by diseased persons: whom if past cure, the Jesuits sent home again, prescribing them in the way of preparation a long time of repentance; if curable by outward means which they applied, the cure was presently ascribed to the holy Relique. Grown famous by this means, they gained many Disciples to themselves; and had no small hope of prevailing on Prince Teimuraz to submit himself to the Pope, as the Vicar of CHRIST. When in the heat of all their glories, a Letter cometh from Maacra, a Lady attendant on the Princess, (but then living in Persia, as a slave or bondmaid) signifying that her Master by her perswasion, had got into his power the body of his mother Cetaba; which he might ransom if he pleased: two Travellers withal, who came out of Persia with the Jesuits, reporting what they see them do with the dead man's head. By which means the Imposture being discovered, the body of the Queen was sent for, the false Relique was cast out of the Church, and the false Jesuits into Prison, and next out of the Country.

Rivers of note I find not any, either in Ptolemy, or any of our modern Writers, but what are touched upon before, except only the River of Iberus spoken of already, from which the Country is thus named. The whole in general so destitute of waters, that Pompey in his march this way against the Albanians, was fain to carry 10000 bladders filled with water, for the use of his Army.

Places of most antiquity and importance in it, 1 Araxeissa, 2 Vasada, 3 Lubium, 4 Armedissa, all named by Ptolemy; this last by Pliny called Harmasiss. 5 Cremen, the chief City now possessed by the Georgians, 6 Cacheti, honoured with a fair Church, the most beautiful of all the Country, dedicated by the name of Saint George. 7 Artsala, where are to be seen the ruins of a large City, and many Churches; by what name anciently called, I find not. 8 Aluacala, or the Golden Castle, a strong Fortrefs, and the ordinary residence of the Georgian Princes, since the time of the wars betwixt the Persians and the Turks. 9 Archibelech, a strong Castle taken by Solyman the Magnificent in his wars against Tamas King of Persia, and ever since holden by the Turks. 10 Tefis, a large and spacious Town, forsaken by the Georgians at the coming of Mustapha, General of Amurath the third, against the Persians: who liking the situation of it, caused it to be repaired and fortified, planted thereon an hundred Pieces of Ordnance, and left therein a Garrison of 6000 Soldiers. 11 Lori, distant from Tefis about two days journey of a Carrier's pace, strengthened with a lofty Castle, environed with deep ditches, and a thick wall, amounting to a mile in compass. Seized on by Feras Bass, the Successor of Mustapha, who repaired the Walls, planted thereon 200 small Pieces of Ordnance, and garrisoned it with 7000 Turks for defence thereof. 12 Tamanis, a short days march from Lori, the Country lying betwixt both, full of rich fields and pastures, abounding with Corn, Fruit, and Cattel. Night unto which the Sal Feras raised a new Fortrefs, for the better command of the Straights and Passages, leading from thence to Lori, and so to Tefis, (the Key of Media or Sirman) the Wall whereof being 1700 yards in compass, he caused it to be planted with 200 Pieces of Artillery, and with incredible diligence cut down a thick Wood which lay before it, which otherwise would have been an acceptacle of Turks, or Enemies. 13 Gifisa, 14 Bafcan, possessed and fortified by the Turks, to make good their footing in this Country. But possibly most of these strong holds now possessed by the Turks may be within the bounds of Armenia Major, and Albania, though within the Country of Armenia; the name not being limited to Iberia, as was said before.

The first Inhabitants hereof were such who were brought hither by Tubal, the Son of Japhet, from whom this people at the first, as Jayphus hath it, had the name of Thobelis. But that name growing out of knowledge, the Nations in it of most note were the Tibareni, Majane, Chalyber, and of less esteem, the Esfirini, Sapiri, Macroni, &c. united at the last in the name of Iberi, from the River Iberus, of which Pliny speaketh, the principal of all this Country. Too fruitful of increase for so narrow a dwelling, some of them put themselves to seek their fortunes; when after long wandering they fell upon the Coast of Spain next the Pyrenies, where they laid themselves; giving the name of Iberi to the chief River there, and of Iberia to the Country; Of which more before. Such of them as remained behind continued an unconquered people, under the government of their own Kings, till the time of Tigermes King of Armenia. By whom invited to his aid against the Romans, they came in accordingly; and in his fall discomfited by Lucullus in three several battels, were fain to stand upon their guard as well as they could: first holding fair with Pompey, who succeeded Lucullus in his charge; But breaking out again on a new temptation, they were encountered by him. In which battel 5000 of their men being slain, and 10000 taken, they were constrained to sue for peace; not otherwise to be obtained till Anacris, the King of these Iberians, gave his Sons for Pledges. After this Ferdinandus to the Roman, and Grecian Emperours, till the fatal inundation of the Saracens who weakened that Empire, that the Kings hereof acknowledged no more subjection to those of Constantinople, till Constantinople it self became the Imperial seat of the Ottoman Family; in whose quarrels with the Persian Sophies, this Country began to suffer a new invasion; some Towns and Forts of it being taken by Solyman in his march or passage against Tamas. Afterwards in the time of Amurath the third, who set his mind most eagerly on the war with Persia, a great part of it was subdued by

Mustapha

Mustapha, the Turkish General: who inviting the widow Princess and her two Sons to come to his Tent, sent the young Princes to Constantinople: and by that means had opportunity to assure his purchases. And though the Persians did their best to assist the Georgians; yet proved they but a kind of miserable comforters, as much punishing or plaguing this poor Country with their aids, as the Turks by their Armies. So that now it stands divided betwixt the Grand Seigneur, and its natural Princes, the Georgian Princes holding the greatest part, but the Turks being in possession of the strongest holds; kept by them under colour of securing their way to Persia, for which this Country is indeed but unhappily seated.

4 ALBANIA.

ALBANIA is bounded on the East, with the Caspian Sea; on the West, with Iberia; on the North, with the Caucasian Mountains; on the South, with the Mæotis. So named from the Albani, who did once inhabit it, and of late called Saviria, but reckoned in these last ages as part of Georgia.

The Country of so rich a Soil, that without the least labour of the Husbandman, the Earth doth naturally and liberally afford her store; and where it is but once sown, will yield two or three reapings. But being ill husbands even in former times, they occasioned Strabo to give them this Note for a remembrance, That they needed not the use of the Sole, who knew no better how to make use of the Land. The people anciently so simple, that they could not reckon above one hundred; ignorant of weights, measures, and the use of money. Old age they had in high esteem, but held it utterly unlawful to make speech of the dead. And of these Pliny doth report, That they were night-headed from their very youth, and could see as well by night as by day; the verity of which last may become very questionable. But withal they are affirmed to have been stout and courageous people, strong bodies, patient of toil and labour, as they are at this day. And well the men may be courageous and stout, when the women are so truly masculine. Of whom it is affirmed by Authors of undoubted credit, that they were exercised in Arms and martial feats, as if descended lineally from the ancient Amazons, whom Plutarch placed in this Tract; reporting some of them to be aiding to these Albanians, in their War with Pompey; which possibly might be no other, than from the more noble Albanian Dames.

Principal Rivers of this Country, 1 Suana, giving name to the Suani, one of the Nations of these parts mentioned by Pliny. 2 Casim. 3 Gerrus. 4 Albanus, whence perhaps the name of Albania came unto this people. 5 Cyrus, (by Plutarch called Cyrus) spoken of in Armenia Major, were more properly belonging to this Country; because here in it hath its Springs, and the greatest part of its course also. For rising out of the Mountain Caucasus, which flus up this Province on the North, it passeth thorough the midst of it, till it come to the borders of Armenia, where it beginneth to bend more towards the East; and having received into its Channel all the former Rivers, besides many others of less note, falleth with twelve mouths into the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. Mountains of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with other Nations: the Monte Maficius on the South, and Caucasus upon the North, being rather common boundaries betwixt several Nations, than peculiar unto any one; though from the last the Iberians, and these Albanians, be in some Writers called Caucasice Gener.

Cities and Towns I find many in it, but little of them more than their very names: 1 Chabata, by Pliny called

Cabalaca, and honoured with the Character of Insipia. Albania urbs, the most noted City of this Country. 2 Albana, so called from the River Albanus, upon which it was seated. 3 Telcha, 4 Namechia. 5 Thelbi. 6 Gerasa, near unto the Influx of the River Cyrus. How these are called, or whether any thing be remaining of them, I am not able to say. The chief now being, and worthy to be so accounted, is the City of Dorbert, situate near the Caspian Sea; from which to Tefis, a City spoken of before, remain the foundations of a high and thick wall: affirmed to have been built by Alexander the Great, to defend these parts, against the irruptions of the Northern unconquered Nations. The Town environed with two walls, and so defended by difficult and narrow passages of the Rocks, that it is not easily accessible: but taken for all that, by Mustapha the Turkish General, Anno 1587, and made the ordinary residence of a Turkish Pasha. Conceived to be the Caucasice Porte of the Ancients, which Pliny honoureth with the title of Ingeni natura miraculum: by Egyptus, for the strength of it, called Porta Ferrea; with reference to which by the Turks called Demir-cam, the word signifying in their Language, A Gate of Iron. The other places of this Tract are either of no account and estimation, or else are specified before amongst the Cities and good Towns of the Georgians, of whose Country this is now a part: yet we may add, 2 Sabran, upon the borders of Media. 3 Santia Maris, North of Dorbert; both of them on, or near the banks of the Caspian Sea.

The first Inhabitants of this Country, seem to have been of the Plantation of Geber the Son of Arax, and Nephew of Japhet, whose memory was long preserved in the City of Gerasa before mentioned: So called by him, or some of his Posterity, in remembrance: or him. The People living somewhat out of the common road, were little troubled with Invaders from foreign parts; neither the Persians, nor Macedonians, looking so far North. Nor possibly had the Romans taken notice of them, had they not engaged themselves with T. rans first, and afterwards with Mithridates. Falling on Pompey with an Army of 40000, and well beaten by him, they were content to sue for peace. But finding that the Iberians also had took up Arms, they engaged again; levying an Army of 12000 Horse, and 90000 Foot, in which Oroetes their King, with his Brother Cathis, were in person present. And though they had made good the banks of the River Cyrus; yet being ill armed, and for the most part only with skins of beasts, they made but small resistance against the Romans: notwithstanding the gallant charge of Cathis, who assaulted Pompey, and had the honour to be slain by him in the place. After this overthrow, and their giving pledges unto Pompey for their good behaviour, we find little mention of them in the Stories of the Roman Empire, till the time of Trajan, who having conquered, and reduced Armenia Major to the form of a Province, resolved to shew his power to these neighbouring Nations; and to that end imposed a King on the Albani, of his own appointment, and made the Kings of Colchis, and Iberia, do their homage to him. In times succeeding no news of them; either because remote from the stage of Action, or serving under the command of some greater Nation, where their name occurs not. Conquered by Occidan, or Haccata the Cham of Tartary, together with Iberia, and Armenia, they were a while subject to that Empire: and passing in succeeding times by the name of Georgians, did partake of the same fortunes with them. Now at the mercy of the Turks, who by reason of the strong footing which he hath gotten amongst them, is become a dreadful neighbour to them; if not acknowledged by them for their Lord in chief.

Thus

Thus having taken a survey of all the Provinces of the Turkish Empire, both in Europe and Asia, and touched upon the means by which they are possessed of Egypt, whereunto all the rest of their hold in Africa, serves but for an accessory, we will now look upon the story of this people, their first original, the great success of their affairs, the Princes under whose command they have made these conquests: which having done, we will proceed to a Description of the Persons, Manners, and Conditions of the Turks themselves, their power and policy, with other things considerable in so great an Empire.

And first for the original of the Turkish Nation, they were most probably the descendants of those Turce, whom Pliny and Pomponius Mela place about the Fens of Meotis. Of whom thus Mela, speaking of the Gelani, a Scythian people, juxta Thysagete, Turcæque, vastus Syllus occupant, alunturque venando, &c. Next unto them (saith he) live the Thysagete, and the Turce, possessed of vast Woods, and maintained by hunting; and then a rough and desert Country with continual rocks, as far as to the Arymphiæ. And Pliny muttering up the barbarous Nations of those parts, joins the Tissagete (or Thysagete) with the Turks, and placeth them next the Arymphiæ, as Mela doth, usque ad solitudines salustios valibus apertas, spreading themselves unto the rough deserts and woody Valleys. Not known by action (though by name) till the time of Liberius the second, who began his Empire Anno 577, when pressing hard on the Avars, a neighbouring Nation, they compelled them to forsake their seats, and pass into Europe; where they made themselves Masters of Pannonia, now called Hungary. In the time of Heraclius, we find them, with other barbarous Nations, at the Siege of Constantinople, but under the command of the Persians. After which they began to set up for themselves, and in the year 763, made a road into those Countries which we last described; and loading themselves with prey and booty, returned home again. But liking better of these parts than their own poor dwellings, in the year 844, they brake once more thorow the Caspian Streights; and passing through Iberia, seized on Armenia Major, and there fixed themselves, giving it the name of Turcomania. In which wide and spacious Country they roamed up and down, without any certain habitation, removing their herds and families from one place to another, as they had formerly been used to do in the fens of Meotis; and as the Tartars and wild Arabs do unto this day. And so they lived, a poor and contemptible Nation, till Mahomet the Sultan of Persia, rebelling against his Lord and Master, the Caliph of Babylon, called in these Turks unto his aid; and by their help obtained a signal Victory. The Victory obtained, the Turks desire their Wages, and a fair dismissal; but could speed in neither, the Sultan being loth to part with such a necessary mischief, till his Affairs were better settled; and therefore shutting up the passages of the River Araxes, which he before had opened for them. Provoked wherewith, under the conduct of Tangrolipix, their principal Leader, they began to spoil and waste the Country; a multitude of needy people, and some of the discontented Souldiers, coming daily to them. Assaulted by the Persians, in the first battle they not only got a notable Victory, but such force of Armour, Horses, and other necessities, as made them able to encounter with the Sultan himself: whom having overthrown and slain in the second fight, Tangrolipix is by both Armies proclaimed Sultan or King of Persia, in the year 1030. or thereabouts.

There were at this time amongst the Turks two most noted Tribes; the Selazucian, and the Oguzian. Of the Selazucian, Tangrolipix, Cutlu Moser, Melech, and Ducat were the Heads, of which, Tangrolipix as the chief of that Clan or Family, was settled in the Throne of Persia; Cutlu Moser furnished with an Army against the Christians, possessed himself of a great part of Asia Minor; Melech and Ducat, by the like favour of their Cousin the Persian Sultan, were vested into the Cities of Altop and Damascus, with their several Territories. But the Line of Tangrolipix and the rest being all worn out, as hath been shewn in our descriptions of Syria, and Anatolia, the man of most Nobility amongst the Turks, was Ottoman the chief of the Oguzian Family; Nephew of Solyman Prince of Machan, a small Territory in the Realm of Persia. Which Solyman, flying the fury of the Tartars when they conquered Persia, was drowned in crossing the River Emphrates, as he passed with few Subjects towards Asia Minor, the best place of refuge for his Nation; leaving the chief-ship of his Tribe to Elnigul his Son, who obtained of the last Aladine of the Selazucian Family, the Village of Saguta in Bithynia, for himself and his small handful of people. To him succeeded his Son Ottoman, in the year 1280. who to revenge some injuries done unto his people by the imprudent Christians, took from them Castile after Castile; and in the end possessed himself of the City of Nice, not long before the Imperial Seat of the Greecian Emperours. Emboldened with such great successes, and hearing of the death of Aladine the second, whom he acknowledged for his Lord, he took unto himself the Title of Sultan, Anno 1300. from which before he had obtained. To this time, and these small beginnings we must reduce the foundation of the Ottoman Empire; increased unto its present greatness, by the courage and good fortune of these Princes following.

The Kings of the Turkey of the Oguzian, or Ottoman Family.

- 1300 1 Ottoman, or Osman the Son of Elnigul, the first Turkish Sultan of this Line, added to his small Territory the greatest part of Phrygia, Bithynia, and some part of Pontus. 28.
- 1328 2 Orchanes, took the City of Prusa, and made it his residence; and was the first that had footing in Europe, where he got Gallipolis, and other pieces.
- 1350 3 Amurath, won the Thracian Chiosse, the strong City, of Adrianople, with the Countries of Servia, and Bulgaria; where he was slain by a common Souldier in the fields of Cassova. 23.
- 1373 4 Bajazet, made himself Master of a great part of Thrace, Macedon, and Achaia. He was taken Prisoner by Tamerlane, and brained himself in an Iron Cage, in which the insolent Conquerour used to carry him. 26.
- 1399 5 Solyman, the eldest Son of Bajazet, succeeded in the peaceable possession of the Turkish Provinces in Europe; but passing with an Army into Asia, for the recovery of those parts thereof usurped by Mahomet his youngest Brother, he was forced again into Europe, to make head against Musa Bajazet his third Son (employed by Mahomet in that diversion) who having there vanquished and slain him, Anno 1406, succeeded for a time in the Throne at Adrianople.
- 1404 6 Mahomet, the youngest Son of Bajazet, a vigilant and active Prince, first wrested from his Brother Ija (Bajazet's second Son then living) living) the City of Prusa with the Dominions thereunto belonging, thereupon taking to himself the Title of King or Sultan, by degrees recovered all which his Father had lost unto the Tartars: Afterwards making use of Musa, for the supplanting of Solyman, he followed him presently into Europe, where he fought with him, vanquished and slew him, about the year 1416. Thereby uniting in his own Person the whole Turkish Kingdom, which he enlarged with the more absolute Conquest of Dacia, part of Slavonia, and the rest of Macedon. 17.

1416 7 Amurath II. subdued from the Constantinopolitan Empire, all Achaia, Thessaly, Epirus; he shaked the State of Hungary, and died before the Walls of Croy. 34.

The Ottoman Emperours.

- 1450 8 Mahomet II. surnamed the Great, and first Emperour of the Turks, conquered the Two Empires of Constantinople and Trabezond, Twelve Kingdoms, and Two hundred Cities. 31.
- 1481 9 Bajazet II. subdued the Cardanian Kingdom, and part of Armenia, and drove the Venicians from Moræa, and their part of Dalmatia. 31.
- 1512 10 Selimus, having poisoned his Father, subverted the Mamaliksky of Egypt; bringing it, together with Palestine, Syria, and Arabia, under the yoke of the Turks. 7.
- 1519 11 Solyman II. surnamed the Magnificent, surprised Rhodes, Belgrade, Buda; with a great part of Hungary, Babylon, Assyria, Mysopotamia. 48.
- 1567 12 Selimus II. an idle and effeminate Emperour, by his Deputies took from the Venicians the Isle of Cyprus; and from the Moors, the Kingdom of Tunis and Algiers. 8.
- 1575 13 Amurath III. took from the disagreeing Persian, Armenia, Media, and the City Tauris; and the Fort Guarino from the Hungarians. 20.
- 1595 14 Mahomet III. took Agria in Hungary; which Kingdom in all likelihood had been lost, if he had pursued his Victory at the Battel of Kerslure. Never but then in any Battel, and then to frighted, that he durst never see the face of an Army afterwards.
- 1603 15 Achmet, who the better to enjoy his pleasures, made peace with the German Emperour, and added nothing to his Empire. 15.
- 1618 16 Mustapha, Brother to Achmet succeeded, which was a novelty, never before heard of in this Kingdom; it being the Grand Seignieurs common policy to strangle all the younger Brothers: howsoever this Mustapha was preserved, either because Achmet being once a younger Brother, took pity on him; or because he had no issue of his own Body, and so was not permitted to kill him.
- 1618 17 Osman, or Ottoman II. succeeded his Uncle Mustapha; and being unsuccessful in his War against Poland, was by the Janizaries slain in an uproar, and Mustapha again restored: yet long enjoyed he not his Throne; for the same hand that raised him, plucked him down again, and seated young Amurath in the place.

- 1623 18 Morad (or Amurath the IV.) Brother of Osman, of the age of 13 years, succeeded on the second deposition of his Uncle Mustapha; who proved a stout and masculine Prince, and bent himself to the reviving of the ancient Discipline. To the great good of Christendom, he spent his stomach on the Persians, from whom he recovered Babylon.
- 19 Ibrahim, the Brother of Morad, preserved by the Sultan's Mother in his Brothers life; and by her power deposed again for interdicting her the Court. He spent a great part of his Reign in the War of Crete, against the Venicians; but without any great success.
- 1648 20 Mahomet IV. Son of Ibrahim, now reigning: Lord of all this vast Empire, containing all Dacia and Greece, the greatest part of Slavonia and Bithynia, the Isles of the Ægean Sea, and a great part of the Tarbarian Cherisones in Europe; of all the Isles, and Provinces which we have hitherto described in Asia; and in Africa of all Egypt, the Kingdoms of Tunis and Algiers, with the Ports of Suacum and Erocca. Now is their stile inferior to so vast an Empire, Solyman thus styling himself in his Letter to Villerius, Great Master of the Rhodes, at such time as he intended to invade that Island; i. e. Solyman King of Kings, Lord of Lords, most high Emperour of Constantinople and Trabezond, the most mighty King of Persia, Syria, Arabia, and the Holy Land; Lord of Europe, Asia and Africa; Prince of Mecca and Aleppo, Ruler of Jerusalem, and Sovereign Lord of all the Seas and Iles thereof.
- As for the persons of the Turks, they are generally well-complexioned, of good stature, proportionally compacted, no idle talkers, nor doers of things superfluous; hot and vengeous, servile to their Prince, and zealous in their Religion. They nourish no hate upon their Heads, except it be a Tuft on the top of their Crowns, by which they think that Mahomet will snatch them up into Paradise at the day of Judgment. For which reason they keep on of all sides, though never so poor, accounting it an opprobrious thing to see any men uncover their heads; saying, when they dislike of any thing which they see, or hear, I had as lief thou hadst shewn me thy bare Skull. In their familiar salutation they lay their hands on their bosoms, and a little incline their Bodies; but when they accost a Person of Rank, they bow almost to the Ground, and kiss the hem of his Garment. Walking up and down they never use, and much wonder at the often walking of Christians. Biddulph relateth, that being at his ambulatory Exercise with his Companion, a Turk demanded of him whether they were out of their way, or their wits? If your way (quoth the Turk) lay toward the upper end of the Cloister, why come you downwards? If to the nether end, why go you back again? Shooting is their chief Recreation, which they also follow with much laziness, sitting on Carpets in the shadow, and sending some of their Slaves to fetch their Arrows. They prefer, as they pass the streets, the left hand before the right, as being thereby made Master of his Sword with whom they walk. As they shave their heads, or they wear their beards long, as a sign of freedom; but their Slaves keep their heads and close cut.
- The Women are of small stature, for the most part ruddy, clear, and smooth as the polished Ivory; as neither afflicted with the Weather, and often frequenting the Baths: of a very good Complexion, seldom going abroad, and then masked; lascivious within doors, pleasing in matters of incontinency, and they are accounted most beautiful which have the greatest Eyes, and are of the blackest hue. Every Turk is permitted to have four Wives, and as many Slaves as he is able to keep; yet are they to meddle with none but their own, the offending woman being drowned, and the man dismembered. These Women live in great awe and respect of their Husbands, never sitting with him at the Table, but waiting till he hath done, and then withdrawing into some Room. If their Husbands hath been abroad, at his coming in they all rise from the stools whereon they fate, kiss his hand, and make an obeysance, and stand as long as he is in presence. The Children which they have, they carry not in their arms, as we do, but astride on their shoulders; they live immured from the sight of the World: and permit not their Male Children, nor not their own Sons, to come among them, after they are twelve years old. From their Husbands they cannot be divorced, but on special occasion: but the Husbands may put away their Wives, or give them to their Slaves, when and as often as they list. Far better is it with the Sisters or the Daughters of the Sultan; to whom when her Father or Brother becometh her on one of the Basses, he giveth her a Dagger, saying, I give thee this man to be thy Slave or Bedfellow; if he be not Loving, Obedient, and Dutiful unto thee, I give thee here this Cantharus or Dagger, to cut off his head. When they are married, their Husbands come not to bed unto them, till they are sent for, and then also they creep in at the beds feet. That every any of their Ladies made use of their Daggers, I could never read. Only I find, that Lizide Bassa, the chief man of the Empire next the Sultan himself, and of him very much beloved, having given his Wife, which was Sister to Solyman the Magnificent, a box on the Ear, was upon complaint by her made, thrust from all his honours, banished into Macedonia, and had doublets been slain, if the Emperours love, and his own merits had not pleaded for him. And this is all the Prerogative of the Sultan's Daughter; her Sons being accounted as meer and ordinary Turkey only, and never being preferred above the rank of a common Captain, for fear they should be apt to harbour some aspiring thoughts.

The better sort of the Turkey use the Selavonian Tongue, the vulgar speak the Turkish Language; which being originally the Tartarian, borrowed from the Persian their words of State; from the Arabic, their words of Religion; from the Grecian, their words or terms of War; and from the Italian, their terms of Navigation.

They were formerly Idolatrous Pagans, and were first initiated in Mahometanism, when they got the Sovereignty of the Persian Scepter. The degrees in their Religion are, 1. The Saffi, or Noivies. 2. The Calli, or Readers. 3. The Hagi, or Writers of Books; for Printing they use not. 4. The Napi, or young Doctors. 5. The Caddi, whereof there is at least one in every City to judge of offences. 6. The Mudrisi, who use to oversee the Caddi. 7. The Medlis, or principal Church-Governour under the Misfi. 8. The Cadelefsi, whereof there are only three; one of Greece, the other for Anatolia, the third for Aegypt and Syria; and these fit with the Bassa in the Divano, to determine of temporal suits. 9. The Misfi, whose Sentence in Law and Religion is uncontrollable. He abateeth not himself to sit in the Divano, nor affordeth more Reverence to the Emperour, than he doth to him.

His forces are either for the Sea, or the Land. His Sea-forces are great in regard of his spacious Sea-coasts, vast Woods, and number of Subjects. He never suffered but one memorable defeat, which was that at Lepanto; yet the next year he threw his Navy whole and entire. Gallies are his only Vessels, which being unable to cope with Ships of any biggess, were not only the occasion of that overthrow, but also have heartened the Florentine, with six great Ships of War only, to swagger in the Seas; so that for more safety, the tribute of Aegypt is of late sent to Constantinople by Land. The Captain Bassa, or Admiral, notwithstanding, with a Navy of 60 Sail, makes a yearly progress about the Seas and Sea-Towns, to annoy th. enemy, (supposed Pirates, collect his tributes, and to redress the abuses committed in the maritime Towns, belonging to the Admiralty. Which annual circuit is begun in May, and ended in October.

Their Land-forces are either Horse or Foot. They which serve on Horse-back, are either the Spahi, or Aspi; these latter serving to weary the Enemies, and dull their Swords with their multitudes; of whose Bodies the Janizaries use to make Mounts, whereon to assault the walls of a besieged Town; and are by them so contemned, that a Janizary once sold two of them for a sheeps-head. As for the Spahi, they, till they are inrolled into pay, are of the same Original and Education with the Janizaries; and called by the same name, Azameglans. Their pay is ten Alpers a day. The Turk is able and doth maintain 150000 Horse at little or no cost, which no other Prince can do with 14 Millions of Gold. For whosoever any parcel of Land is conquered, it is divided into divers parts, and committed to the manuring of divers men; whom they call Timariots. These are to pay unto the Emperour certain Rents; and at their own charges, to fend to his Wars for many Horse, excellently appointed for the field; and which is the chief point of their service, to keep in awe the subjects, in all parts of his Empire. For being, as they are, dispersed in all quarters of his Dominions, the people can no sooner stir, but these will be assembled, and fall upon them. These Timariots are in all accounted 719000 fighting men, whereof 25700 have their abode in Europe, and 402000 in Asia and Africa. Were it not for these Timariots, as the Turks saying is, no Grass would grow where the Grand Seignior Horse hath once set his hoof; for if the care of manuring the ground were committed to the Peasants, and not to Military men, the greatest part of this Empire would grow waste and desolate. These Timariots were instituted by Ottoman, the first Turkish King of this Family; and a curse by him laid on them that should annihilate the Institution. The name is derived from the Turkish word Timar, signifying a stipend.

But the Nerves and Sinews of this warlike Body, are the Janizaries; who by Original being Christians are chosen by the Turkish Officers, every five years, out of his European Dominions; and so distributed abroad to learn the Language, Customs, and Religion of the Turk; afterward according to their strength, will, or disposition, placed in divers Chambers. They of the first Chamber are preferred, some to be Chiansers, such as go on Embassies, and execute Judgments; others to Sauvicks, or Governours of Cities; some to be Basses, or Commanders of Horsemen; and others to be Beglerbegs, (i. e. Lord of Lords) to command the rest in general. They of the other Chambers, are the Janizaries, or Prætorian Soldiers of the Guard; to whose Faith and Trust the care of the Emperours Person is committed. The titling of these young Springals is, as we have said, every fifth year; and often times, as occasions serve. By which means he not only directeth his own Subjects, and keepeth them from attempting any stir or innovation in his Empire; but spoileth all the Provinces he most feareth of the Flower, Sinews, and Strength of their People; choice being made of the strongest Youths only, and fitted for War. These, before they are inrolled in pay, are called Azameglans, and behave themselves with much sub-

submissiveness towards their Seniors and Governours: but when once they are honoured with the title of Janizaries, they grow by degrees into an intolerable pride and haughtiness. Till of late they were not permitted to marry, neither now can any of their Sons be accounted any other than a natural Turk, (whom of all the rest they account the basest) the eldest only excepted: to whom this privilege was granted by Amurath the third, when he came to the Crown. They are in number 40000, of which 15000 are always resident in Constantinople. In this City they are diversly employed, being as Contables to see the peace kept; as Clerks of the Market, to feed to the weights and measures; as Officers, to arrest common Offenders; as Wardens, to look to the Gates, to guard the Houses of Embassadors, and to travel with Strangers for their more safety; in which charge they are very faithful. Their pay is but five Alpers a day, and two Gowns yearly; neither are their hopes great, the command of 10, 20, or 100 men being their greatest preferment: yet are they very obsequious to their Captain or Agâ, who is in place inferior to the meaneft Bassa, though in power perhaps above the chiefest. For the cratty Turks joy not Power and Authority; and if they observe the Janizaries to love and respect their Agâ, they quickly deprive him of Life and Office. The Founder of this Order was Amurath the first, Anno 1365, their greatest Establisher, Amurath the second: the name signifieth young Soldiers.

Now concerning these Janizaries, we will farther consider, 1. The sway they bear in designing the Successor. 2. Their Insolency towards the Emperour and his Officers. 3. Their behaviour in the vacancy of the Throne. And 4. Their Punishments.

1. Concerning the first, I never find any particular sway the Janizaries carried, in the designation of their Emperour, till the death of Mahomet the Great: when the Bassa having chosen Corcut the Son of Bajazet, were over-ruled by the Agâ and his Janizaries, who more inclined to Bajazet his Father, and Son to Mahomet. Though I am not ignorant that when this Mahomet succeeded in the Throne, the joyal acclamations made by the Soldiers, was accounted the chiefest sign of his secure and peruated Establishment. But the chief Instance of their power herein, was the inthronizing of Selimus the First, who being but the seventh Son of this Bajazet, was not preferred by them before his Brethren in his Fathers lifetime; but by their aids also he severally mastered them; and in the end paysoned his Father. To omit other Examples, even of late, Anno 1622, they slew the young Emperour Osman, drew his Uncle Mustapha out of Prison, and established him in the Royalty.

As for the next, the first Example in which I find them peccant toward their Prince, was at the beginning of the Reign of the above-mentioned Bajazet; when hearing of the intended death of Achmet Bassa whom they loved, they broke open the Court Gates, and told the Emperour, They would teach him, like a Drunkard, a Lesson, and a Lesson as he was, to use his Great Place and Calling with more Sobriety and Discretion. Not long after, conceiving further displeasure against the said Bajazet, they took their Weapons against him, and refused to without great and vile submission on his part, appeased. Against Selimus the First they also mutined, when being resolved to winter in Armenia, for the better pursuit of his Victories against the Persian, he was by them forced to turn home unto Constantinople. Against Solyman they mutined violently, that they compelled him to displace Ruffan, his chief Bassa or Favourite. Against Amurath the third, for placing over them a new Agâ, they so strongly opposed themselves, that first they set fire on Constantinople, and burnt therein, besides Shops and Ware-houses, twenty five great Inns, seven Temples, and 5000 Houses; and in the end contrained him to give them money, and to yield also into their hands two of his chief Counsellors, by them supposed to be their Adversaries, whom they drew about the streets. Finally, (to omit the tumult 1622. above-named) in the year 1602, they grew so discontented with Mahomet the third, that they not only threatened to destroy the principal Officers of the Court, and the banishment of the Sultan's Mother, but the depoling of himself also.

3. Now for the third, I find it to have been the custom of these Janizaries, between the Deaths of an Old Emperour, and the Beginning of a New, to commit divers Insolencies; as the rifling of the Houses of the Jens and Christians, among whom they dwell; the murdering of the Basses, and principal men about the Court, whom they suspected not to have favoured them; and a number of the like outrageous mischiefs. Of these we find frequent mention, as after the death of Amurath the second, and Mahomet the Great: at which last time the Merchants of Constantinople, being natural Turks, escaped not their ravenous hands; neither could Mahomet-Bassa avoid the fury of their Swords. This spoil they took for to certain a due, that if they were disappointed of it, they would presently raise Commotions both in Court, Field and City; unless some present satisfaction were made them. To this end, Achmet distributed among them two millions and a half of Ducats; Selimus the first, two millions; others made an increase of their daily pay. But Selimus the second, distributing among them 100000 Sulhanis only, was by them prohibited to enter into his Seraglio, till he had enlarged his bounty; and the Great Basses were rapped about the Pate with their Calivers, for perfwading them to quietness. Now to prevent the dangerous and factious Liberty, which in the vacancy of the Empire was usually committed, the Death of the old Emperour was with all secrecy concealed, till the arrival of the New. To omit others, I will instance in the deaths of Mahomet the first, and Solyman only. This Solyman died at the siege of Sieghin in Hungary, which was so cunningly concealed by Mahomet-Bassa the space of twenty days; that before the Janizaries knew of it, his Son Selimus had possessed himself of Constantinople, and came also to their Army then in retreat homewards. For this Mahomet privately strangled the Physicians and Apothecaries, which knew of his death; commanded the Soldiers to go on in their sieges; and divers times shewed them the Emperour sitting in his Horse-litter, as (being troubled with the Gout) he used to do; and when the City was taken, marched home with his dead Body, sitting still in the same manner. So after the death of Mahomet the First, the Basses of the Court called their *Divan*es as formerly they used; gave order for the levying of an Army, as if some War were intended; and the Kings Physicians went up and down with their Potions, as if they had him still in cure. But the Pensioners and Janizaries mifdoubting the matter, with all eagerness desired to fee him; which when the Bassa durst not deny, they appointed the next day for their visit. The next day, the body was appended in Royal large Robes; placed in a Chair at the end of a long Gallery, and a little Boy cunningly fed behind him, to move the Kings hand to his head, as if he should stroke his beard, as his manner was; which signs of life and strength the Soldiers seeing, held themselves contented, and so was his death concealed the space of 41 days.

4. As for the last, These insolent and unassurabable pranks pranks, committed so commonly by these mettlesome slaves, to exceedingly stomach Bajazet the second, that he secretly purposed with himself, for curing so dangerous a distaste, to use a desperate remedy; which was to kill and destroy suddenly all the Janissaries. It is like that Bajazet, being a Scholar, had read how Constantine the Great had called the Prætorian Souldiers, and destroyed their Camp, as men that were the cause of all the fire in his Empire, and whose pride was come to an intolerable height: and having the same cause to destroy his Janissaries, hoped to have done it with as much ease and safety as the other did. But they having notice of the Plot, for the time continued to united and linked together, that he durst not then attempt it; and afterward siding with his Son Selimus, cast him out of his Throne into his grave. Since which time the Emperours never durst punish them openly; but when any of them proveth delinquent, he is sent privately in the night-time to Pers over against Constantinople: where, by the way he is drowned, and a Piece of Ordnance flung off, to signify the performing of the Sultan's command.

Now for the Emperours themselves, we will consider them in matters of pleasure, in matters of Ceremony, and in matters of State: the last being considerable in three main points, which are, the murdering of their Brethren, the removing of their Sons, their Revenue; and therein a touch of their Government. To these we will add, what apparent symptoms may be observed to prognosticate the standing, decaying, and increasing of this puissant Monarchy.

1. For the first, he hath not so few as 500 (sometimes 1000) choice Virgins kept in a Seraglio by themselves, all Slaves born of Christian Parents, and indeed the Rarest Beauties of his Empire. When he is disposed to take his pleasure with any of them, they are all ranked in a Gallery; and the is by the Age of the Women prepared for his Bed, to whom he giveth his Handkercher. She that beareth him the first Son, is honoured with the title of Sultaneffe, (Queen-Mother we may call her) neither can he make any of them free, unless he marry them. When the Sultan dieth, all his Women are carried into another Seraglio, where they are strictly looked to, and liberally provided for, and not seldom times are bellowed by the succeeding Sultan, on his Great Bassae, and such as he chiefly favoureth, which is a principal honour. They are attended on by Women and Eunuchs; they being not gelded only, but deprived of all their Genitals, and supplying the uses of Nature with a Silver Quill; which inhumane custom was brought in among them by Selimus the second, because he had seen a Gilding cover a Mare.

2. These Ceremonies are either performed by them, which is for the most part the building of a Mosche only to help to the Salvation of their Souls; or towards them by others, which are most apparent in the entertainment of Embassadors. For when such come to his presence, they are led between two of his Courtiers, and coming before the Throne (on both sides whereof the Bassae sit with admirable silence, resembling rather Statues than men) they bow themselves to the ground with all humility: laying their hands on their breast, but never uncovering their heads, which (as we noted before) is counted an undecency. When they are to depart, they go all backwards; it being accounted very irreverent to turn their back-parts towards a Prince so glorious. The reason why they are thus brought in between two, is said to be for their greater honour: but is indeed a fear they have, lest the Grand Seigneur, under the pretence of a Salutation, or the delivery of an Embassage, should be flabbed, which wariants they have used, ever since the time that Miles

Cabellus, a Servian, scrambling from among the slain at the battle of Cassius, and being admitted to the speech of Amurath the first, the Author of that overthrow, flabbed him into the belly with his Dagger.

3. Amongst all the Jars and Discontents that be, none have been with more unkindness begun, or more eagerness prosecuted, than those of Brothers; and that not only in private Families, but in the Items of Princes: the multitude of Pretenders, being the Original of most Civil Wars. To prevent these publick Emotions, the Emperours of Habsburg use to immure up all their younger Children in the Hill Amara; the Persians do put out the Eyes of their younger Brothers; and the Turks do murder them. Strange and horrid courses, whereby to avoid the fear of a War in the State, they stir up a War in their own Bowels. The first amongst the Turks that began this barbarous cruelty, was Bajazet the first, on his Brother Jacup; whom immediately after his Fathers death, he strangled with a Bow-string: this being the only instrument of their Fratricide, because thereby none of the blood-royal of Ottoman is spilt on the ground. After him, Mahomet the Great caused his young Brother, then an nurse, to die the death; and was not without much ado perswaded from being the Executioner himself. Amurath the third, caused his five brethren to be at once strangled before his face; and Mahomet, his Son, no fewer than nineteen in one day. By this course they imagine their own Estate to be infinitely secured, as knowing that Mustapha a younger Son, stirred a Rebellion against Amurath; and Zemer, against Bajazet; both the second of those names: that Solyman, Musa, and Isa, severally afflicted Mahomet the first; and Corcut, Selimus, the first of these names also. But yet they will not know, that nothing sooner putteth their younger Brothers into the acts of Hostility, than an inevitable Certainty of a violent and unnatural Death: Whereas were they but free of Life, and a Liberal and Princely Maintenance, it is more than probable, they would rest content, as in other Kingdoms the younger Princes do. And notwithstanding their barbarous Policy, they are not quite free from fear, as knowing the Counterfeits have heretofore much disturbed the quiet of their Predecessors: for thus we find Amurath the second to have been vexed by one, that took upon him the name of Mustapha, elder brother to Mahomet, then late deceased; who was much furthered and aided by the Greek Princes. This hath been one of the vulgar policies of Princes to kindle flames of sedition in their neighbours Countreys. In the infancy of the Roman Empire, we find a counterfeit Agrippa; a counterfeit Nero; and before them, two counterfeit Alexanders in Syria. But never was Realm so often troubled with these Mock-Kings, as England: a counterfeit Richard the Second, being made in the time of Henry the Fourth; a counterfeit Mortimer, in the time of Henry the Sixth; a counterfeit Duke of Tork, a counterfeit Earl of Warwick, under Henry the Seventh; and a counterfeit Edward the Sixth, under Queen Mary. To prevent these walking Spirits, Mahomet the Third laid out the dead bodies of his Father and nineteen Brethren, as a common Spectacle for all that passed by, or would come to behold them. Of late indeed the Grand Seigneur Mustapha miraculously escaped the Bow-string twice; 1. When his Brother Achmet, and 2. When Osman his young Nephew were made Sultans and was the first in this Empire that ever did succeed in the collateral Line, as Ibrahim the late Sultan was the second, on the death of Morat or Amurath the Fourth, his elder Brother.

4. The removing of the young Princes is done for three Reasons: 1. To wean them from the pleasures of the Court. 2. To train them up in Armes, and inure them to hardhardness. 3. And principally to avoid the danger of a Competitor, whereof old Princes are especially jealous. The common places designated to this Princely exile, are Amelia, in Cappadocia; Magnesia, in Lydia; and such like Towns of Natolia. Neither do the old Sultans by such a great distance think themselves secure altogether, but carry a vigilant eye over their Sons actions, and have intelligence of almost every particular thought, the least suspicion being cause sufficient to destroy them. So we find Mustapha, Son to Solyman, the hopetullest branch that ever sprang from the Ottoman tree, to have been shamefully strangled by the command of his Father; upon a rumour only of a Marriage, which he was said to have negotiated with the Persian King's Daughter. When these Princes are once settled in their Government, it is a crime meriting no less punishment than death, to depart thence, and come unto Constantinople, before their Fathers Death; or unless they are by their Fathers sent for. Of this we have a Tragical example in Mahomet, a Prince of great hope, Son to Bajazet the second: who desiring to see the fashion of his Fathers Court, left Magnesia, to which he was by his Father confined, and attended by two or three Gentlemen, came in the habit of a Sea-faring man to Constantinople, and having obtained his desire, he returned to his charge. This strange action being quickly divulged abroad, and by divers variously interpreted, stirred such jealousies in the suspicious head of his old Father, that he took order not long after to have him secretly poisoned.

5. As for the ordinary revenue, it consisteth either in money received, or in money saved. The money saved, is first by the Tartars, of whom he commands continually 60000 to attend him in his Wars, without any pay but the Spoil of the Enemy. And secondly by the Timanians, who nourish and bring into the Field more Horse, than any Prince in Christendom can keep (as we have already said) for 14 millions of Gold. The money received (according to Boterus) is only 15 millions of Saltines, which is nothing in respect of so great an Empire. The chief reason whereof is the tyrannical government of the Turks, which deters men from tillage, merchandize, and other improvements of their estates; as knowing all their gettings to lie at the Grand Seigneur's mercy. His extraordinary revenue is incredible. For besides that no Embassador cometh before him empty-handed; no man is Master of his own wealth, further than it stands with the Emperours liking: so that his great Bassae are but as sponges, to suck up riches till their Coffers swell; and then to be squeezed into his Treasury. These men, as he advanceth without envy, so can he destroy without danger: no man here hoping for partakers, if he should resist, as not being ignorant that one mans fortune is built on the desired overthrow of another. Such riches as they gain, if they hap to die naturally, return to the Emperour's Coffers; who giveth only what he pleaseth to the Children of the deceased: These Bassae have in their particular Provinces, their Divaners, or Law-Courts, where justice hath been administered formerly with great integrity, but now not a little corrupted; yet the comfort is, that such as miscarry in their right, shall without delay know what to trust to: and the Bassae upon complaint to the Emperour, are sure to die for it. Over these Bassae (the chief of whom is the Vizier Bassa, or President of the Council) preside two Beglerbegs, one for Greece, the other for Natolia.

6. Concerning the present state of the Empire, many judge to be rather in the wane, than the increase; which judgment they ground upon good reasons, whereof these are the chief.

1. The body is grown too monstrous for the head, the Sultans since the death of Solyman, never accompanying their Armies in person (except Morat, or Amurath the fourth) but rioting and waiting their bodies and treasures at home.

2. The Janissaries, who have been accounted the principal strength of this Empire, are grown more factious in the Court, than valiant in the Camp: corrupted with ease and liberty, drowned in prohibited wines, enfeebled with the continual converse of women, and fallen from their former austerity of discipline.

3. They have of late given no increase unto their Dominions; and as in the paths of virtue, Non progressi est regredi, so in Empires, by violence gotten, when they cease to be augmented, they begin to be diminished.

4. Rebellions have in these latter times been in this Empire strangely raised, and mightily supported; which commotions the former Sultans were never acquainted with.

5. The greatness of this Empire is such, that it laboureth with nothing more then the weightiness of it self; so that it must in a manner needs decline, Pondere pressa, so overburdened with its own mightiness. For as in a natural body, a surfeit killeth more then fasting; so in the body Politick also, too much extent of Empire doth sooner draw on a ruine, than either too little or a mediocrity.

6. The Sons of the Grand Seigneur, whose bravery of mind is ever suspected by their Fathers, are nursed up (contrary sometimes to their natural inclinations) in all effeminacy, which once rooted in them in their youth, doth always after subject them to the softness and baseness of libidinous pleasures.

7. They have lost much of that fear and terror, which formerly their very name did carry with it: inso much that not the Venetians only have by Sea often mated, and once overthrown them; the Hungarians withstood their greatest forces, for the space of 200 years, by land; the Polonians forced them to dishonourable retreat and composition: but the poor Prince of Transylvania did divers times discomfit them, with the death of many of their Bassae: the Florentines with six ships only, intercepteth their trade; and the poor Emir of Sidon held it out against them many years together.

8. By the avarice and corruption reigning in the Court, all Peace and War, all Counsels and Informations, all Injuries and Favours, being now made saleable. And

9. It is visible and apparent, that their Empire was long since at the height: Et naturaliter quod procedere non potest, recedit, as Vellius hath it, when an Empire can ascend no higher, by the ordinary course of nature, it must have a fall. All these are more than probable Prognosticks of a sinking Monarchy: and yet there is a greater then any of these, that is to say, the present state of Affairs. The young Emperour Mahomet the fourth, now reigning, is but a weak staff to support so vast an Empire; considering not only the infinite casualties, to which children are naturally subject: but the dangers which he may justly fear from a Rebellious Souldiery, and a Factious Court. Who by the murder of one Emperour, and the deposition of two, have made themselves so formidable, but withall so odious in the sight of the Imperial Houle, that there is no way left to save them from a merited vengeance, but to translate the Empire to some other Family; though by the rooting out of this, which whenever it shall happen, either by the natural death or unnatural destruction of the present Sultan, it will draw with it an extermination of the Ottoman Race, which I look on as a matter not to be avoided, except by miracle. Supposing then the Line of Ottoman to fail (as it is most probable that it will) what will become of this vast Empire? Thrice they will be to offer at it, viz. the Crim-Tartars, the Janizaries, and the Bassies. And first the Crim-Tartar may plead a composition, made by his Ancestors, with the Princes of the Ottoman Family; which is, that he supplying them with 60000 men at his own charges, when their occasions so require, should on the failure of the heirs males succeed in this Empire. Besides which, he may hope for no small succours, not only from the rest of the Tartarian Princes, but even from the Great Chan himself, to recover his Estate herein, if withheld from him: thereby to add to the present greatness and renown of the Tartars, the access of such a spacious Empire. 2. The Bassies may conceive no small possibilities, of dividing this great Empire among themselves, partly by the example of Alexander's Captains, who after their Masters death (there being yet some of the Blood Royal remaining) parted amongst themselves not only the new-gotten Provinces, which they had conquered from the Persians; but even the Kingdom of Macedon, his old Inheritance: partly by an example in their own Histories, by which it appeareth, that after the death of Aladine the second, Caraman, Saracban, Chindin, Carasus, and the rest of the more powerful Commanders, divided among them the whole Turkish Kingdom in the Lesser Asia: and partly by the opportunity which they have as Governours in their several Provinces, and having so many bands of Soldiers under their command; which may easily invest them as Proprietaries in those Estates, of which they have already such a fair possession. And so we find the Sultans, or Provincial Governours, or the Caliphs of Babylon, to have done before them. 3. The Janizaries may also build their hopes on as fair foundations, as being the Sword and Buckler of the Ottoman Empire; got, and maintained by their valour chiefly. Who to excite them to the enterprise, have the example of the Pretorian Guards of the Roman Empire (a body far more Politick and better compacted than this is;) who out of their own company created the far greater part of the Roman Emperours, neither the Provinces or Senate daring to oppose them in it. But above all examples, that of the Mamaluks of Egypt doth make fairest for them; who were born of Christian Parents, as these are; appointed for the Guard of the Sultans, as these are; purposely entertained and inured to the Wars, to take from the natural Subjects, the use of Arms, as these are; men of approved Valour, and the chief Bulwark of that Kingdom against the Christians, as these are; and then why may they not be like them in this last attempt, for sitting in their Masters Throne, as these Mamaluks did? Alike heretofore, that they are already (in a manner) possessed of Constantinople, the head Town and heart of the Empire; and their hopes are not vain. For my part I hold them to be the men most likely to carry it, unless the Princes of Christendom laying aside private malice, joyn all in Arms to strip this proud Peacock of his feathers: and (upon so blessed an advantage) to break in pieces with a rod of Iron, this insolent and burdensome Monarchy. A thing rather to be desired than expected. But this by way of supposition, and as in a dream, I awake again.

The Ensign of this Empire (or Arms of it) is the Croissant, or half Moon; but how blazoned I cannot tell you: nor are the Learned yet resolved on the beginnings of that bearing. Some derive it to them, from the Eastern Gentiles, who worshipped the Moon under both Sexes, as we learn in Spartianus. Some make it common to them with the other Mahometans; and they derive it from a pretended miracle of Mahomet; who to show his power, is said to have made the Moon fall into his lap in two pieces, and to have restored her whole again to the heavens. Others are of opinion, that it was taken by the Grand Seigneur at the winning of Constantinople, Ut signum victæ gentis penes quam Orientis imperium esset. And of this mind is Justus Lysius, induced thereto as it seemeth, by the figure of the Croissant, born in some old Byzantine Coins. A pretty plausible conceit; and therefore till we have a better, may pass as current as the money.

And thus much I thought convenient to insert in this place, concerning the original, proceeding, and continuance; the natural dispositions, policies, and forces of the Turks: this being as the only Province which retaineth their name; so both the first they were possessed of, and the last which they have fully conquered, of all their Dominions. Which said, we must here take our leave of the Turkish Empire, and once again of the Roman also, of which the River Tigris and the Caspian Sea were the utmost bounds; not meeting again with either of them, unless by accident (or some unprofitable expeditions) till we come to Egypt, and there we shall hear further of them.

OF MEDIA and PERSIA.

Here I have joyned together also, because the affairs thereof have been so united, in making up the second of the four great Monarchies, and running the same fortunes ever since; that they are hardly to be parted in course of story, though each must have into it self a distinct Chorography. First then, we begin with MEDIA.

MEDIA is bounded on the East, with Parthia, and some part of Hyrcania, Provinces of the Persian Empire; on the West, with Armenia Major, and some part of Assyria; on the North, with the Caspian Sea, and those parts of Armenia Major, which now pass in the account of Georgia; and on the South, with Persia. So called from Mada the Son of Japhet, by whom first planted and possessed, after that general dispersion made at Babel. Known by this name amongst the Ancients, both Greeks and Romans; but at this time Sherwan by the Turks and Persians: the word signifying in the language of this Country, a Milkie-Plain.

The Country of a large extent, and of so different nature, as one would think it not the same. The North parts lying betwixt Mount Taurus and the Hyrcanian Sea, very cold and comfortless: so barren, that for the most part they make their bread of dried Almonds, and their drink of the juice of certain herbs. Fruit-trees they have but few, and those but of Apples; nor any droves of tame Cattel, as in other places, their food being generally on Vegetables, or the flesh of wild beasts took in hunting. But on the South-side of the Taurus, the soil is very rich, and the Country pleasant, plentiful both of Corn and Wine, and all things necessary; full of fat Pastures, some of them so large in compass, that 50000 Horses do graze upon them.

The People anciently great Warriours, as those who ruined the great Empire of the Babylonians; and laid upon themselves and their own virtue, the foundation of the second Monarchy. But being not long after incorporated into the same Empire with the Persians, have not only ever since followed the same fortunes with them, but participate of their nature also: and therefore we shall hear more of their Charaeter, when we come to Persia. Polygamy anciently amongst them, so far from being esteemed a sin or an inconvenience, that it was a punishment for the common Villager to have less than seven Wives; or the Woman, if of noble birth, fewer than five Husbands. In their Wars they use commonly to envenom their Arrows with an oil or liquor, made of a bituminous water called Naphtha, whereof there is great plenty both here, in Persia, and Assyria. The oil called Oleum Medicum, from this people only, because their invention; and by them most mischievously used. The Arrow which was anointed with it, being shot from a Slacker Bow, (for a swift and strong motion took away its vertue) did burn the flesh wherein it fastned, with so great a violence, that nothing but dust could mitigate the fury of it; water increasing rather than diminishing that malignant flame.

The Christian Religion was first here planted by St. Thomas, but never had the happiness to be so universally embraced, as in other places; always opposed and suppressed, either by Paganism, in the time of the old Persian Kings; or by Mahometanism, since the first conquest of this Country by the power of the Saracens. Some Christians yet there be amongst them either of the Armenian, or Nestorian Sects, (as in all other parts of the Persian Empire) the specialties of whose Religion have been elsewhere spoke of. Here live also very many Jews, indulged the free exercise of their Religion: many of which are Descendants of those Tribes, which were transplanted hither by Salmanasser. But the Religion generally embraced and countenanced, is that of Mahomet, according to the Sophian or Persian Sects; the Language of which Nation they do also speak, though they had a Language of their own, different from that of the Parthians, Elamites, or Persians, as appeareth Atlas 2. 9. where they are reckoned as distinct.

Mountains of chief note, 1. Orontes, 2. Coronus, 3. Chaboras, the boundary betwixt Media and Assyria, 4. Jafonium, 5. Lagon; all of them (except Chaboras only) the disjoynted branches of Mount Taurus: which is here more broken and divided, than in any part of his course besides.

Out of these flow their principal Rivers, 1. Amavudus, 2. Sirate, and 3. Carindus; of greatest eminence in this Country, in the time of Ptolemy, but otherwise of no great account or observation. 4. Gates, the Divider of this Province from Armenia Major; but whether any of the former under this new name, I am not able to affirm. Add hereto the great Lake, now called Argis, (by the Persians Vallibian) but by Strabo named Martiana Palus, situate in the Confinnes of Assyria, Media, and Armenia; of the Fish whereof dried by the Sun and wind, and sold into divers other Countries, the people of these parts raise a great commodity.

In former times it was divided into many Præinties, the principal of which 1. Tropatene, 2. Chorambirene, 3. Da-rister, 4. Marciane, 5. Amariace, and 6. Syro-Media: these and the rest reduced to two in the later reckonings, viz. Atropatia, and 2. Media Major.

1. ATROPATIA is that part hereof, which lieth betwixt Mount Taurus and the Caspian Sea. So called from that Atropatus, Governour of these parts in the time of Darius, the last Persian Monarch; who so valiantly held out against the Macedonians. The Tropatene, (as I take it) of the ancient Writers. A barren, cold, and inhospitable Country, as before described; and for that cause allotted for the dwelling of many of the Captive Israelites, brought hither by Salmanasser when he conquered that Kingdom: their numbers being found so great in this Northern Region, that Benjamin the Jew, reckoned no fewer than 50000 of them in one City only, which he calleth by the name of Madai. And that great numbers of them were transplanted hither, appeareth by that passage, 2 Kings 17. 6. where it is said, that they were placed in Halab and Habor by the River of Gozan, and in the Cities of the Medes. Now Halab or Chalab seems most probably to be that Region of Affrica which Ptolemy calleth Chalaten, in the North of that Country, towards Media, Habor, or Chabor, to be that Mount Chabernus, which parteth this Country from Affrica, in which Mountainous tract there was in those times a City of the same name also. Betwixt which City and the Banks of the Caspian Sea, I find in Ptolemy the City of Gauzan, in the 40th and 40 minutes of the Northern Latitude: in which there are apparent footsteps of the name of the River Guzan, upon whose banks it was most likely to be seated.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Hamadani, by Benjamin the Jew called Madai, replenished in his time with families of the captive Israelites. 2 Gauzan, another dwelling of those Tribes, spoken of before. 3 Mandagarsi, of which nothing extant but the name. 4 Gelan, inhabited by Gela of the Ancients, whom the Greek call Cadusi. 5 Bochu, more towards the Caspian Sea, hence called Mare de Bochu. 6 Eres, a place of great strength, but possessed by the Turks, and made the residence of some of their principal Officers: taken by Musapha General of the Turkish Forces, in the time of Amurath the third, and by him fortified as the Gate and entrance of this Country. 7 Samachia, or Shamak, betwixt Eres and Derbent, taken by Osmán Basha, at the same, Anno 1578 and made the residence of a Beglerbeg, Anno 1583. Conceiv'd to be the Cyropolis of Ptolemy, by the Persians called Cyrecchata; bearing the name of Cyrus the great Persian Monarch, by whom built or beautified. Remarkable at the present for a Pillar of Eliostones, inter-woven with the heads of many of the Persian Nobility, most barbarously slain by one of the late Sultans, and this Pillar here erected for a terror to others.

2. MAJOR MEDIA, or MEDIA specially so called, is that part hereof, which lieth on the South of the Mountain Taurus. Commended by the Ancients, for one of the goodliest Countries in all Asia: the fields (saith Ammianus) yielding abundance of Corn and Wine, for their fatness and fertility very rich, and no less pleasant for fresh Springs and clear veins of water: where one may see plenty of green Meadows; and in them a breed of generous Horses, which they call Nisai, mounted by as valiant and generous Riders, who with great jollity use to go unto the Wars, and charge furiously upon the Enemy. The men commended by Polybius (ἄνδρες ἀγαθοὶ πολεμικοί, &c.) as well as the Country.

Cities of note in it, 1 Ecbatana, of as great antiquity as Babylon; for we find that Semiramis the wife of Ninus, in a War made against the Medes, who had then rebelled, taking an affection to the place, caused water-courses to be made to it from the further side of the Mountain Orontes, digging a passage through the hills, with great charge and labour. Destroyed by the injury of time, it was re-edified by Deiaces the sixth, King of the Medes: and afterwards much beautified and enlarged by Selenius Nicanor, successor unto Alexander in his Asian Conquests. For beauty and magnificence little inferior to Babylon, or Ninive, before described. In compass 180 or 200 Furlongs, which make about 24 Italian miles. The walls thereof affirmed in the Book of Judith. to be 70 Cubits high, 50 Cubits broad, and the Towers upon the Gates 100 Cubits higher; all built of hewn and polished stone, each stone being six Cubits in length, and three in breadth. But this is to be understood only of the innermost wall, there being seven in all about it; each of them higher than the other, and each distinguished by the colour of their several Pinnacles, which gave unto the eye a most gallant Prospect. From which variety of colours, it is thought to have the name of Aghaba, or Aghabana. In former times, the ordinary residence of the Monarchs of the Medes and Persians, in the heats of the Summer; as Susa (the chief City of Susana) in the cold of Winter. The Royal Palace being about a mile in compass, was built with all the cost and cunning that a stately Mansion did require: some of the beams thereof of Silver, and the rest of Cedar; but those of Cedar strengthened with Plates of Gold. Said by Joseph to be built by the Prophet Daniel. Which must be understood no otherwise in the truth of Story, than that it overlaw the Workmen, or contrived the Model; appointing to that office by Darius Medus, to whom the building of the same is ascribed by others. Neglected by the Kings of the Parthian Race, it became a ruin. 2 Tauri, situate in or near the place of Ecbatana, out of which rubbish it was built. Distant 150 miles from the Caspian Sea, under the shadow of Orontes, now called Korma; but opening Southwards, towards a large and spacious Campaign, in compass about six miles, and beautified on the South-west within a large and pleasant Garden, the work of Sultana Tamar, who resided here often: the buildings for the most part of Brick, with flat Roofs (as common in all the East) well peopled, as containing 200000 persons of all sorts and Sexes. Of great trading, till subdued by the Turks, by whom it was thence taken within very few years, viz. by Selimus the first, Anno 1514. by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1530. and by Osmán Basha, General of Amurath the third, Anno 1585. But this last finding it too chargeable always to be guarded, and not otherwise tenable but by force, pulled down the Walls, and built a large and capacious Citadel: both Town and Citadel recovered by Emir-Humei-Nirza, Prince of Persia, and Father of Sultana Sophy, Anno 1614. after it had been for an hundred years a continual prey unto the Turks. 3 Arasata, so named by Ptolemy, and by the name conjectured to be built by some of the Parthian Race. Ruined long since, but more beautifully revived than ever in the present 4 Casbin, raised from the ruins of that Town. Situate in a fair and open place on the banks of a little River, which serveth it for household uses, but not for traffick. Exceedingly enriched by the removal of the Court from Tauris hither, in the time of Tamur; partly invited therunto by the richness of the soil, and the commodiousness of the place; but chiefly that he might without danger attend the Turks, who began to encroach on his Dominions. In compass about seven miles, beautified with a large Market-place, many stately Mosques, and the Sultans Palace; but neither of joyning to the first, convenient enough, but neither of great state nor beauty. 5 Rages, or Raga, mentioned in the Book of Tobit, so called from Reu (i. Ragu the son of Phaleg, the founder of it: situate near the Plains of before; and therefore in that Book called the Plains of Rages. Repaired afterwards by the Greeks, it was named Enropus, and so stands in Ptolemy. 6 Najifan, supposed by some to be the Arasata, more probably named by the of the Ancient Writers: a place much aimed at by the Turks in their Persian Wars. 7 Ardevon, or on near the banks of the great Lake Argis, spoken of before: the birth-place and chief Seat of Guine, and Aider, the first Authors of the Sophian Sect; and the burial place of Sultan Hysmael, the first Persian Sultan of that Line. 8 Sultana tania, about six days journey from Tauris, environed with high Mountains: the tops of which continually covered with Snow, may be seen far off: founded by Alyagan, the eighth King of the Sixth or Tartarian Dynasty, and by him made the Royal Seat of the Persian Sultans, whence it had the name. But ruined by the Turks, it retaineth nothing now of its former splendour, but the Mosques, or Temples (one of them, the fairest in the East) which the Turks spared. 9 Troyan, in the Territory of Sultania, situate in a large Plain, but not far from the Mountains; beautified with a fair Market-place, many pleasant Gardens of private men; and one belonging to the King, environed with a Wall of greater circuit than the City. 10 Turcoman, in the middle way betwixt Tauris and Casbin, 11 Damagan, at the foot of Taurus, a Town of 200 houses, not here considerable but for the signification of the name; which is said to signify a Second Plantation: and being situate at the foot of so high a Mountain, occasioned some of the Jews to think that the Ark rested not far off, as perhaps it did. 12 Maran, in the Extremity of the Country, but of lesser note.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Posterity of Madai, as before was said; Ragu the son of Phaleg taking up those parts, which lay next Affrica. Divided in long tract of time into several Tribes, as the Cadusi, Amariachi, Margisi, Sagarii, Delryes, Tapyri, and some others. Governed by Kings immediately from the first Plantation; for we find that Pharus King hereof, was overthrown and slain by Ninus the Grand-son of Nimrod. After this made subject to the Affrians, their Kings were only Tindar, at the best but Homagers, perhaps no better than Provincial Governors, under that great Monarchy. Of much greater amongst them was that Arsaces, who with an Army of 800000 men (if the number be not mistaken) encountered the Cadusi, by whom discomfited and slain. But the Cadusi so broken, that they were fain to put themselves under the power of the Persians, and so continued till the time of Arbaces, the last of these Provincials, and the first Monarch of the Medes. He living in the time of Sardanapalus, had the chance to fee his Lord and Master in a woman's dress, spinning among his Concubines, and otherwise behaving himself in a brutish manner; which so moved him, that he resolved to be no longer subject to so vile a Monarch. Communicating his thoughts unto Beluchur, Governor of Babylon, and well seen in Affrology, he was encouraged to proceed; and sped so well, that having made themselves Masters of Ninive, the Imperial City, (though Sardanapalus for a time put them shrewdly to it) they divided betwixt them his Elkates. To Beleuchus fell Affrica, and Babylonia, with the Provinces on the West of Tigris: To Arbaces, Media, and the rest, which now make up the Kingdom of Persia. But being a mild Prince, and desirous by fair and gentle means to assure his Empire, he confirmed the Persian Satrapes in their former Governments; reserving nothing to himself but a titular Sovereignty. Of whom and his Successors more, when we have taken in the rest of the Provinces.

PERSIA.

PER. A. bounded on the East, with India; on the North, with Media, Affrica, and Chaldea; on the South, with Tartary; on the South, with the main Ocean. So called from Persis the predominant Province of it, that which gave Law to all the rest: as that is said to do from Persum, the son of Jupiter and Danae; affirmed by the Grecians to have conquered these Eastern Countries, and to have left his name to this. Of which thus

Idore, Persis populi à Persico Rege sunt vocati, qui à Græcis in Afiam transfrenti ibi barbaras gentes gravi distinnæque bello perdidimus; & victor nomen subactis Gentis imposuit. In the Scripture it is constantly called Elam, till the time of Daniel the Prophet, from Elam, the son of Sem, who was planted there. But after that the Medes and Persians had subdued Babylon, and transferred the supreme Monarchy to themselves, we find this people called by the name of Paras, (whence the name of Persian seems to come) the word Paras (or Pharus) signifying as much as Horseman. Given therefore to this Nation, as it is supposed, from an Edict of Cyrus, who not only taught them the art of Horsemanship, but set forth a Law, that it should be a reproach to any man to go on foot, Sine mulum fove parum itigerit esset conficiendum, whether the journey that he had to go were long or little. Called sometimes also Achemenides, from Achemenes the son of Persis, one of the first known Kings hereof; and by that name, (Non tot Achemenies armatur Sufa Sagittis) they occur in the second of Prophetias. Where by Achemenes Sagitte, he means Persian Arrows.

It is of very great extent, stretched out in length from the 82 degree of Longitude, to the 120, being 38 degrees in all; and in breadth from the 23 degree of Northern Latitude, to the 43, being 20 more. According unto which position, with reference to the heavenly bodies, we shall find it seated under the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth Climates: the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, being thirteen hours almost three quarters; and fifteen hours one quarter in the parts most Northwards.

The Country not alike in all places, as it is impossible it should in so great a compass. But generally it is of a pure and wholesome air, the high hills shading it on the one side from the heat of the Climate under which it lieth; and the warmth of the Sun, wherewith encompassed, cherishing a great part thereof. And so it is affirmed to be by Quintus Curtius, Regio non alia in tota Asia salubrior habetur; temperatum celum; hinc perpetuum jugunt opacum; & umbræ, quod æquæ levat; illic mare adjaculum, quod modico tepore terras fovet. Then for the Earth, it is, by reason of the great heat of the Sun, very dry and sandy, in many places destitute of water; in the South parts thereof few Rivers, and not many Lakes; by consequence neither well peopled, nor manured, for the greatnels of it: men loving to inhabit (and I cannot blame them) where they may have the use of water. Which notwithstanding, it is furnished with all necessities both for life and pleasure: in part affording that which the other wanteth, as shall be shewed in the description of the several Provinces.

The people anciently were trained up to the Wars, but chiefly unto Arborey, from their very childhood. Indulged the liberty of having as many Wives as they pleased; they never saw the children begotten of them, until five years old. At that age sent unto their Fathers, they were taught presently to handle the Bow and Arrow. Upon this ground we find the Bow of Elam mentioned by the Prophet Jeremy, Chap. 4. and the Quiver of Elam by the Prophet Isaiah, Chap. 22. 6. as the Arms peculiar to that Nation, or most used amongst them. They were good horsemen also, and well skilled in their Dart and Slings, till wealth and ease, and the pride of so great an Empire, made them wholly feminine: depriving them of those abilities both of mind and body, wherein they did excel most Nations in their harder times. In all their fortunes very obsequious, if not servile, to their Kings and Princes; in whose presence it was a crime to spit: but to deny obedience unto his Commands an offence so heinous, as was not to be punished with less than the their Ruines. The Towns of most note now remaining, being 7 Jasone, inhabited for the most part by Jews, of which there are no fewer than a thousand Families; supposed to be the descendants of those whom Salmanassar transplanted out of the Kingdom of Israel. 8 Saum. 9 Calé, of which little memorable.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Chusites of the house of Havilah, the Son of Chus; an evident footstep of whose name we have in the Chavilae, whom Pliny placeth in this Tract, by other Writers called the Chaukai & Chaulasii, as before was noted, with whom were joynd in the first plantings of this Country, the Cassii and the Susiani, descended from Sala the Son of Arphaxad; and the Elymei, the posterity of Elam the Son of Sam. Betwixt the two last Nations long and frequent Wars, till the Kings of Babylon or Assyria composed the differences, by making both subject to their Empire. After this, nothing memorable in the story of it, till the transplanting of the ten Tribes into the Regions of Assyria, and the Cities of Media. At that time, as many of the Israelites were removed thither; so many of this Nation were sent out (with others) to possess themselves of the void places of those Tribes. Called Cuthians by the Jews, because the most considerable number of them came from this Province, called in the Scriptures Cuth, by Josephus Canibae, and by him reckoned for a Region of Persia, as indeed it was, the time when he lived considered; different only in the Dialect or form of speech: that Country which the Hebrews called Cub, being named Cuth by the Chaldeans; by the Persians, Chuzestan: that name continuing to this day.

2. PERSIS.

PERSIS hath on the East, Carmania; on the West, Susiana; on the North, Mediana; and on the South, some part of the Persian Bay, or Sinus Persicus, which took name from hence. The reason of the name we have had before; this being the predominant Province which in fine gave both Name and Law to the rest of this Empire. It had anciently been called Cephene, but now most commonly by the name of Fari, or Pharissian; more near to Pharus, the old name of it, both in the Arabic and Hebrew.

Such parts hereof as lie towards the North are cold and hilly, not apt to bear either Fruit or Corn, in any plenty. Some Emeralds they find there, but not very clear. Those parts which lie towards the Persian Gulf, of as bad a nature, though of different quality, sandy, and hot, and beareth little fruit but Dates, and few trees but Palm. But betwixt both these lyeth a rich and pleasant Country, abounding with Corn, Fruit, and Cattel; great store of Roses, of Rose-water consequently; wherewith, and with those skins which we call commonly by the name of Cordanus from another occasion, they use to furnish all the adjoining Provinces. And to make up the Character of a happy Country, to which nothing wanteth, it is well filled with Lakes and Rivers; the chief whereof are, 1 Bagradas, which divideth this Province from Carmania. 2 Rhommanes, by some called Araxes, now Binduris, on whose banks stood the renowned Persepolis. 3 Orontes, dividing Persis from Susiana, where it falls into the Bay. 4 Brifiana, ending its course in the same Sea also.

Mountains of note I find not any, but those which part this Region from Susiana. Not known by any special name (for ought I can find); but of sufficient note for the difficult passages out of one Country into the other, called Pyle Persidis, defended by Ariobarzanes, a Noble Persian, against Alexander the Great, who was here very handsomly beaten, and forced to save himself by a close retreat. And though Alexander was shewed a by-path afterwards, whereby he fell on Ariobarzanes as he was aware: yet he was taught by this hard Lesson, that if those who kept the straits of Cilicia, and the banks of Tigris and Euphrates, had made like resistance, he had not bought the Persian Monarchy in so cheap a Market.

It was divided anciently into 1 Paraticene, bordering on Media. 2 Mardiene, joyning on the Gulf or Bay of Persia. 3 Misidia, lying betwixt both. Each of which, with the several Nations intermingling here as in other places, had their several Cities. The chief whereof 1 Ausanza, seated on the Bay betwixt the mouths of Bagradas, and Brifiana. 2 Jonacopolis, on the same Bay also, near the influx of Rhommanes, or Araxes. 3 Arima, more within the Land, now called Lanflia. 4 Marrusra, 5 Obroatis, or Oreobatis, as some Copies have it. 6 Safaracha, in the Greek Text of Ptolemy called Palegrada, and Palegrada by Qu. Curtius. Memorable for the Sepulchre of Cyrus the first Persian Monarch. Which violated by a Souldier of Alexander, in hope of finding some rich booty, he met with nothing but this modest Inscription, Cyrus ego sum qui Persicum regnum cussini: quinque ades mortalium, ne mihi tantillum idcirco indeas, qua corpus meum obtegunt. The Sacrilegious Souldier, though a Macedonian, put to death by Alexander. 7 Persepolis, the chief City of this Province, and of all the East, called therefore Regia Orientis by Qu. Curtius; situate near the banks of the River Araxes, and built for the most part of Cypres wood, the walls of the houses being made of Marble, digged out of an adjoining Mountain. Affirmed by Diadotus Siculus, who at large describes it, to be the richest and goodliest City in all the world. And well we may believe him for the richness of it, Alexander finding here 120000 Talents in ready money for his own share, after the Souldiers had made what spoil they listed of Coin, Plate, Bullion, Images of Gold and Silver, and Jewels of unpeakable value. But the chief beauty of it was the Royal Palace, built on an Hill, environed with a treble Wall, the first of 16 Cubits height, the second of 30, and third of 60, all of them of black polished Marble, with stately Battlements, and in the Circuit of the whole Palace an hundred Towers; which gave to the beholders far and near a most goodly Prospect. Nor was the inside of less beauty, than the outside of Majesty: the Roof thereof shining with Ivory, Silver, Gold, and Amber; and the Kings Throne being wholly composed of Gold, and the richest Pearls. But rich and stately though it were, and one of the greatest Ornaments of the Eastern world, it was by Alexander in a drunken fit consumed with fire, at the instigation of Lais that infamous strumpet; as in revenge for so many Cities of the Greeks, which the Persians formerly had burnt in the Grecians Wars. And though Alexander in his sober sense did repent him of it, and gave order that it should be re-edified; yet did it never rise to its former height, the Conquerour dying shortly after, and that purpose with him. So ruined in the Age of Qu. Curtius, (who lived in the time of Claudius Caesar) that he professedly, vestigium quod non inveniri nisi Araxes amnis ostenderet, that no footstep of it had been found, if not then and pointed out by the River Araxes, on whose banks it stood. But by the fall thereof rose 8 Sirrus, now the chief City of this Province, situate in a large Plain hemmed about with Mountains, under one of which it is pleasantly seated; in compass about nine miles, well built and beautified with fair Gardens and magnificent Mosques: two of which larger than the rest, are made more eminent by the addition of two Spires or steeples

Steeple covered with a painting of Gold and Azure; the Fabrics for the most part of Mosaic work, as light also by night as day, by reason of a thousand Lamps burning nightly in them. A City (as is said by a modern Traveller) which for good Wine, pretty Women, pleasant Fruits, and a gallant People, may hold comparison with the best in Persia. 9 Moynon, on the North-east of Sirrus, delightfully situate amongst the Woods and fruitful Pastures, and blessed not only with good Wine, but wholesome Waters; of which last, few parts of Persia have much cause to brag. 10 Bannaras, on the South-west of Sirrus towards Carmania, chiefly remarkable for the ruins of an ancient Caille, situate on the top of a lofty Mountain. 11 Goyaam, a Town of a thousand houses. 12 Berry, of no great bigness, but of most esteem, by reason of a fair Mosque, a School for the Arabic Tongue, and the Sepulchre of one of their false Prophets; of which the Persians, besides Mahomet, and Mortis-Ali, do acknowledge many.

The first Inhabitants here were of the posterity of Elam the Son Sem, and such who under his conduct were settled here; called from hence Elamites, in the usual file of holy Scriptures by the Greeks and Latines, Elymei: who spreading themselves into Susiana, and by degrees also into other Provinces, became so considerable, that the name of Elamite and Elam were of great renown; having a language to themselves distinct from that of the Medes and Parthians, as is apparent Alis 2. and comprehending under that appellation, the adjoining Regions, as appears plainly in the eighth of the Prophet Daniel, where Safis is said to be in the Province of Elam. How the name was changed into that of Persia, hath been shewn before. Such as continued in this Province, divided into the Tribes of the Mesabate, Rapsi, Hippophagi, Saxai, Megores, and Stabae, were at first under the command of their own Princes only: amongst which Cherdanamer is of greatest fame, who having the conduct of himself Anraphel the Leader of some Assyrian Troops; and by the name of the Kings of Elam and Assyria invaded Palestine, subdued the City of Sodom, took Lot prisoner, and in the end were overthrown by the Forces of Abraham. Of no Note after this Expedition, till the time of Persis the Father of Achemenes, who being Provincial Governour of these Countries under Sardanapalus, joynd with Arbaces and Belochus in the War against him: and by the victory, got for himself the dominion over those Estates, which he had formerly ruled for the Assyrians; with reference to the Kings of Media as the Supreme Lords. Whose Successors, till the time of Cyrus, took in order thus:

THE KINGS OF PERSIS.

- 1 Perses, from whom perhaps the name of Persis may be more properly derived, than either from Persus the Son of Danae; or the Son of Persus by Andromeda.
- 2 Achemenes, from whom the Persians had the name of Achemenides, and the succeeding Kings were called Achemenides.
- 3 Cambyses, in some places of Herodotus called also Darius.
- 4 Cyrus, from whose second son named Tissaphernes, descended that Darius, the son of Hystaspes, one of the seven Persian Princes, who got the Kingdom on the expiration of the present Line, and the extirpation of the Magi; of which more hereafter.
- 5 Cambyses II. the Son of Cyrus.

6 Cyrus II. surnamed the Great, son of Cambyses, and of Mandane the daughter of Astyages King of Media: who joyning with Cyaxares, or Darius Medus, overthrew the Babylonian Empire; and translated thereby the Supreme power to the Medes and Persians. Of which more hereafter.

3. CARMANIA.

CARMANIA is bounded on the East, with Geodusia, and some part of Aras on the West, with part of Persis, and the Gulf of Persia, from hence called also by the name of Sinus Carmanicus; on the North, with Parthia; and on the South, with the main Indian Ocean. So called from the Carmani, a chief people of it; but the reason of that name I find not: It is now generally called Chyrcman; those parts of it which lie next to Parthia, which Ptolemy calleth Carmania Diserta, being now named Mingia, and by some Dulcinia.

The Country for the most part barren, and but ill inhabited. That part which Ptolemy calleth Carmania Deserta, being truly such; a Wilderness or very Desert, having in it neither Town nor Village, but some few scattered houses, and those but ill provided of food and necessaries, full of unprofitable Sands, destitute of Water, and of a very hot and unhealthy Air. And though the other part hereof which lieth towards the Ocean, hath a Sea-coast of above 200 Leagues in length, and many Rivers emptying themselves into it, yet are they neither richer by it, the shores being full of Rocks, and the Rivers small; so that they neither have good Port, nor safe coming to it. The best Commodities hereof (besides their Mansaffutiers) are Dates, Myrrhe, Asentie, some few Mines of Silver, more of Brass and Iron, and good store of Alabaster. The Inhabitants hereof were anciently called Iechthyophagi, because they lived wholly upon Fish, the Country yielding little else for the life of man, Carmani vis vultu ac fruge, sine pecore ac sedibus, piscium cuncta se velant, carne vescuntur, praeter capra sola corpore hirsuta. The Carmani (saith Pomponius Mela) have neither fruits, nor raiment, nor house, nor cattel; but cloath themselves with the skins, and feed themselves with the flesh of Fishes; hairy, not only on their heads, but over all their bodies also. Where by the way, Ammianus Marcellinus must be out in his informations, who telleth us of these very Carmani, that their Country, though far less than that of Arabia Felix, and far more obscure, was as well replenished with Rivers; and for fertility of foil not inferior to it. But we must understand the one of the best parts of Carmania; the other of Deserta only.

Amongst the Rivers which he reckoneth of greater name than the rest, he mentioneth, 1 Saganis, 2 Sagareus, and 3 Hydracutus. Of which Saganis only is named by Ptolemy, the other Rivers, or the same under divers names, being 1 Dara, 2 Andanitis, 3 Gabrarpis, 4 Achindanis, 5 Salurus, (the Sagareus, as I take it, of Ammianus) 6 Candriaces, 7 Zorombas, and 8 Samidace, most of them falling into the Gulf of Persia, few Navigable, or of any use in the way of Trading.

Mountains of most note, 1 that called Seniramis, from some exploit of that great Lady, 2 Strongilis, so named from the roundness of its top, and 3 a continued ridge of Hills, dividing this Country from Geodusia.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Cantbaris, 2 Agri, 3 Tis, honoured by Ptolemy with the names of Cities; 4 Cyrus, and 5 Gochata, two Port-Towns; 6 Alexandria, bearing the name of that great Conquerour, who here or hereabouts kept his Bacchanalia, whereof more anon.

anon. 7 Porto Spana, by Ammianus called Orospana, and by him reckoned amongst the fairest and richest of all the Country. 8 Armuzza, (or Armozium, as Pliny calleth it,) on the shore of the Gulf, giving name to a Promontory near adjoining, and to the noble Isle of Ormus, of which more anon. 9 Gundrone, not long since a poor Village; but since the fall of Ormus (from which not above nine miles distant) grown a populous Town, consisting at the least of a thousand houses. 10 Jaques, at the opening of the Persian Gulf, into which it looketh, whence the Promontory of it, called Carpella, is of late named Capo di Jaques. 11 Carmania, the Metropolis or mother City of the Province, in former times of good citeem; and now of passing good repute both for Cloth of Gold, and the making of the best Semytars. A weapon (whereforever made) of such value amongst the Mahometans, and so esteemed of by the Turks, that at the overthrow of the Navy at the battle of Cosus, Anno 1574. most of them were taken Prisoners threw their Semytars into the Sea, for fear the Christians should be masters of such excellent weapons. It is now called Clyman, by the name of the Province, as in former times; with very little difference from the ancient name. 12 Lar, more within the Land towards Persia, seated in a barren and inhospitable Country, full of huge heaps of Sand, both loose and dangerous, moved and removed as the wind fitteth, into Plains and Mountains: without Grass, Water, Herbs, or any other necessary for the use of Travelers; the City being served with rain-water only, entertained with great joy when it falleth, and kept in cisterns. The City notwithstanding large, and of good capacity, containing not long since to the number of 5000 houses: of which the greatest part, in the year 1590, were thrown down by an Earthquake: now most remarkable for a fair Market-place of about 180 paces square; a goodly Mosque, adorned with Mosack work, and a strong Castle seated on the top of an hill, furnished with great plenty of Ordnance brought hither from Ormuz. This once a Kingdom of it self, or the head City of a Kingdom, acknowledging no subjection to the Persian Sappies: till conquered to that Crown by Emangoli Chawn Duke of Shiras, who sent hence as much treasure as was fild to load 700 Camels; and put to death the poor King with his whole Posterity, Anno 1604, or thereabouts. 13 Teco, or Dea-chom, a Town of the jurisdiction of Lar, not far from which is a huge Wall cut out of the solid Rock by incredible labour, which served formerly both for the boundary and defence of that fandy Kingdom against the Persians.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof, were the Posterity of Sabia, the Son of Chus, who wanting room on the Coast of Arabia Felix, where they were first planted, passed over into Sophia (from them so named) an Island of the Persian Gulf, and afterwards into the main Land of Carmania, where they built and gave name unto the City of Sabi, which we find in Ptolemy. Divided in some tract of time into the several Nations of the Sacene, Ara, Charade, Chelomphagi, Cabadine, and Yafagade.

Neither the People nor the Country memorable in the way of story; but by Accident only: it being here that Alexander being returned out of India, kept his Bacchanalia, an imitation of Bacchus, who first conquered that Nation. Night and day he was continually feasting with his friends, on a Scaffold drawn with eight horses; his Companions following in their Chariots: some adorned with Purple and Silk; others with Flowers and green Boughs; themselves wearing Garlands on their heads, and carrying their carousing Cups in their hands. In this Army there was neither Helmet, Sword, Arrow, or Buckler seen: all their Armour was Cups, Barrels, and Flacons; their Skirmishing, Eating, Drinking, Laughing, and Singing. Attended they were by Minstrels, playing on their Flutes; by Women dancing, Boys shouting, all playing the drunken fools most naturally. Thus march they through the Country of Carmania, in a great diffoluteness as if BACCHUS himself had indeed been there, and led the Mummers; and for seven whole days this foolishness continued. So that Carius well observeth, Si quid visitis saltem aduersus consuetudinem animi suistis, mille heretice viri, modo & sobrii, septem diurnis crapula graves in suo triumpho capere poterunt a thousand Persians, sober and well provided, had their hearts been answerable to go good an opportunity, might have destroyed this drunken Army, and redeemed at once the honour of their Country, and their own liberty.

4. ORMUZ.

ORMUZ, not so much memorable for the greatness, as the wealth, and the convenience of the situation of it, is an Island situate in the entrance of the Persian Gulf: commanding not long since, over some part of the Continent of Carmania, and some few Towns of Arabia Felix, and most of the Islands of the Bay. And therefore before we come to speak of the Isle it self, we must take a brief survey of the Sea or Bay called Sinus Persicus, according to our method in other places.

SINUS PERSICUS, the Gulf or Bay of Persia, so famous, to full of Islands, and so much frequented, (I use the words of Ammianus Marcellinus) beginneth at Hormozonta, (the same which Ptolemy calls Armuz) a Cape or Promontory of Carmania: from which unto a Cape or Foreland of Arabia Felix, which the Inhabitants call Maces, the passage is so strait and narrow, that one may very easily see to the opposite shore. The Strait once passed, the Bay beginneth to open and enlarge it self, as far as the City of Teredon (now called Balfora) where Euphrates after many downfalls is lost in the Sea. The whole Gulf measured by the shores, of Oriental form, in compass 20000 Furlongs, (or 2500 Italian miles) in all the Coasts and sides whereof the Villages and Towns stand exceeding thick, affording frequent passage to and fro for shipping. So far, and to this purpose he, for their description of his, so exact and punctual, our late Navigations have not added much but the change of names: the whole Bay being now called Mor Elkharis, and the entrances thereunto the Straits of Balfora: these last so called because they opened the way to the Town of Balfora, the most noted Empory of those parts in the times foregoing.

Chief Isles hereof, besides those on the Arabian shore, of which we have already spoken, are 1 Taxiana, on the Coast of Susiana. 2 Tahiana, 3 Saphiba, and 4 Alexandria, or the Isle of Alexander, on the shores of Tefis. Of which that which is called Saphiba, seems to take name from Sabia the Son of Chus, planted upon the opposite shore of Arabia Felix; and therein giving name to the City of Saphis, which we find in Ptolemy: And finally joining to Carmania, there are the Islands called, 5 Sedana, the chief Town whereof was anciently named Milun; and 6 Vorothia, situate at the very mouth of the Straits, now called ORMUZ, by the name of the Town and Promontory of Armuzza, in Carmania, near adjoining to it, and unto which it did in former times belong.

This Island situate as is said at the mouth of the Gulf or Bay of Persia, is in compass about 20 miles, stony, and full of Rocks, in a manner barren of all necessities except except salt, wherewith their very rocks are covered, and of salt-fishes many houses built. So destitute of all things fitting for the life of man, that the Inhabitants had all their victuals, even the very water which they drank, from some of the adjoining Countries. The air is hot in time of Summer, that the people rest themselves in Caves covered over with wood, where they stand or sit in water up to the chin; and have loop-holes in the tops of their houses to let in the wind. Which notwithstanding, in regard of the situation, it was of late one of the richest Empires in all the world; the wealth of Persia and England being brought hither, and conveyed hence up by water to the River Euphrates, and so by Boats, or on Camels backs to Aleppo, Alexandria, Tripolis; from whence dispersed into all the Countries on the Mediterranean, and to some beyond.

The people hereof in their persons, habit, and Religion, participate somewhat of the Arabians, but most of the Teffans. Mahometans for the most part, of the Sophian Sect: the rest, but few in number, of the Christians: to which converted by the preaching of Father Gasper, a Portuguese Jesuit, since the settling of that Nation there.

The chief and only City was of the same name with the Island, founded some seven hundred years ago by one Mahmet Drangis, descended from the Kings of Saba in Arabia Felix: who with many Families of the Sabeans, passed over the Straits into Carmania, and the Isles adjoining, and liking the situation of this Island, built this City in it; which he called Ormus, or Armozium, according to the name of the Town and Promontory, upon which it lieth. The City seated at one end of the Isle, about two miles in compass, well built, and adorned with a fair Market-place, some Churches, and a well fortified Castle furnished with all necessities to maintain a Siege. By reason of its wealth and resort of Merchants, grown to such esteem, that it gave occasion to this Distich;

That is to say,

Were all the World a Ring, this Isle alone
Might of that Ring be thought to be the Stone.

It was first under its own King, whose Dominion extended also into some part of the Continent on either side, and over all the rest of the Islands within the Gulf. His Revenue of no great yearly value till the coming of the Portugals hither, by whom it was discovered under the conduct of Albuquerque, Anno 1506. Who having fortified some part of it for their own defence, and made it the Staple of their Trade for the Indian Merchandise, so enriched the same, that the Revenues of those Kings (though Vassals and Tributaries to the Portugals) amounted to 140000 Sceriffs yearly. In this flourishing state it stood till the year 1622, when Abu the Sultan of Persia having received some affront at the hands of the Portugals; or desirous to remove the trade of Ormus, to some Port of his own, gave order to Emangoli Chawn, the Duke of Shiras, to lay siege unto it, with an Army of 15000 men, who seeing no hopes of mastering it by his hand-forces only, furnished himself with the Ships and Cannon of some English Merchants, to whom he promised many things which he never performed. For being once Master of the City, he destroyed it utterly, removing the Ordnance to Lar, the wealth thereof to his own Treasury of Shiras, the materials of the houses to Gombroon, spoken of before: the Portuguese and Christians Natives passing over unto Muskabar, in Arabia Felix. Since which time though the English Captains that ventured in it, were disappointed of the spoil which they did expect; yet so much honour hath been given by the King of Persia to the English Nation, that their Agent who resideth at Gombroon, takes Custom of all strangers which do traffick thither.

5. GEDROSIA.

GEDROSIA is bounded on the West, with Carmania; on the East, with Cambisa or Guzaran, a Province of India; on the South, with the main Indian Ocean; on the North, with Drangiana, and Arachosia. The reason of the name I find not. Now by Mercator, called Gis; by Cassiodorus, Circan.

The Country desolate and barren; like the worst part of Carmania, much destitute of fresh water, and covered over with loose sands, dangerous to the native and stranger both. Some rain they have, but not sufficient to allay the heat and drought which they suffer under; and yet by reason of that heat it affordeth in some places Nard and Myrrhe, with some other Spices. Some Brooks here are, or rather Torrents, which falling from the hills do somewhat qualifie the indispotion of the soil, and make it habitable: The chief of which was called Arabis anciently; the chief Mountain, Batius.

Towns of most name in it, 1 Rbagiana, honoured by Ptolemy with the name of a City; and, 2 a Port or Harbour called Mulierum Portus, or the Haven of Women. 3 Arbis, upon the banks of the River Arbis, presented to us also by the name of a City. 4 Musfana, the chief of the Musfane, a chief Tribe of this Country. 5 Parfis, or rather Eafis, as the Greek Text hath it, the Metropolis of the whole Province in the time of Ptolemy. 6 Gesh, the chief City at the present; but for nothing memorable.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Masfane, bordering on Arachosia, the Parfise towards Carmania, the Rhamie on the borders of India, and the Orbite, or Arbitari, on the shores of the Ocean. The Country of no note in preceding times, till made famous by the follies of Alexander: Who finding by the hard bout which he had with Porus, that there was little hopes of the Conquest of India, would needs make a fruitless voyage to see the Ocean. And having fatished himself with the sight of that furious Element (as if his very seeing it had sufficiently subdued it to him) landed his Army on this Coast. Where in his march, for want of Victuals, water, and other necessities, he lost more men in the vast and uncomfortable Deserts of this Country, than in all the military services he had put them to: the Army which he carried with him into India, amounting unto 15000 Horse, and 120000 Foot; whereof hardly the fourth part came back to Babylon. So dearly did he pay for his indiscretion.

6. DRANGIANA.

DRANGIANA hath on the South, Gedrosia; on the North and West, bounded with Arta; on the East, with Arachosia. So called from Drangis, now Ilment, the chief River of it; the modern name thereof being Sigistan, from Sige, the now principal City.

The Country very hilly, and so closed with Mountains, that the River above named is scarce able to force its passage thorow them. Of no great beauty to invite, or reward a Conqueror, yet with the rest, brought under the great Persian Monarchs, the fortunes of which Crown they have always followed. So meanly planted, that Ptolemy findeth it in it but ten Towns of name; the chief whereof, 1 Artasphe, mistook perhaps for Agripas; and if so, then the Mother-City of the Agripas, whom Curtius placeth in this Tract. 2 Prophasia, by some of the Ancients called Phradag, the Metropolis of this poor Province: much boasted of by the old Inhabitants hereof, of who had seen no better, (as Country-Villagers use to brag of the next Market-Town) and said by Amniamus to be rich, and of high renown, the quality of the place considered. Still of some note amongst the Natives, by whom called Sifan. 3 Arivada. 4 Pharaza, of which nothing memorable. 5 Sige, now of most credit in this Country, from hence called Sigehan. 6 Timocani. 7 Muleher, the chief seat of the Kingdom of Aladine, or Aleandine, who had here a Fool-Paradise of his own, of which more anon.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Batrii, and the Darande, from which last, the greatest of the two, the Country might perhaps be called originally Darandiana; abbreviated to Drandiana, and at last corrupted easily into Drangiana. But I offer this only as a conjecture. They were called also by some Writers by the name of Arabians; and that as Amniamus thinks, because they descended from that people: but I think rather from a branch of the River Arabis, which parteth this Country from Gedrosia. For I conceive the Arabians were too wise to forsake their own Country, and go so far, to get so little by the bargain. Together with the rest of the Persian Provinces, subdued by Alexander; who being in this Country, happened on the discovery of the treasure intended against him by Phibutan the son of Parmenio, the most renowned of all his Captains. After this little memorable till these latter days, when it grew famous by means of Aladine a seditious Persian, Lord of the valley of Mulcher, spoken of before; who there made a terrestrial Paradise, which he promised to all his Parizans: but the Company growing too great for the safety of the Kingdom, they were quickly dispersed; and Aladine, with his Fool-Paradise, both taken away together, Anno 1262. Some attribute this fiction of Paradise to Aladine, the Mountain King of Tannus, vanquished by Selim the first. The whole story is this, out of Pandul Venetus. Aladine inhabited a Valley in this Country, the entrance into which he fortified with a strong Castle, called Tigado. Hither he brought all the lusty Youths, and beautiful Maidens of the adjoining Provinces. The women were confined to their Chambers, the men to Prison; where having endured much sorrow, they were severally cast into dead sleeps, and conveyed to the women: by whom they were entertained with all the pleasures youth and lust could desire, or a sensual mind affect. Having enjoyed this happiness a whole day, they were in a like sleep conveyed to their Irons. Then would Aladine inform them how they had been in Paradise, and that he could feat them there eternally, if they durst hazard themselves in his quarrels. This when they had sworn to do, they were dedicated to the massacre of such Princes as were like to prove his bad neighbours; and they accordingly did execution. But neither he, nor Aladine, were the first who trained up their followers in the Arts of murder. One there was before either of them, whom the Writers of those times call the Old Man of the Mountains, inhabiting the Mountainous parts of Tyre and Sidon; and from thence sending his Disciples on the like Temptations, to make away the Western Princes whom he stood in fear of, during the course of the Holy Wars. For out of his School came those wretches who murdered the Count of Tripoli, being in the Church at his Devotions; and desperately flew Comrade Marquess of Monferat, walking openly in the Market-place at Tyre; and with like carelessness of their own lives, dangerously wounded Prince Edward (after King of England) sitting in his Tent. These the Italians call Assissine (whence the word to Assissinate) intimating thereby a desperate Cut-throat, but the reason of that name is not yet agreed on: mistakenly by some Latine Writers of the darker times, called Assicide, and their commander Rex Assidarum, as if descended from Araces, the founder of the Assidan Race of the Kings of Persia.

7. ARACHOSIA.

ARACHOSIA hath on the West, Drangiana; on the East, a branch of the great River Indus; on the South, Gedrosia; and Paropamisus on the North. So called from Arachsis, the chief City of it; but now best known by the name of Cabul, the name of the chief City at this present.

Of the Country I find little spoken, but that it is watered with a branch of the River Indus, or rather with some nameless River which falleth into it. By the overflows whereof is made a Lake, which Amniamus calleth Arachotogrene, by Ptolemy called Arachotis; after the name of Arachotis the chief Town of it, near to which it is.

Towns here were once thirteen, whose names and situation we find in Ptolemy; but little or nothing of them in other Writers. The principal 1 Arachotis, on the Lake so named, said to be built by Semiramis in her march towards India, and by her to have been named Cephene. 2 Alexandria, or (for distinction sake) Alexandria Arachotica, the work of Alexander the Great, in his like march against the Indians: built at the foot of one of the branches of Mount Tannus shooting towards the South, and peopled with a Colony of 7000 old Macedonian Soldiers, forepart with age, and with the travel of the Wars, whom he left there to inhabit it, his Army being here recruited with the Forces which had served under Parmenio, consisting of 12000 Greeks and Macedonians. It is now called Cabul, accounted the chief City of it, and in that capacity gives the name of Cabul unto all the Province. 3 Arbaca, seeming by the name, to be the work of one Arbaces; but whether of Arbaces the great King of the Medes, I am not able to say. 4 Chospha, near the River of that name, as I conjecture; there being besides Chospha the chief River of Media, another of that name also in India; and probably another hereabouts to give name to this Town. 5 Phoclia. 6 Sigara. 7 Damiana, of which I find nothing but the names. 8 Sin, now a Town of name amongst them, but not much observable.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Pargete, called also Arimaspe, and Energete, a powerful Nation of themselves, brought under the command of Alexander by means of Ammenides, sometimes the Secretary of Darius, whom he made their Governour. And besides them the Syeri, Rophite, and the Eorite; which three made up the main body of the Arachosians, committed by Alexander to the Government and command of Memon. Ender, they loving after this the fortunes of the Persian Empire; they changed their Masters as that did, till the coming of a Tartar. Since that time governed for the most part, by a King of their own, especially since that dividing of the Kingdom of Persia amongst Tamerlane's Children. Some of which held it as a distinct Estate, by the names of the Kings of Cabul; till growing great by the Conquest of some parts of India, they took unto not only the name of the Great Mongul: Now Lords not only of this Country, but of the greatest part of India on this side of Ganges; of whom we shall speak more when we are in India, that being the chief Seat of their Power and Empire.

8. PARO-

8. PAROPAMISUS.

PAROPAMISUS is bounded on the South with Arachsis; on the North, with Bactria, from which parted by the main body of Mount Tannus, which is here called Paropamisus, by the name of the Country: on the East, with some part of India; on the West, with Aria. So called quasi Paropaneus, from the resemblance which it hath to an Island, begirt on all sides almost with Rivers: in which respect by Ptolemy called Paropamisus, and not Paropamisus; by which last name the Latines for the most part call it; some of them Paropamisus, with a double f. But that name being lost long since; it is now by some called Dache, by others Candahor, but most commonly Sublectan.

The Country Mountainous and hilly; here and there intermixt with Valleys: the Mountains of great height, and exceeding barren; the Valleys indifferent fruitful, but so over-shadowed with those hills, that the clearest day in some places seems but like a twilight. The people as obscure as their Country, scarce known to any of their Neighbours in the time of Alexander; the barbarous Nations nearest to them esteeming them unworthy of their acquaintance. Agreste hominum genus, & inter Barbaros maxime inconditum, as it is in Cnitus.

Rivers of most Note herein, 1 Oxus, (of which before) which rising out of Mount Caucasus, passeth Northwards, and afterwards divideth Bactria from Sogdiana. 2 Dargananius, 3 Cocorus, both owing their original to some of the branches of Mount Tannus. Which chain of hills beginning hereabouts to draw towards their height, are towards the West called Parote, where they give being to the River Dargananius, before named: more Eastward they have the name of Paropamisus; and Caucasus they are properly called where they are thwarted by Inani, in the very point, as it were, where Seythia, India, and the Persian Territories do encounter each other. The hills in that place mounted to so great an height, that from the tops thereof, the Stars appear much greater than in other places; the rising and setting of which are from hence easily discerned. Made memorable by the Fable of Prometheus, who is said to have been bound here by command of Jupiter; on which, Vintium Prometheus fuisse antiquitus tradit, faith the Historian. Prometheus is indeed by the Poets feigned to have stolen fire from Heaven, and to have made a man of clay; for which presumptuous fault, Jupiter bound him on the hill Caucasus, where a Vulture continually fed on his Liver. But according either to the truth of the Story, or their guess at least, who make some Story the ground of every Fable, Prometheus being a very wise man, instructed the dead and clayey carcasses of others in wisdom; and that being very desirous to learn the nature of the Stars, (which is the fire he stole from Heaven) he made the highest part of Mount Caucasus his study: where the inward care he had to accomplish his desire, might justly have been compared to a Vulture gnawing on his entrails; and of this opinion is St. Augustine. But far more memorable is it made for being the resting place of the Ark of Noah, whereof we have already spoken in our General Preface.

Places of most consideration in it, 1 Nandibu, and 2 Oristipana, both named by Ptolemy, and reckoned by Amniamus for the most famous of this Country. But in what their fame consisted I cannot find. 3 Parfiana, 4 Gazaca, 5 Dorocana, 6 Bagarda, all named by Ptolemy, but not easily observable. 7 Candahor, now the Metropolis of the Country, a Town of great Trade, by reason of the situation of it on the borders of India; in that respect giving to the whole Country the name of Candahor. By which name reckoned for a Kingdom, and used amongst the many titles in the Style Imperial. Nothing considerable of it in the course of Story, but that being once brought under by the Persian Monarchs, it followed the fortune of the rest till these latter times: when the Persians being over-laid by the Tartars, it became subject to some Kings of the Race of Tamerlane, reigning in this Province, till brought under by the Kings of Cabul, of the same extraction. Finding those Kings intent on the Conquest of India, they freed themselves from all subjection to that Crown, and had Kings of their own, till the year 1600. or thereabouts; when the last King, unable to defend himself against Ahmda, King of the Vishques (a Tartarian People, but subject in some sort to the Crown of Persia) surrendered his Kingdom to Echbar the Great Mongul (descended from the old Kings of Cabul) whose Dominions border close upon it. Recovered to the Persian Crown by Mirza the Son of Abas, and the Father of Sophy the now Sultan; is a Prince of much gallantry, but of more misfortunes; the Persian Sophies, since that Conquest, using the title of Kings of Candahor in the Regal style.

9. ARIA.

ARIA is bounded on the East, with Paropamisus; on the West, with Parthia; on the North, with Margiana; and on the South, with Drangiana, from which last parted by the Mountain Bagon. A name in old times given to the Province of Media, especially by the Greeks; till changed (as they say) into Media, on the coming thereof of Medes. For so Panjanis, amongst others, μεγαρενισμός 3 ἢ τὴν ἀρχαίαν τὴν ἡλικίαν. τὰς ἀνέστης Ἰάνης τὴν ὁμοίαν καὶ ἀρχαίαν μέδους ἀνέδωκεν, i. e. coming into the Country then called Aria, he caused it after her own name to be called Maria. But the name of Aria was not lost, though it were removed; remaining proper to this Country till these latter Ages, now changed with little alteration, into that of Ser.

The Country much subject unto heats, environed with Dartars, Heaths, and Forests; yet near the Mountains which defend them from the heat of the Sun, they have some fruitful Champagnes, bearing very good fruits; and amongst others, a strong wine, and of long continuance; keeping both taste and colour above 80 years. They have also here a Drage somewhat like to Myrrhe, and a kind of Sapphyr, but not right.

Rivers of note I meet with none but that which Ptolemy calleth Arian, by the name of the Province, making a Lake of the same name. The Fountain of which River he maketh to be in Paropamisus, and the fall thereof in the said Lake: the waters of it first increased by a nameless stream, falling from the Mountains called Scripsi, being that part of Tannus which divideth this Country from Margiana.

Anciently it was populous and well inhabited, containing above 30 Towns of name and note. Those of most consequence, 1 Aria, on the banks of the River Arian, the seat of the Arii, whom Pliny speaketh of in this Tract: but whether they received this name from the Province, or bestowed their own name upon it, I determine not. 2 Batana, 3 Sotira, 4 Orbitana, 5 Sarmagana, 6 Atacanda, by Strabo called Artecana. 7 Nisibis, mentioned both by Ptolemy and Amniamus. 8 Alexandria, bearing the name of the Great Conqueror, by whom planted and made a Colony of his Macedonians, for the better awing of the Country, which by some former rebellions had been troublesome to him. But these, and most of those remembered by Ptolemy, being grown out of knowledge, there remain now of special note, 9 Hari, or Eri, seated tinal Forests; and those fo intricate and thick, that it is a matter of no small difficulty to pass fadage thorow them. Full, as most other Forests are in thofe Eastern parts, of Panthers, Leopards, Lions, Tigers: thefe laid of fuch an horrible herecens, that it grew into a Common Proverb ufed of cruel men, that they had ficked an Hyrcanian Tiger, Hyrcanæque admovunt ubera Tigres, as it is in Virgil.

Principal Rivers of this Country, 1 Ziobert, fpooken of before, 2 Mazera, or Mazzer, mentioned by Pliny, Ptolomy, and Ammianus. And 3 Secanda; all falling into the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. A Sea which had the names of Caspian and Hyrcanian, from the Caspii and Hyrcani bordering next unto it; now from the Town of Bochus in Atropatia, called Mare di Bochus. Fashioned in an Oval form, the length thereof from North to South 700 miles, and 60 miles from East to West. Stormy and troublefome, by reason of thofe many great Rivers which fall into it from all the Provinces adjoining: which notwithstanding it hath no vifible commerce with the Ocean, nor doth it at any time overflow its banks, finding more paffage under ground to difcharge it felf of thofe vail streams of water which are poured into it. Well traded by the Mafovite Merchants, who having the command of the River Volga (which with 70 mouths doth open into this Sea) fail over it, and land at Farahab, or fome other of the Port-Towns, where they trade for Silks. Some Iflands here are in it, but not many, or of any great Fame; but only that they ferved the Nations which lay near it for a place of retreat, in time of the Tartarian tempest under Tamerlane; as the Isles of Verice did to the Italian, at the coming of Attila.

Places of moft confideration, 1 Hyrcania, once the Metropolis of the Province, and fo called by Ptolomy; ftill extant, but of lefs extent, and ftill called Hyrcan. 2 Tambrace, in old times of the greateft ftrength, and moft defensible; but taken by Antiochus Magnus in the War againft Affaces the Parthian, for the recovery of thofe Countreys then revolted from him. 3 Adrafpa. 4 Mafaca. 5 Anarafa. Of which we find the names, amongst others, in the ancient Writers. 6 Abharaffe, two miles from the Sea, in a fpacious Plain, containing about 200 Houfes; and now of moft reputation of all this Province, by the long Refidence therein of Abas, the late Persian Sultan, who built there a magnificent Palace, and another two miles off at a place called Abfhabant. The furniture whereof, befides coffy Carpets, in Plate and Jewels, at fuch time as Sir Dudmore Cotton was there Embaffadour, is faid to have been valued by a knowing Merchant, at 20 millions of pounds. But I fear the Merchant had more skill in Silks than Jewels: fuch a vaft fum to be expended on the furniture of one Palace only, being beyond the poffibility of the Revenue of the Persian Souldiers; hardly amounting towards all charges to five millions of Crowns. 7 Farahab, on a navigable Arm of the Caspian Sea, for beauty, wealth, and greatnefs, of moft note in this Country. Well traded from all parts of this Inland Sea, efpecially by the Ruffian Merchants, as before is faid, whole fhips come hither in March, and return in July; it being from hence to Afirachan but ten days fail. Bountifed with goodly Gardens, a Royal Manfion of the Kings, and a fpacious Market-place. 8 Chiofopore, near the Sea alfo, but on the banks of a River: the water whereof is fud for eleven months to be frefh and fweet, and for the feventh month very falt. 9 Barfuph, twelve miles from the Sea, well furnifhed with wood and water. 10 Omash, a Town of about 3000 houfes, feated on the North fide of the Taurus, in a pleafant and fruitful foil; reforted to by the people of fo many Nations, that feven Languages are there commonly fpooken. Once larger, as appeareth by fome ruines, than it is at the prefent; by fome conceived to be the Nabarea of the Ancients, honoured in thofe times with an Oracle. 11 Strava, a Town of great Traffic, for raw Silks efpecially. 12 Mefandria, whence the whole Province (or rather the parts adjoining to it) hath the name of Mefandrian.

The old Inhabitants hereof, betwixt the Caspii, were the Maxera, Aflabeni, Chridi, and the Aftrietes, united in the name of Hyrcans, in the time of the Persians; and by that name well known at the coming of Alexander. Againft whom they fo defended themselves, by tying the boughs and twigs of their trees together, that it was impoffible for him to come at them; till with incredible pains and labour he had caufed their Woods to be cut down: at fight whereof the people, who fuppofed the King had too much other bufinefs, and of more importance, than to put himfelf unto that trouble, did fubmit unto him. Falling to the fhare of Seleucus, they were the firft people that were gained by Affaces, and joyed with him in recovering their former liberty; though they got nothing by the bargain but the change of their Mofur. In all times fince, they have been looked upon as Members of the Persian Empire, till the conquest of it by the Tartars; in the diftractions of whose great Empire after Tamerlane's death, it fell to fome Prince of his Houfe, who governed here under the vaffalage and protection of the Tartars of Zagathay. Recovered not long fince to their old obedience by Sultan Abas, who for the better fettling the affairs hereof, removed the Seat Royal from Spaham, to which before he had transferred it from the City of Cashin to Sharaffe, then a fmall Town, now the chief of this Country.

12. MARGIANA.

MARGIANA is bounded on the Weft, with Hyrcania; on the Eaft, with Bactria; on the North, with part of Tartary, from which fweaved by the River Oxus; on the South, with Aria, divided from it by the Mountains. So called from the River Margus, which runs thorow the Country: but is now named Tremigen.

The Country environed with Mountains, and in moft places of it full of fandy Defarts. But where it is watered with the Rivers Aria and Margus, it is very fruitful, fretching it felf into a large and fpacious Plain, containing in the circuit near 200 miles. The Plain once compaffed with a Wall by Antiochus Soter, King of Syria; more memorable for the huge flocks of Vins which are faid to be in it, as big in bulk as two men can fufhold, and fometimes bearing branches of Grapes two Cubits long. The more to beadmired, in regard there is no other place near unto it, where the Vine will grow. And if the Ark refted on the top of Mount Caucafus, as it is moft probable it did; why may not this be fome of the remainder of that firft Vineyard which was planted by Noah, when he defended from thofe Mountains, as is affirmed by the conftant tradition of the people which inhabit here?

The People mixt of Scythian and Persian breed, partaking of the fiercenefs of the one, and the behaviour of the other, conform unto the Persians in Religion, Language, and Apparel; diftinguifhed from them in the colour of their Turbants only, which are commonly Green: and therefore by the Persians called Jefthas, or Green-caps; the Turbants of the Persian being always red.

Chief Rivers of this Country are, 1 Margus, the peculiar River of it, which rifing out of the foot of the Mountains, and paffing thorow the midft of the Province, receiveth into its Channel the River. 2 Aria, haftning out of Aria; and fo together lofe themselves in 3 Oxus, dividing the Margians from the Tartars: Out of the joynt streams of which feveral Rivers, is made a large Lake now called Sabacamber, but anciently Palus Oxiana, from the principal River.

Places of moft obfervation in it, 1 Alexandria, or Alexandria Margiana, for diftinction fake; one of the fix Towns built by Alexander for defence of this Country: called afterwards Seleucia from Seleucus; next Antiochia from Antiochus Soter, King of Syria, by whom fortified with a very ftrong Wall. It is now called Indian, and deemed for the chief of the Country. 2 Jefonius, feated on the confluence of Margus, with a narrows River iffing from the Seriphian Mountains. 3 Nigea, as the Printed Books of Ptolomy call it, but miftook for Niffa, or Niffea. 4 Argadina. 5 Rhea, of which nothing memorable. 6 Maran, near to which Ismael the firft of the Sophian Race, difcomfited the Forces of Saba the Cham of Zogahay.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Maffagetes, and the Paris, taking up the mid-lands; the Derbices bordering upon Oxus; and the Tapyri, dwelling towards the Eaft. United by the name of Margians, they were fubdued by the Kings of Persia, from whom won by Alexander to his Empire: who to affure himfelf hereof built fix Cities in it, two towards the South, and four towards the Eaft; all ftuate on the tops of hills, and built at fuch convenient places that they might afford fuccour to each other, as occafion ferved. After this nothing fingular in the ftory of them; involved in the fame fortunes with the reft of Persia, till Persia was conquered by the Tartars. Since which time, though the reft of the Persian Provinces were freed from the Tartarian yoke by Gempfis, the Soldan of Parthia, and King of Persia for a time; yet part of this Province, and of Bactria, are ftill fubject to them.

13. BACTRIA.

BACTRIA or BACTRIANA is bounded on the Weft, with Margiana; on the Eaft and North, with the River Oxus, dividing it from Sogdiana; on the South, with Paropamisfus, from which parted by the hills fo named, and the Mountain Caucafus. It took this name from Bactria, the chief City of it; and is now called Choraffa, but by fome named Bactar.

The Country towards the River Oxus, is for the moft part well manured, and affordeth plenty of Wheat, and all forts of Fruits, excepting Olives; rich Metals, and fome precious Stones, as Emeralds, Chryfolites, and Jafmits. Plenty of Pastures there be alfo, well flored with Cattel, and thofe of bigger bulk than in other places. But the greateft part hereto to the South and Weft, is nothing but a fandy Defart; and by reason that the fands are driven up and down by contrary winds, no tract or beaten way is to be difcerned: infomuch as Travellers reft all day, and take their journey in the night, that they may guide themselves by the courfe of the Stars, as upon the Sea; not without great danger of being loft or buried, whilst alive, in that fandy Ocean.

The people heretofore a puiffant and warlike Nation, not without great difficulty conquered by the Affrians, nor without lefs by the Persians; always in Arms, cruel, and refembling the Scythians, whose near neighbours they were; and (which may very well pafs for their greateft virtue) Milium a Perfurum Incon abhorrenter, abhorring naturally from the Persian Luxuries. But withal unnatural to their Parents, whom when old they caft unto their dogs, kept for that purpose, and called Canes Sepulchrales, or burial dogs. The women gorgeous in Apparel, and proud of Gesture, but prodigal of their bodies to their meanest flaves. The men to this day do retain their ancient stoutnefs; but hard betwixt the Persians and the Tartars, who feverally pretend a dominion over them.

No Province of the Persian Empire hath fo many Rivers. The principal of which are 1 Aratium, and 2 Zari-afper, mingling streams together, as do alfo 3 Ochus, and 4 Orgomanes; all four contributing their waters to the River Oxus. Of Oxus, being rather a boundary between the Persian and the Tartar, than rightly proper unto either, we have fpooken already.

Towns of moft obfervation in it, 1 Bactria, the Metropolis, or the chief City of it, ftuate at the foot of the Mountain Sogdii, giving the name of Bactria unto all the Province. It is now called Bochor, and ftill keeps the dignity of the Metropolis: the feat of the Chief Priest or Bishop of the Mahometans of Zagathay (to which this City, and great part of the Country alfo doth now belong) having here his refidence, in power and reputation equal to the King himfelf. Well fortified, and ftored with all military Provisions: the birth-place (as Maginus faith) in thefe latter Ages of Alexandria, that learned Philofopher and Phyfician; and in the firft Ages, of Zoroafter the more learned Afthorog. 2 Eubufius, once the Regal feat, and therefore honoured by Ptolomy with the title of Regia. 3 Zarifpe, or Charifpe, the chief City of the Charifpes, a great Tribe of this Country. 4 Charracharia, mentioned by Ptolomy and Ammianus; 5 Charran, upon the River Oxus. 6 Escatridia, built or repaired by the Macedonians, as the name, being merely Greek, doth feem to imitate. 7 Alivada, as ancient as the reft, but of no great note in the courfe of bufinefs. 8 Miflagia, of a later date, but of greater beauty than any of thofe before fpooken of: fuperiour to Bochor in Elegancy, State, and Greatnefs, though not in Dignity; and held by fome to be the pleafanteft of the Eaft.

This Country was as foon peopled as any fince the general Deluge. It had not elfe been poffible that Zoroafter, King hereof in the time of Ninus, and by him affaulted, fhould bring into the field an Army of 400000 men of this, and perhaps fome other of the neighbouring Provinces, with fo credible Writers fa he did. Encountering Ninus, with this Army he prevailed at firft, and flew of the Affrians near an hundred thoufand. But Ninus having better opportunities of recruiting his Forces, invaded him a fecond time with an Army of 700000 Foot, and 20000 Horfe (the greateft on record in all Ages fince that time, except that of Semiramis;) which which he overcame Zoroafter, flew him in the field, and united Bactria to his Empire. Unto this Zoroafter is afcribed the invention of Aftronomys, but on no good ground; that Art or Science being ftudied before the flood, (if Sab's Pillars, mentioned by Jofephus, be of any credit;) and therefore probably no otherwife to be afcribed to Zoroafter, than as to the Reviver of it; or becaufe he firft committed that unto writing, which he had received by tradition; or becaufe he brought thofe confufed notions which he had received from others, into rule and method. He being flain, and Bactria his chief City taken by the wit of Semiramis, then the wife of Ninus, (but on the merit of that fervice made the wife of Ninus;) the Bactrians became fubject unto the Affrian Kings, after to the Monarchs of the Medes and Persians. In the expiring of which great Monarchy, Beflus a fable and cruel Tyrant, did command this Province: and having villainoufly flain Darius, his Lord and Mafter, affumed unto himfelf the title of King of Persia, under the name of Axaxerxes. But being betrayed by Spitamenes, one of his Con-of the said Bagos made sole Monarch of Perfia. But being vanquished by Alexander the Great, in the three Battels of Granicus, Cilicia, and Arbela, the Empire of the Perfians was transferred to the Gracians, A. M. 3935.

The certain Revenues of this great Monarchy, seem to have been 14560 Talents; for so much the late Darius received yearly. But what the casual and extraordinary Intrado was, is not eafie to fay; though manifest it is, and demonftrable by many strong and evident reasons, that they far exceeded the certain. For firft, the Perfian Monarchs were Kings of 127 Provinces. Secondly, Darius offered to Alexander for the Ransom of his Mother and two Daughters, 30000 Talents of Gold. Thirdly, Alexander found in the Treasury of Damafcus, 2600 Talents; in that of Sufa, 50000 Talents of Gold uncoin'd; in that of Pafagardi, 60000 Talents; in that of Ecbatana, 26000 Talents; in that of Perfepolis, 120000 Talents; in all 204600 Talents; befides the infinite riches of the Treasury of Babylon, yielded into his hands by Bagophanes, and other places of note, not particularly fpecied: An huge and moft unfpeakable fum! Fourthly, in that the Gold and Riches which Alexander, now a Conqueror, sent from Perfia to Macedon and Greece, (befides which every Captain and common Souldier had provided and laid up for his own maintenance) loaded ten thoufand Mules, and five thoufand Camels.

After this overthrow of the Perfian Monarchy, the Perfian Nation lay obfcure 525 years, viz. from the 3635 year of the World, to the 228 year of CHRIST: of which time they were 83 years under the Syrian Successors of Alexander; and 442 years under the Arfacidians Kings of Parthia. Malla & Deffier, &c. as Herodian. "For after Darius had loft his Kingdom to Alexander the Macedonian, and after the Victor himfelf was dead alfo, the more potent Captains divided Asia among them. But difcords often arifing, and the Macedonians puiffance, by thefe often broils, not finally broken, Arfaces, one of the Parthian Nobility, perfwaded the barbarous people of the East, and among them the Perfians, to caft off the Greek yoke, and ftand for their Liberty: he himfelf taking upon him the Title of King, and invefting himfelf with a Diadem, A. M. 3718. The Perfians by this revolt got little or nothing, having indeed not changed the Tyranny, but the Tyrant only: thefe Parthian Princes Lording it with as high an infolency, as ever the old Perfian Monarchs, or the Kings of Syria did before. From this Arfaces, all the reft of his Successors, and thofe too of the Family of Artabanus, or fecond Race of Parthian Kings, took that name upon them: as the Roman Emperours that of Cæfar, or the old Egyptian Kings the name of Pharaoh. Their ufual Style was Rex Regum, or King of Kings: and by that Style with arrogance and infolence enough, Vologefes thus infcribed his Letters to Vifpafian the Roman Emperour, viz. Arfaces, Rex Regum, Flavii Vefpafiano: giving himfelf the Title of King of Kings, but the other nothing but his bare names only. To which, Vifpafian without taking notice of the Parthian's pride, returned his anfwer to him with this Superfcription, Fl. Vefpafianus Regi Regum Arfacidi: whether with more fcorn or modelfy, it is hard to fay. They alfo called themfelves the Brethren of the Sun and Moon, which were the chiefelt Gods they worfhipped. Great Princes queftionlefs they were, and kept the Romans harder to it, than all the Kings and States in the world befides: whole names and acts occur in thefe following Catalogues of

2. The Arfacidan or Parthian Race of the Kings of Perfia.

- A. M.*
3718 1 Arfaces, the Founder of the Parthian Family.
3741 2 Mithridates, or Arfaces the fecond, affaulted by Antiochus Magnus with an Army of 120000 men, but without fuccels.
3751 3 Pampatius.
3773 4 Phraartes, the Son of Pampatius.
3783 5 Mithridates II. Brother of Phraartes, fubdued the Medes, and extended his Empire to Euphrates.
6 Phraartes II. flain in a War againft the Syrians.
3857 7 Artabanus, Uncle to Phraartes the fecond.
8 Pacorus, the Son of Artabanus.
9 Mithridates III. Brother of Pacorus.
3903 10 Horades, Brother of Mithridates, whom he overcame, and caufed to be flain in his own fight. He alfo vanquifhed M. Cræfus, and flew 20000 Romans; and becaufe Cræfus was reported to be wondrous covetous, he caufed Molten Gold to be poured down his Throat. A miferable death, but in reſpect of the Divine Providence, a moft juft Revenge upon him for his Sacrilege, in Robbing the Temple of Hierufalem, as he marched towards the Parthians. The overthrow, and the difgrace which thereby hapned to the Romans, was not long afterwards recompensed by Veniudius, one of the Lieutenants of Mark Antony the Triumvir, who flew great numbers of them in a pitched field, and amongst others, Pacorus the Kings Son: the day of the Battel being the fame, in which Cræfus had before been vanquifhed. After this Victory, for which Veniudius had the honour of a Triumph (and the firft Triumph that ever the Romans had held for a Parthian Victory) he was in a fair way to have ruined this Kingdom, to have ſhrewdly flaken it at the leaft, had not Antony in an envious humour called him from that ſervice. Finally, Horades was flain by his Son Phraartes.
11 Phraartes III. a valiant Prince, but wicked and cruel, as the Murderer of his own Father and many of his Brethren doth clearly evidence. Againft him marched Marcus Antoninus with a populous Army, which wanted little of an absolute overthrow; of 16 Legions, scarce fix returning home in safety. This King ſubmitted himfelf and Kingdom unto Augustus, capturing the Roman Enſigns, and feeing the Romans taken at the defeat of Cræſſus. The only mark of the Parthians Subjection, was their receiving Kings at the appointment of the Senate and Emperours of Rome, which alfo was of no long continuance.
12 Phraartes IV. Son of Phraartes the third, whom he flew and fucceeded.
13 Horades II. Son of Phraartes the fourth, flain in a confpiracy.
14 Vemon, ſubſtituted in the place of Horades, but offered by 15 Tiridates, who was alfo diſpoſſeſſed of his Life and and Kingdom of Artabanus, the people flocking to him as a man of courage, and being offended with the two laſt Kings, becauſe they either had received the Kingdom, or at leaſt the Confirmation in it, from the Roman Emperours. Which Artabanus, though defended either from a Female, or ſome of the Collateral line of the former Family, yet being not direct Heir thereof, he is looked on as a ſtranger to the Blood of the Arfacide the Family of Arfaces, giving place to that of this Artabanus, of which Family we have the names of twelve Kings ſucceſſively Reigning: the moſt conſiderable of them being Chloſes, the eighth King of this Line, from whom the Emperour Trajan gained Armenia, and Meſopotamia, adding them to the Parthian Empire. Members whereof they did continue till regained to the Perfian Crown, by Sapor the ninth King of the next Perfian Dynaſty. But for thoſe twelve Kings of this houſe, they are theſe.

The third Dynaſty of the Kings of Perfia, and the fecond of the Parthian Race.

- 1 Artabanus.
- 2 Bardanes.
- 3 Gateres.
- 4 Vomanes.
- 5 Vologefes.
- 6 Artabanus II.
- 7 Pacorus.
- 8 Chloſes.
- 9 Parnaspates.
- 10 Vologefes II.
- 11 Vologefes III.
- 12 Artabanus III. the laſt King of this new Race of the Parthians, whoſe overthrow by the valour of Artaxerxes the firſt Perfian King of the fourth Dynaſty, occaſioned the Tranſlation of the Diadem to the natural Perfians; after it had continued in two Parthian Families for the ſpace of 470 years. Which Tranſlation, as it was wrought by the uncreſcible power of God, who only hath the diſpoſing of Crowns and Scepters; ſo in the way of ſecond cauſes it may be principally referred to the Barbarous Malface of this people, by Antoninus Caracalla the Roman Emperour; who having negotiated a Marriage with the Daughter of this Artabanus, and going (as he gave it out) to ſolemnize the Nuptials, was met by the old King accompanied with the flower of his Nobility, and the choicelt of his Souldiers, and other Subjects, in Triumphal Ornaments. Which honourable Train was no ſooner come near his Army, but he commanded his Souldiers (on a Watch-word given) to put them all to the Sword, the King himſelf hardly eſcaping with his life. Caracalla being dead, and Macrinus ſucceeding in the Throne, the Parthians ſet upon him to Revenge that ſlaughter. But underſtanding after a long light of three days continuance, that Macrinus had ſlain Caracalla, they made Peace with him; but were ſo weakened and unable to hold their own, that it made the Perfians once more think of recovering to their own Nation, the Regal power. For Artaxerxes, a noble and generous Perfian (his name purſuing ſuggeſting ſome high thoughts unto him) did fo well husband the opportunity, that he flew Artabanus the laſt King of the Parthians, and once more brought the Royal Seat into Perſia. Yet was not this ſo eaſily effected, the Parthians notwithstanding their former loſſes, maintaining another cruel fight for three days together; ſo difficult was it to vanquiſh that Nation, when their Forces were broken; impoſſible when they were entire. Artaxerxes, proud of this ſuccels, ſent a peccatory Embaſſy to Alexander Severus, the then Roman Emperour, to have all the Provinces of Asia, which had formerly belonged to the Perfian Monarchy, re-delivered to him: a matter not ſo eaſily granted as demanded. For Severus to ſuppoſe ſo iſolent an Enemy, marched towards Perſia with an Army Romanly appointed; which, to find his Enemy more weak, he divided into three parts: whereof the firſt was to march into Media, the ſecond into Perſia, the third himſelf Led in the mid-way between both, to ſuccour both, or be ſuccoured by both, as occaſion required. But his device ſucceeded not happily, for his two Armies being by the Perfians broken, he with much danger and hiee retired back with the third. This was a good beginning for the Perfian Kingdom: the eſtabliſhment followed not long after: Valerianus the Emperour being vanquifhed, and taken Priſoner by Sapor, the ſecond King of this Race. So that now the name of the Perſian grew ſo terrible to the Romans, that Conſtantine the Great tranſplanted many of the Colonies and Garrifons of the North-weſt parts of the Empire, into the Eaſt, to keep the Perſian from growing too far upon the Roman Provinces; and removed alſo the Seat of the Empire nigher unto them, from Rome to Conſtantinople. And thus having ſhewn the beginning and Eſtabliſhment, the Foundation and Building of the new Kingdom of the Perfians, take along with you the Catalogue of their Kings, until they once more loſt the Sovereignty of their own Nation, and became Slaves again to more barbarous Maſters.

- 26 Sarbatius.
- 27 Barnabius.
- 630 28 Hormiſda II. the 28 and laſt King of the Race of Artaxerxes, or the fourth Dynaſty: of whom beſides the two firſt Kings, whoſe Acts are ſpoken of before, the moſt remarkable were, 1 Vararanes the ſecond, in whole time Carus the Emperour palling over Euphrates, and laying Siege to Cteſiphon, was there flain by a Thunderbolt. 2 Narſes, the Son of Vararanes, who firſt diſcombed Galecius, one of the Cæſars, in the Empire of Dioſcleian, and totally ruined his Army: for which Galerius being forced to Laquey it by the Emperour's Chariot in his Purple Robes, was ſo highly flamed, that to recover his credit he ſet upon Narſes once again, routed him, and took Priſoners his Wives and Children.

3. Sapor the second, the Son of Misdates, who began his Reign before his Birth. For his Father dying without Issue, left his Wife with Child: which Child the Magi having signified by their Art to be a Male, the Persian Princes caused the Crown and Royal Ornaments to be set upon his Mothers belly, acknowledging him thereby for their future King. A great and puissant Prince he proved, holding continual War with Constantine, and his Successors, till the Death of Valens; and gaining from them the best parts of Mesopotamia: but withal a great Persecutor of the Christians, of whom no fewer than 20000 are said to have suffered in his time. 4. Yldigerter, a Prince so esteemed by Arcadius, the Eastern Emperor, that he made him Protector of his Empire, during the minority of his Son Theodosius: which trust he Royally performed, and was a great friend unto the Christians in his own Dominions. 5. Cabades, first outed of his Kingdom by Zamasher, and restored again, was the first Persian King who permitted the free exercise of the Christian Religion. He slew Zelieber, a King of the Huns, coming to his Aid against the Romans, because he had before permitted to assist the Emperor; and rooted the Manichean Sect out of his Estate. 6. Cosroes the Son of Cabades, surnamed the Great, a constant Enemy to the Romans; from whom he Conquered a great part of Syria, and took and sacked the City of Antioch. But finding the War brought home to his own door, by Marinarius, who was afterwards Emperor, and his own Countries in a flame, he took such thought of it, that he died of a Fever. 7. Cosroes the second, as great an Enemy to the Emperor Heraclius, from whom he took all that was left of Mesopotamia, Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Hierusalem it self; most of it recover'd by Heraclius: in despite of whom he caused all the Christians in his Kingdom to turn Nestorians. 8. Hormisda the second, the last of the Dynasty, who being first weakened by Civil and Domestic dissensions, was vanquished by Hannar and his Saracens, Anno 634. burying to the glory of this renowned Nation in the grave of oblivion, or at least subjection.

The Saracenic Caliphs, having added this Kingdom to their large Empire, appointed here their Deputies, whom they honoured with the name of Sultans; not one Supreme for the whole Kingdom, but several Governors or Sultans for each several Province: called by new names, and moulded into many Toparchies, as Chorazan, Monzenabar, Uzbek, and I wot not what; as the Sultans acting of themselves, and warring upon one another. as their humours led them, without relation to the Caliph, or Lord in chief. During which bustles it so hapned, that Mahomet, the Sultan of Persia (so called because he was the chief in Command and Power) picking a quarrel with his Neighbour the Sultan of Babylon, (Pisafrits he is called in some Christian Writers, by whom taken or mistaken for the Caliph himself) made War upon him. But finding him countenanced and supported by the Power of the Caliph, invited the Turks, then possessed of some part of Armenia Major, to come to his Aid: by whose means he overthrew the Caliph's Forces, and might have got the Sovereignty of Persia unto himself, if he had used his Victory and his Friends, with any tolerable discretion. But denying to pay these Turk their Wages, and send them home, he occasioned them to make head against him, under the Conduct of Tangrolipix, their principal Leader; to whom being once in Arms, several discontented persons of the natural Persians, did unite themselves. Encouraged with which addition, and being furnished with Horse and Armour, and other necessities, by the Spoil of the Country, they gave Battle to the Sultan himself: whom having vanquished and slain, Tangrolipix by the joynt consent of both Armies is made King of Persia, the Founder of

The fifth Dynasty, or the Turkish Race of the Kings of Persia.

- 1030 1. Tangrolipix, of whom sufficiently before.
2. Axan, the Son of Tangrolipix; by whom Calin Moser, his near Kinsman, was first with great Forces against the Christians; whom he dispossessed of a great part of Asia Minor.
3. Balak, Sultan of Persia, in the beginning of the Wars in the Holy Land, undertaken by the Western Christians; against whom he is reported to have sent his Forces. Of whose Successors I find nothing till the time of 1198 4. Cassner, the last King or Sultan of the Turks, vanquished in the year 1202. by the Cham of Tartary. Which makes me very apt to think, that after the death of Axan, or his next Successor, the Turks lost the Sovereignty of Persia, though they kept the possession of some parts of it: the Sovereignty thereof being recovered by the Caliphs of Babylon: and that it was so held by both, till the Tatars dispossessed the one, and destroyed the whole Progeny of the other, as before was noted. And this I find to be the opinion of Benjamin Tudelensis, a Learned Jew, which had Travelled most part of the East, to whose judgment herein I subscribe, as most found and rational.

The sixth Dynasty, or the Tartarian Race of the Kings of Persia.

- 1260 1. Haalon, or Ulab-Kubkan, by Occa the great Cham, made King of Persia; exterminated the whole Race of the Caliphs of Bagdet.
1266 2. Habkakaibon, the Son of Haalon.
1282 3. Nicador Oglan, by Haalon call'd Tangador, who made himself a Mahometan, and was named Humed, the Brother of Habkakaibon.
1284 4. Argon-Khon, the eldest Son of Habkakaibon.
1292 5. Geniotukhon, Brother of Argon-Khon.
1295 6. Badukhon, the Uncle of the last, of which there is little memorable.
1296 7. Gazan, the Son of Argon-Khon, who made Asiat his Imperial Seat.
1305 8. Alyapin, who transferred the Court to Tauris, and is said to have been the Founder of Sultania, a chief City of Media; the Brother of Gazan.
1317 9. Abusaid, Son of Alyapin, the last of the Race of Haalon, that reigned in Persia. After whose death, Anno 1327. (being the 736 of the Mohometan Hegira) the more potent Princes of the Tartars everly on the several parts and Provinces of it; every one calling himself King of that part or Province, which he was possessed of. And amongst them Gempsh the Sultan or Soldan of Partibia, (though a Persian born) put in for a share, and made himself Master of his own Province, and some parts adjoining: made on that ground by some of our Christian Writers (who very impudently have transmitted to us the affairs of this Country) the sole King of Persia. In this confusion it continued till the coming of Tamerlane, who like a furious Whirlwind, driving driving all before him, composed the differences, by getting all unto himself. But as Philosophy doth teach us, that no violent motion is of long continuance; so the tumult of business and the success of actions may instruct us, that a Kingdom forced to bow under the command of a prosperous Army, is not so well assured to the Victor, but that fury of the War once past, it may return again to its former liberty, or open a more easy passage to some new Invader. And so it fared with the Conquests and Successes of Tamerlane, whose Issue quickly lost this Kingdom, and almost all the rest of his other Purchases: leaving but little memory of their names and Actions. For partly by his own imprudence, in cantoning his Estates amongst his Children; and partly by the weakness of his Successors in the Realm of Persia, this Kingdom did relapse immediately to the same confusions in which he found it; having almost as many Sovereign Kings as Provinces. Most of them Homagers perhaps to the Kings of the House of Tamerlane, and those who afterwards succeeded in the Title of Kings of Persia, of the Tarcoman or Armenian Dynasty: not yet reduced unto this Crown, notwithstanding the great and prosperous success of the Sophian Family. But for the Kings of the Race of Tamerlane, who only in their times had the honour to be called Kings of Persia, (and well enough content with that:) Such as they were, we find them in this order following:

- 1405 10. Mirza Chareck, the fourth Son of Tamerlane, succeeded in his appointment in the Realm of Persia.
1447 11. Olegbegeh, Son of Mirza Chareck, vanquished and slain by his own Son.
1450 12. Abdalaisse, slain not long after by his own Soldiers.
1451 13. Abdulla, the Son of Olegbegeh, and Brother of Abdalaisse, vanquished by 1452 14. Abusaid II. descended from Morocha, the third Son of Tamerlane, succeeded on the death of Abdulla.
1461 15. Zenzeer, whom some call Jooncha, others Maloucheser, discomfited and slain in battle by Ussan-Cassner, Anno 1472. which was about 70 years from the death of Tamerlane.

The seventh Dynasty of the Tarcoman, or the Armenian Race of the Kings of Persia.

- 1472 1. Ussan-Cassner, by some called Asymbesius, by others more truly Ozem-Azambec, was the Son of Tracheton, one of those poor Armenian or Turcoman Princes, dispossessed by Bajazet the first, and restored by Tamerlane. Encroaching on his Neighbours, he was warned to desist by Zenzeer last Persian King; with whom encountering in a pitched Field, he overcame him, and got that Kingdom by the Victory.
1478 2. Jacub, the second Son of Ussan-Cassner, having put by his elder Brother, attained the Throne, and repulsed the Mamaluks out of Mesopotamia and Assyria, which they had invaded. He was after Poysoned by his Wife.
1490 3. Julaver, a Kinsman of Jacub's, succeeded him in the Estate, which he held only three years, and then left it to 1493 4. Bafinger, a Prince of the same Blood; who living in Adultery with the Wife of Jacub, had conspired his death. 2.

- 1495 5. Ruffan, assaulted by Aider, or Secaider, of the Sophian Faction, who then began to be of power.

Mahomet the Impostor and first Emperor of the Saracens, by his last Will and Testament, bequeathed the succession unto that Estate, to Hali his near Kinsman, and Husband of Fatime his eldest Daughter. But Abudezer, Haumar, and Ofman, three powerful men, and the chief Commanders of the Army in the time of Mahomet, successively followed one another in the Supreme Dignity. After their death, Hali enjoyed that honour for a little while, supplanted first, and afterwards vanquished and slain by Mubaviz, a great man of War, who succeeded in it: and to secure himself therein, slew Hafsin or Ofman, the Son of Hali, and eleven of the Sons of that Ofman; the twelfth, called Misja Ceredine, escaping with life. From him descended lineally one Gunes, the Lord of Ardevile in Media; who considering that there had been no Caliph in long time before, began to plot the establishing of that high honour in his own Family, as the right Heirs to it. A man of so great reputation among the people, that Tamerlane having made a Conquest of Persia, thought it no dishonour to his Greatness to bestow a friendly visit on him. Dying, he left his hopes and projects to his Son, called Aider, who afterward for the Purity of Religion pretended by him, had the adjunct of Teshpy; the word fo signifying in that Language: who also proved of such efficacy and power with all sorts of men, that Ussan-Cassner, the first King of the Armenian or Tarcoman Race, thought fit to make him Husband unto one of his Daughters. But on the contrary, Jacub the Son of Ussan, and some of his Successors, seeing him grow unto such power and estimation with the common people; and fearing what he could do, and not what he would do, endeavoured to deprive him by all means that might be. Which he not able to remedy, as the case then stood, practised to add unto his Party under the popular pretence of reforming things that were amiss in their Religion; and grew so powerful in the end, that he gave Battle unto Ruffan and Alamat, the two last Kings of the former Race. But Alamat having got the Victory, caused him to be slain; and delivered Hysmael and Solyman his two Sons, into the hands of Amazar, a chief Commander of his own, by him to be kept in perpetual Prison. But Amazar, a man of a more ingenious disposition, afforded them not only liberty, but also good Education: inasmuch that Hysmael Sophi, a towardy young Gentleman, undertook Revenge for the death of his Father, which work he fulfilled, having overcome and slain King Alamat, and his Son Elyan. After this Victory, he being Crowned King, or Shah of Persia, altered the form of Religion: making Hali, and himself the true Successors of Mahomet, but condemning Abudezer, Haumar, and Ofman, with the Turks, as Rebels and Schismaticks.

Hence proceeded the bloody Wars, which to the Persians I have hapned between them and the Turks: the Persians burning whatsoever Book or Monument they find concerning those three; and the Turks holding it more Meritorious to kill one Persian, than seventy Christians. Sirius in his Commentaries, writing purposefully of the acts of Hysmael, saith, that the Jems on some fond conceit, were persuaded that he was the Messiah they had had so long looked for: But it proved quite contrary, there never being Prince that more vexed and grieved them.

The eighth Dynasty, or Sophian Race of the Kings of Persia.

- 1505 1 Hyfmael Sophi, the Founder of this Family, overthrown by Selimus the first, in the Caldanian Fields. 20.
- 1515 2 Tamas, the Son of Hyfmael, vanquished by Solyman the Magnificent, who took from him the Countries of Chaldea, Affria, and Mesopotamia, with some part of Media. 53.
- 1578 3 Aider, the second Son of Tamas, obtained the Kingdom, imprisoning his elder Brother; but his cruelty being much feared, he was made away by the practice of Periancona, his own Sister, having only reigned 15 days.
- 4 Hyfmael II. eldest Son of Tamas, restored unto his Father's Throne; but murdered with the privy of his Sister also, who found him too rough a nature for her to Govern; having reigned near two years.
- 1579 5 Mabomet Cadabanda, advanced unto the Throne by his Sisters Faction, (as being of a milder and more tractable nature) at his first entrance caused her to be beheaded for the former Murders. During his time, not fully settled in the State, Amurath the third, by his Lieutenants won from him almost all Armenia, Media, and great part of Georgia. 7.
- 1585 6 Abas, the second Son of Mabomet, having treacherously practiced the death of Mirza, his elder Brother, succeeded his Father, recovered almost all which the Turks had gained, and added the Kingdoms of Ormus, Heri, Candabar, and Hircania, to the Crown of Persia.
- 7 Sophy, the Nephew of Abas by his Son Mirza, (whose Eyes he caused to be put out on a false suspicion) at the Age of fifteen years succeeded: committed by his Grandfather during his Minority to the Protection of Emangoli, Chamr, or Duke of Sibiras. A Prince, who since he came to Age, hath had a good hand against the Turks, attempting the recovery of Bagdat and other places, which had been taken from them in time of Abas.

The Government of these Persian Kings, though it be despotical and severe, hath a great deal less of the Tyranny in it, than any other of the Mahometan Kings or Princes: these cherishing their Brethren, maintaining Nobility amongst them, and encouraging Industry; which makes them to be better served than the Turk, or Tartar:

to both whom they are far inferior both in power and Treasure. Their Officers of State, and men of principal Employment, for the most part Eunuchs (as generally in all the Empires of the East:) such persons being thought most trusty, because abstracted from the obligations of Wife and Children, they study more the Princes Service than their own Advantages. Their Forces consist most of Horse, to which they are inclined more generally, than to serve on Foot; and yet the greatest Body of Horse which they have brought at any time into the Field, came not to above 30000; but those well furnished and appointed, maintained on Lordships and Estates after the manner of the Turkish Timariots. The Foot-Soldiers of his own Countries, but poor and raw, and very seldom stand their ground; that defect being for the most part supplied by Mercuraries. The inconvenience of which being found by Sultan Abas, he served himself of Children bought of Christian Parents near the Euxine Sea (from whence the Egyptian Sultans had their Mamluks) whom they call by the name Cozai-Bassis, or Red-Cops, so named from the colour of their Turbans; trained up by them in their Religion and Warlike Discipline, as the Turks their Janizaries; yet far inferior to the Turks, against whom if they have prevailed since the time of Abas, they may ascribe the greatest part of their good fortune to those Divisions and Rebellions, which in these late times have been frequent in the Turkish Empire. And as for their Sea-Forces, they are inconsiderable. For though they have large Sea-coast both on the Persian Bay, the Caspian Sea, and the Southern Ocean; yet are they very poor in Shipping: suffering the Nineville to ingross the Trade of the Caspian Sea; the Portugals, to manage that of the Southern Ocean; as formerly that also of the Persian Bay, till the taking of Ormus.

The Revenues of this Kingdom in the time of Hyfmael the first Sophy, were exceeding great: inasmuch that Tamas his Successor, to ingratiate himself with all sorts of people, released them of all kinds of Customs imposed on Merchandise, either imported or exported. And this they say amounted to the sum of 90000 Tomans yearly: which, reckoning every Toman at 20 Crowns, made up a Million and 800000 Crowns of annual income. Which notwithstanding, his Revenue was computed at four or five Millions of Crowns yearly; raised out of Domain Lands, the reath of Fruits, the profit of Mines, and the Fine paid by every Subject when he sets up Shop. But Tamas finding this not to be sufficient to maintain his Royalty, doubled the value of his money, and thereby for the present his Revenue also. Since that they have been much impaired by the Conquest made upon them by the Turks, who had got from them so much Land as maintained 40000 Timariots; and yielded to the Grand Seigneur one Million of yearly income: whether improved again or not to their former height, I am not able to determine.

OF TARTARY.

TARTARIA is bounded on the East, with China, the Oriental Ocean, and the Streights of Anian, (if such Streights there be) by which parted from America; on the West, with Russia, and Podolia, a Province of the Realm of Poland; on the North, with the main Scythick or Frozen Ocean; and on the South, with part of China, from which separated by a mighty Wall, some part of India, the River Oxus, parting it from Bactria, and Margiana, two Persian Provinces; the Caspian Sea, which separates it from Media, and Hircania; the Caucasian Mountains interposing betwixt it and Turcomania; and the Euxine, which divideth it from Anatolia, and Thrace. So called from the Tartars, a puissant and mighty people now possessed hereof: the realm of whose name we shall shew hereafter.

It containeth all those great and spacious Provinces, which the Anglicans called Seres, Seythia extra Tmaum, Seythia intra Tmaum, Sace, Sogdiana, the greatest part of Sarmatia Asiatica, and part of Sarmatia Europaea: extending it self the whole length of Asia, from the River Tanais, to the Eastern Ocean; taking in Taurica Cherfonefis, and some other parts of Europe also. So that if we measure it by miles, it is said to contain 5400 from East to West, and 3600 from North to South: a greater quantity of ground than the Turkish Empire, but of less fertility and account.

In measuring by the way of Degrees, it reacheth from the 50 Degree of Longitude, to the 195, which is 145 Degrees from West to East: and from the 40th Degree of Northern Latitude, unto the 8th, which is within 10 Degrees of the Pole it self. By which account it lieth from the beginning of the sixth Climate, where the longest day in Summer is 15 hours, till they cease measuring by Climates; the longest day in the most Northern parts hereof, being full six months; and in the Winter half of the year, the night as long.

The Country lying under such different Meridians, and such distant Climates, must needs be such, as no general Character can be given of it; and therefore we shall defer that, with the names of the Rivers, and chief Mountains, to the description of the several and particular Provinces. But for the People, being much of the same nature in every part, we may take the measure of them here. Affirmed to be of square Stature, broad faces, hollow eyes, thin beards, thick lips, flat noses, ugly countenances, swart of complexion, not so much by the heat of the Sun, (which keeps far enough off) as their natural flatness. Barbarous every where in behaviour, especially in those parts which they call Asiatica, and Antiquia; but withal very strong of body, swift of footmanhip, vigilant in time of service, and patient of all extremities both of cold and hunger. The women suitable to the men, scorning or wanting Ornaments to set themselves out; or when they do, they seldom go beyond Copper, Feathers, or such precious Gen-gams.

In behaviour they are rude and barbarous, as before was said; eating their Enemies when they take them, as in way of Revenge; first letting out their blood, which they receive into Cups, and use it as Wine unto the feast. Though swift of foot, yet generally they love to ride, though it be but on Oxen; about whose necks, as about Horses, when they Travel, they use little Bells, with which Musick they are much delighted. Their speech, even in their common talk, is a kind of whining, and their singing little better than the howling of Wolves. They eat commonly with unwashed hands, the dirt and grease about their fingers serving as a sauce for their meat, which they devour greedily, and with little chewing; and for their ordinary drink use Mares milk. Homely of habit, made of the coarsest stuff, and reaching no lower than the knee: and if they go to the charge of Furs, contrary to the custom of other people, they wear the hairy side outwards, and the skin next their own bodies; only to shew the richness of their Apparel. And yet so proud in this beggary, that they account the Christians but as Dogs, condemn all the rest of the world, and think their Cham the only considerable Prince; by whose name they swear, as by their Gods.

In matter of Religion it is hard to say, whether Mahometanism or Paganism, be of most extent: some parts hereof being wholly Pagan, some wholly Mahometan, and some mixt of both. But of the two the Pagan is the better Gentleman, as being of the elder blood, and of more Antiquity: the Sect of Mahomet not being entertained amongst them, till the year 1246.

And yet these have not so prevailed, as to extinguish the remainders of Christianity, of which there are amongst them many several Churches. The Christian Faith first planted amongst the Seythians, by the preaching of S. Andrew, and S. Philip, two of the Apostles. Overgrown in these latter Ages by the Sect of Nestorian, either by the diligence of their Preachers, or by want of others to instruct them in more Orthodox Tenets. Before the prevailing of the Tartars, besides the Circassian Christians, of whom more anon, there are in the most remote parts of Tartary, whole Kingdoms of that Religion; as namely that of Tende, the chief of all: besides some numbers of them in Tangut, Canchiteles, Cassar, Samarchan, Kartlim, Suehair, Erginal, and Caraian; where in the time of Paulus Venetus, who surveyed these parts about the year 1270. they lived intermingled with the Pagans. Nor so diminished since the Conquest of those Countries by the Tartars, but that they are of a considerable number, especially in Cathay it self: where they are said to have a Metropolitan in the City of Cambala, (the principal City of that Empire) and he so honoured by the station are orderly disposed of into Streets, and Lanes, and by the Tartars are called Agara, or a Town of Carats.

The ancient Inhabitants heretofore were of Scythian Race; for by that name for ancient Writers can not only the true and proper Scythians, lying on both sides of Imax; but even the Sarmatians or Sarmatians also; and those not only of Sarmatia Asiatica, bordering next unto them: but even such European Nations, as lived on the Northern banks of Ister, and the Euxine Sea. And so they are affirmed to be by Proclus himself; though otherwise more exact than any, in distinguishing Sarmatia Europæa, from Asiatica, and Asiatica from the Scythians. For speaking of the Nations of Sarmatia Europæa, inhabiting on the Palus Mæotis, he ranks them thus, καὶ περιέχεται τὰς παλαιὰς τὰς Μαιώτιδος, &c. i. e. And all along the Coasts of Mæotis, dwell the Jazyges (distinct from those called Metanages) and the Rhosonians; and more within the Land, the Hamaxobii and Alani, Scythians. More towards the banks of the Euxine, and in the Chersonesus it self, dwell the ancient Tauri, subdivided into the several Nations of the Sinchi, Naspi, and Arinchi, by the said Proclus included in the general name of Tauri Scythæ. To none but these, of all the European Sarmatians doth he give this name. And therefore I conceive them to have been those Scythians, against whom Darius King of Persia made his fruitless war. Picking a quarrel with this People, because their King had denied to give him one of his Daughters to Wife; or to revenge, as others more probably say, the inroad which the Scythians formerly had made into Asia, he drew together an Army of 700 thousand. Passing over the Thracian Bosphorus, he came at last to the banks of Ister, where it parteth Moldavia and Bulgaria; and there for the passage of his men caused a Bridge to be Built, to the keepers whereof he left a Cord of 60 knots commanding them every day to untie one knot; and if he came not back before all were untied, to return to their houses. This done, he marched towards his Enemies, who still fled before him; leading him into the most desert and uninhabited parts of their Country, and when they had brought him into a straight, left Embassadors to him with a Bird, a Moose, a Frog, and an handful of Arrows; willing the Persians, if they could, to expound that Riddle. Darius, willing to hope the best of his design, conjectured that the Scythians did submit unto him, by delivering into his hands their Air, Earth, Water, and Arms. Hieroglyphically signified in their Present: But Gobrias, one of their Seven Princes, made this Exposition. That if the Persians could not fly like a Bird thorow the Air, or like a Moose creep under the Earth, or like a Frog swim over the Water, they could by no means escape the Scythian Arrows. And to say truth, this Commentary best agreed with the Text. For these Scythians following close upon him, or rather driving him before, and vexing him with continual skirmishes, forced him to make such halt to get over the River, that he lost 80000 of his men in fight and flight. This was the only memorable Action of these European Scythians in those elder ages: more memorable in the times succeeding for their horrid cruelty, than any argument of their valour. For it is said of these Tauri, or Tauri-Scythæ, that for the pleasing of their Gods, especially of Diana, whom they called Ofloche, they used to sacrifice all such strangers as they could lay hands on; and with their heads most barbarously adorned the Walls of her Temples. An inhumanity with which the Christian Advocates of the Primitive times did much use to upbraid the Gentiles; taunting them with the Sacrifices of Diana Taurica (so named from hence) as inconsistent with the nature of a God or goodnests; most rightly giving them this brand or censure, that they were not Sacra, but Sacrilegia. Et præter præsumptum esse quæ sit religio. Better it was to be of no Religion, than of one so cruel.

But to go forwards with the story, In the actions of the Greeks and Romans we hear nothing of them, unless it were that the Emperor Trajan (as Florus seems to intimate) took the City of Tyberis: Which if he did, he added by that action somewhat to his own honour, but nothing to the Roman Empire: this people being never reckoned amongst the Provinces. Nor hear we any thing by name of their infesting the Roman Territories (as the other barbarous Nations did: ) except they passed in the account of the Goths, Alani, Huns, Avars, or other of the Scythian, or Sarmatian Peoples; by which the Majesty of that Empire was trod under foot. But what the Persians, Greeks, and Romans were not able to do, was with ease effected by the Tartars: who in the time of Jochata, or Hocata, the next to Cingis, under the conduct of Batba, or Ruyda, one of their most renowned Commanders, subdued all these parts; together with Russia on the North, Bulgaria, and Hungaria on the East. Subject at first to the Command of the Great Cham of Cathia, as the rest of the Tartarians were, they came at last to have a Prince of their own; one Lachan Cham, descended from the afore said Batba, and (as it was pretended) of the blood of Cingis. They grew at last of great power, by conquering the Asiatick Tartars which lay nearest to them, that Mabomet the Great thought fit to keep them down before grown too strong for him; and therefore under colour of taking in the City of Caspis then possessed by the Genoese, made himself Master of the greatest part of the Tartarian Chersonesus, and the Port of Tauris; thereby commanding both Mæotis and the Euxine Sea. In the time of Selimus the first, who had married a Daughter of this Crim-Tartar, (for so they call him) and was aided by him with an Army of 15000 men against his Father, the Turks and these Tartarians grew into a League. The chief conditions of it were, that the Tartar should aid the Turk upon all occasions, with 60000 horse, if it were required; that they shall not make war with any of their neighbours, (except the Moscovites) without leave of the Turk; that they shall pay yearly to the Grand Seigneur in the way of Tribute 300 Christians; that the new Cham, upon the death or deposition of his Predecessor, shall receive from the Great Turk a Royal Banner, in token of his Confirmation in that estate; that in reward of these services, the Grand Tartar shall have yearly from the Grand Seigneur 5000 Ducats, in the way of Pension; and succeed finally in the Turkish Empire, if ever the male Issue of the House of Ottoman should chance to fail. According unto this agreement, the Tartars have been aiding to the Turks from time to time, against the Persians, Polanders, Hungarians, Moldavians, and indeed whom not? and that with great and puissant Armies; the great Cham sometimes arming 150000 of his own Subjects; leaving but one man in an house to attend their Cattle; and sometimes adding in 50000 Circassians, and others of the Asian Tartars. And for the Moscovites, whom he is left at liberty to assault by this Capitulation, he hath had so hard an hand upon the him, that in the year 1571 they pierced as far as to the City of Mosco, and set fire on the Suburbs: then returning into the City built most of wood, and the space of two hours burnt the greatest part of it; and therein slew more than 800000 of all sorts of people. A quarrel not to the King-composed; the Tartar not only laying claim to the Kingdoms of Caspian, and Afrachian, which the Russ possess; but even to Moscovia it self, as hath there been shewn.

shewn. Nothing so punctual is the Turk on his part, to perform the Contract; who not content to have the Tartars for his friend, or at the worst his Homager, hath of late times attempted to make him his Slave or Vassal. For Amarath the third, quarrelling Mabomet the Crim-Tartar for a design to intercept Osmán-Begia, in his way from Perfia to Constantinople, authorized the said Osmán to war upon him: by whom the poor Crim and his two Sons, betrayed by some of his own Counsellors (corrupted with Turkish Gold) and a thrangled with a Bow-string; Iltas a Brother of the Crim, first thrown a Vassal to the Turk, put into the place; and over him the Turkish Beglerbeg or Basla, to command in chief. What hopes he hath of succeeding in the Turkish Empire, if the house of Ottoman should fall, hath been already taken into consideration, in our discourse upon that subject.

What the Revenue of this Prince is, it is hard to say; his Subjects having little Money, and living most upon the barter of their Cattle. But besides what he hath in Lands or Customs, and the 5000 Ducats yearly which he receives yearly from the Turk, he hath the rent of all the spoils which are got in the wars, and a Chèque for every Captive, for some two or three (whosoever taketh them) according unto their estates.

As for his power, what he can do in Horse, we have seen already; and as for Foot, and Ammunition, and other necessities, he is supplied with them by the Turk, (who doth sometimes excuse his quarrels: ) by whose alliance they have brought the Moscovites to some extremities. And upon confidence of the favour and protection of the Grand Seigneur, the Cham then being, upon the death of Stephen Babori, (whom Amarath the third, commended to the Crown of Poland) sent Embassadors to negotiate his Election to that Kingdom; and to induce them thereto, promised them in his Letters amongst other things, that their Pope should be his Pope, their Luther his Luther; and that rather than put them unto any charge to find his Table, he could live with Heretic-flesh. His Emballie entertained with Laughter, as it well deserved.

2. TARTARIA DESERTIA.

TARTARIA DESERTA is bounded on the West, with Precoepensis, and the Empire of Russia; on the East, with Antiquia, and Zagabai; from which last parted by the River Spæne, which falleth into the Caspian Sea about the middle of it, and with the great Lake of Kitay, from East to West; on the North, with the Syphic or frozen Ocean; and on the South, with part of the Euxine Sea, the Caucasian Mountains, and some part of the Caspian.

It took this name from the many Deserts which are in it; and is called also Asiatica, to difference it from Precoepensis, which is wholly in Europe: or because it taketh up the whole continent of Sarmatia Asiatica, according to the bounds therof laid down by Proclus, except some part heretofore incorporated to the Russian Empire.

The Country of it self sufficiently fruitful, if well manured; and were it in the hands of a laborious and industrious people, would yield large increase: as appears by the ill-husbandry of the Tartars, who sow nothing, yet without giving it any tillage, receiving very plentiful returns of both. But the Tartar being a nation that hath no Agriculture, and laugheth at Christians for living on the tops of Reeds, (for they call our bread ) neglect all that which is not of a rank Pasture for their Herds and Cattle: moving from one place to another, as the Graz falleth them; which maketh it so full of Deserts, and so empty of Towns as to deserve the name of Tartaria Deserta.

The People or Inhabitants of it are of several sorts, derived from three several Originals, and disposed of in three several parts. 1. The Samoyeds, dwelling towards the Northern Ocean, who are wholly Idolaters, now reckoned as a part of Zagabai, and there we shall hear further of them. 2. The Circassians, bordering on the Euxine, for the most part Christians; and 3. the Tartars, planted betwixt both, being all Mabometans. These again subdivided into several Tribes, which they call their Hordes: of which the most considerable are, 1. the Nagaian Tartars, 2. the Zavolbenes, 3. the Thumeneses, 4. the Kirgessii; besides the Hordes or Kingdoms of Caspian, and Afrachian, added unto the Empire of Russia, where described already; and others of iniquitous note, not here considerable.

But before we come to speak with these people in their several places, we must first look upon the whole Country, as presented to us under the name of Sarmatia Asiatica: bounded by Proclus as before, save that it did extend more Westwards; and was unknown to him in the Northern parts of it: now possessed by the Moscovites. So populous in the time of that Author, that he giveth us the names of forty several Nations which did then inhabit it, and of about as many Towns of good estimation. Of which there are but few or none remaining; and for the names of some of the principal of them, we shall have them presently.

Rivers of note next in it, 1. Merabius, 2. Rhombitus, the Greater, and 3. the Leis; 4. Antica, 5. Thebanis, 6. Plabii, 7. Thejris, 8. Corax, and 9. Varadan; all of them falling into the Euxine, and making Fens. 10. Vidoni, 11. Almatas, and 12. Rba, paying their Tributes to the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. Of these the principal is Rba, by the modern Latines called Volga; by the Tartars, Edi; rising in Russia, not far from the City of Mosco, (where we have described it.) Most memorable, besides the twenty Mouths or Channels, wherein it openeth into the Caspian, for a Medicinable and wholesome root growing on both sides thereof, which the Physicians call Rba, by the name of the River; and for Distillation sake, Rba Pontick, to difference it from Rubarbar, or Rba Barbarum, as of a different nature from it; this last being purgative, and the other more apt to bind. 13. Oba, a River unknown to Proclus, rising out of the Lake of Kitay, a Lake in bignets like the Sea, and full of many little Islands (most of them inhabited.) Which River at its first parting from this Lake, is said to be 8 miles breadth; and growing still bigger and bigger, emptieth it self at last in the Northern Ocean: the present boundary between the Russian, and the People in the North of this Country.

Principal Mountains of this part, 1. Corax, giving name unto the River issuing out of it, 2. Montes Hippici, extended towards the Caspian Sea. 3. Montes Ceramii, lying in the furthest parts heretofore (then known to my Author) to the North and East. 4. Caucasii, or Caucasi Montes, extended from the Euxine to the Caspian Seas; and parting Sarmatia Asiatica from Colibia, Iberia, and Albania. A chain of Hills of which Argilata faith, Acumene & Latitudine omnium maximæ, &c. that for height and breadth they are the greatest of the East; the tops whereof are lightened by the Sun beams in midnight till almost day-break, when it is dark night in the valleys beneath. Not passable for horse or foot (except they creep along by the Euxine shore) but at one place only, called Sarmatia Pylee, or the Gates of Sarmatia; by others named Caucasice Porte, from the Hills adjoining. Situate in the 51 degree of Latitudes, and not far from the Caspian Sea: but that so intricate and narrow, that very small force may keep it against strong Armies. So carefully did Almighty God in his Heavenly Providence, shut up this fierce and barbarous People, from the rest of Mankind, by such unfavourable Waters, and unpassable Mountains: not to be freed out of this Prison, till he thought good to use them, as the Executioners of his wrath and vengeance, for the punishment of sinful and impudent Nations. This said, we will consider those particular Nations, which before we named, and are now possessed of in their several places.

1. Opposite to the Precoepenses lie the CIRCASSIANS, extended from the Cimmerian Bosphorus and the Fens of Maeotis, towards the Eastern shores of the Euxine Sea for the space of 500 miles; and reaching 200 miles towards the North. The name imposed on them by the Tartars, whereas before they were called by Phrygia, Zygi, by some Writers, Zybi, conceived to be the Zinchi of Ptolemy.

The Country very fitly seated for Trade and Merchandize, as having a fair and large Sea-coast, with many Rivers opening into it (nine of those spoken of before, passing thorough these Tracts) and not a few capacious Bays, and commodious Havens. Of which the principal were Sinus Cercetius, or the Bay of Cercetis, Synda, and Bata, two known Havens, and specified by my Author with the adjunct of Portus. But these conveniences not much looked after by the present Inhabitants, who are more inclined to the Wars, than to Trades, or Merchandize. A Stout and Military People, trained to their Weapons from their Childhood, and sold as soon as trained to by unnatural Parents. For from these parts did the Mamelucks of Egypt fetch their first Original; and from hence supply themselves with a perpetual Seminary of Slaves and Souldiers, raised by degrees unto the highest dignities of that slavish Empire; And from these parts the Persian Sophies are supplied with their Coxswains, Basas, disciplined and instructed by them like the Turkish Janizaries.

The Christian Faith was here planted in the year 860. or thereabouts, by the Ministry of Cyrril (or Chiril) and Methodius; employed in that Service by the Patriarch of Constantinople. In which respect their Churches are of the Greek Communion, conforming thereto in Rites and Doctrine, and of the jurisdiction of that Patriarch: but differing from them very much in matters practical. For it is ordinary with these half Christians, not to baptize their Children till eight years old; to hear Divine Service standing without their Churches, into which they very seldom enter (especially the Gentlemen) till the fortieth, or (as some say) the sixtieth year of their age: dividing the whole course of their life between God and the Devil, in dedicating their youth unto Theft and Robbery, their old age (when they can no longer commit those villanies) to the difficult business of repentance.

Places of most observation amongst the Ancients, 1. Cimmeria, a Town and Promontory, so called from the Cimmerii, once the chief People of these parts, of whom more anon; situate on the very shore of the Bosphorus, from hence denominated. 2. Phanagoria, in old times a well-traded Empory; situate on a little Island raised out of the Sea, by the care and industry of the Greeks, who had here a Factory. 3. Apaturgus, by Pliny called Apaturus, memorable for a Temple of Venus surnamed Apaturia (which name the gave unto this place,) because (saith Strabo) when the Giants assaulted her, the craved help of Hercules, who slew them all one after another. 4. Grusa, by Ptolemy honoured with the title of Civitas, the Gargaza of Diodorus, now called S. George's, Oenuntia, near the mouth of the River Theysis, 6. Arza, more within the Land, which with 7 Ampacia hath the name of a City also. The names of their chief Havens we have seen before. But few of these, or any other mentioned by the Ancient Authors, being now visible in their ruins: the chief of those which are now extant, are 1. Looppa, 2. Contice; but of no great note.

The People anciently though divided into the several Tribes of the Thirfagete, Euge, Tarce, the Huas, Avanti, and Maeute, all noted Nations; besides the Coxaze, Zinchi, Tyrambe, Pfelis, and others as obscure as they were, better known by the name of Cimmerians, in which those several Tribes concentrated. Descended in the right of that common original, from Gomer the Son of Japhet, first planted in the Mountainous places of Albani: his Posterity known by the name of Gomerii, afterwards Cimmerii, left there a memorial of themselves in the Mountains called Cimmerii. But that Country proving both too barren, and too narrow for them, some of them passed into Phrygia Major, where they built the City Cimmeris, not unknown to Pliny, in whose time it was extant: and others in some Tract of time, keeping the Euxine on their left hand, fixed themselves in these parts, here giving name to the Town and Promontory Cimmerion, to the Cimmerian Bosphorus, and generally to all the people descended of them. From these particularly, as the stout and valiant Nation of the Cimbri, do derive their Pedigree; so from these and the Children of Moseph, Mago, and Tubal, the Sarmatians both of Europe and Asia, the Moscovites, and perhaps the Sybiens, are to fetch their Original: all of them great and puissant Nations; and all involved promiscuously in the name of Sybiants. Renowned for no other action more than the memorable Expedition, which they made into Media in the Greater, and Lydia in the Lesser Asia: the Cimmerians by themselves alone, or by them as principals the rest of these Sarmatians in a body together as a Sybian People. Distressed with want, or to disband their small Country of superfluous multitudes, these Cimmerii in the time of Nabulassar, or Salmansassar, King of Syria, communicating their design with the rest of the Sybiens, to enlarge their quarters; holding along the coast of the Euxine Sea, and passing thorough the Country of Calchis, first seized on some parts of Pontus and Phaflagonia. Where having fortified the Promontory on which Sinope was after built; and leaving there their Carriages, and the weakest of their Train with sufficient guards, they marched into Lydia, reputed (as it was indeed) for a wealthy Region. There they possessed themselves of Sardis, the Royal City; and after of the rest of the Country, or the most part of it, Ardes the Son of Giges, who then reigned in Lydia, not being able to withstand them. Both sides being wearied with long War, and grown more pliant by degrees unto one another (as in like case betwixt the Saxons and the Danes) it proved no difficult matter for Halyattes, the Grand-child of Ardes, to command the business: aligning to the Cimmerians all those parts of his Dominions, which lay beyond the Rhyndacus; and settling his Lydians in the rest. By this transaction there were so good correspondences betwixt the Nations, that when Cyxares, King of the Medes, invaded the Country of these Cimmerians, under the colour of the invasion which the Sybiens had made in Media, Halyattes did espouse the quarrel, and appeared in one aid. In following times, growing into confidence of one another, and mixt in Marriages and Blood, they became one People; or at least passed not under the contempt of strangers, or the name of Aliens. Such end had this most notable notable expedition of these Cimmerians; not much remembered after this, for the like undertakings. Yet here they held their own, though in other names, governed by many petty Princes, but all associated with Mithridates against the Romans: that King being so great amongst them, that his Son Machabes having married into some of their Families, was made King of Bosphorus. But Machabes having made his peace with Lucullus, the Romans never looked this way. Nor hear we much of them in succeeding times, till the invasion of the Tartars: by whom subdued, they acknowledge at first the Great Cham for their Sovereign Lord: whose power declining, they have successively been subject to the Crim-Tartar, the Turk, and Moscovite; but most commonly to the Crim-Tartar, as their nearest neighbour, and most able to hurt them. And him they furnished on command with 50000 horse for the Grand Seigneur's Service: yet so that they supply the Persian with his Coxswal-Bassas, and sometimes serve under him for pay, as they do under any which will entertain them. Governed like the Sufflers, by their several Commonalties: yet so, that every Commonality hath some principal man (which the Sufflers have not) whom they call Mosfey, (that is Dukes) to direct and order them.

2. Betwixt these and the River Volga dwell the ZAVOLHENSES, one of the greatest Hords or Tribes of all the Tartars; and therefore called Horda Magna. Of these the Crimis, or Precoepenses were a Coffling only, proceeding out of this great Swarm or Nest of Hornets, though afterwards they became their Masters. Of the Country or the People we say nothing here, having sufficiently spoken of both already. Their chief Town hath the name of Bolgar, situate on the River Volga, and from thence so named: Volgar and Bolgar differing but little in Orthography, and not much in found.

This Country, as I take it by the situation, should be that which Ptolemy calleth Mithridatis Regio: whether so called in honour of him by the Princes of the neighbouring Cimmerians, with whom he had contracted alliance: or that he had made any Conquests there; or from some other Prince of the same name, I determine not. And in this Tract were those two Pillars, advanced unto the honour of Alexander, in Ptolemy called Calumne Alexandri, in whose time they stood without defacement: there being also Altars erected to him, or in memory of him, near the Banks of Tanais, occurring in the same Author by the name of Are Alexandri. Which probably occasioned the error of Qu. Curtius, who brings Alexander in pursuit of the Scythian War, as far as Tanais: whereas it is apparent by the course of his Actions, that he never got beyond the River Jaxartes; distant from Tanais no less than 2000 miles.

This Tribe first governed by its own King, whom they called Ulu-Cham, or the Great Cham, was in the year 1566. subdued by the Crim-Tartar, and made subject to him. Afterwards conquered by Basilus the Great Duke of Moscow, who thereupon assumed the Title of King of Bolgar: which his Successors still preserve, with the Town itself: well garisoned to keep open the whole course of the River Volga, by which they manage the great Trade of the Caspian Sea. But for the main body of this people, they returned again to their obedience to the Crim, as being a Lamb of the same body with him; and are subject unto his Commands: though by reason of their neighbourhood to the Moscovite, and commerce with that Nation, they frame themselves both to their language, habit, and behaviour.

3. East of the Zavolhenses, on the other side of the Volga, dwell the NOIHACENSES, or NAGAIANS, spreading as far as the borders of Zagathay, and declining Southward towards the Caspian Sea, and the Montes Hippici: Accompted the best men of war of all the Tartars, but more fierce and cruel than the rest; void of all Arts, not having, or contemning Money, or the use of Corn. Horse-flesh and Mares milk their best diet: the flesh either roasted by the Sun, or heated by continual hanging at the Saddle-bow. And with such cheer (nor worse nor better) did Acim Can, one of the Princes of this Tribe, entertain Jenkinson and other English men in their travels to the Caspian, from the River Volga. Their chief Town, if possibly it deserve that name, is called Scharajirzik, the Residence of one of their Princes; and the next, Seliktur, where the said Jenkinson found the Cham, as in the prime place of his abode. The Government is by several Mosfey, the Heads or Chiefs, no doubt, of their several Clans: agreeing well enough together against the Moscovite, whom they infect with frequent inroads, and put him to the charge of continual Garrisons, at Casan, Afrachan, and Viaska. Their Wars for the most part only Predatory, rather to get some present booty, than out of any hope to enlarge their Dominion; and therefore commonly pacified, and sent home with Presents. The Great Duke is so good a Statesman, as to think the expense of Money cheaper than that of Blood; especially when he hath to deal with such an Enemy, who hath neither any Town of consequence, or fixt place of dwelling, and consequently nothing to be got but blows. Their Mosfey, formerly more in number, were of late times reduced unto three; of which he of Scharajirzik was the chief: to whose direction, and appointment (especially in matters which concerned the publick) the other two do commonly submit themselves.

4. Betwixt these Nagaians, and the Circassians, lie those Tribes which they call the KIRGESSI, spreading as far as to the mouths or influx of the River Volga: but intermixt with the Heflites, and Bashurides, two other of the Tartarian Tribes, but of less power. Their life, for the most part in continual motion, removing with their Wives and Families from one place to another; and governing themselves in their removes, by the light of the Pole-star. Partly Mahometan, partly Gentile, but the Gentiles make the greater number, not burying their dead bodies, as in other places, but hanging them upon a Tree, though they sink again: certain enough that they will be devoured or sweetened, before they return back to the same Station. Much reverence yet they give their Priests, by whom sanctified and besprikled in their publick meeting, with a certain mixture, compounded of Blood, Milk, Earth, and Cow-dung, a most sweet Confection, but good enough for them that desire no better. And yet with these the Moscovite is fain to hold fair compliance, and to send them every year some Presents for fear they should joyn with the Nagaians; or otherwise disturb him in his Caspian Trade down the River Volga.

5. The THUMENSES or THUMEN TARTARS lie more North than any of these Tartarians; having on the South, the Zavolhenses, and the Territory of Viaska in the Empire of Russia. A warlike People, and living near a dangerous neighbour; for which cause they do not straggle to abroad in petty companies, as the others do, but keep together in great bodies: For the most part much delighted in Negromancy, and Conjurations. In which the Devil so befools them, that he suffereth them to raise Temples; and sometimes, by Diabolical illusions, to defeat their Enemies. The only Hord of all Deserta, which still continue in obedience to their natural Lord, the Great Cham of Carbay (if such Cham there be.) And unto these we may adjoin the Molgans.

Molgomoxans, all Gentiles, and the most barbarous of all: living in Caves, and feeding upon Worms, and Mice, and Serpents, and such other vermin as would be poison unto any but such Molgomoxans, who are more poisonous than those Creatures.

These Hords, together with the Kingdoms of Casan, and Afrachan and such of the Russian Provinces as lie on the East of Tanis, and the River of Duina, make up that Country which anciently passed under the name of Sarmatia Asiatica: inhabited originally by the Descendants of Gomer, Mefech, Tubal, Magog, the Sons of Japhet, spreading themselves more Northwards as they grew in numbers, out of Albania, Iberia, Colechia, and the Pontick, or Cimerian Nations. Divided into the Tribes or Families of the Olande, Gerri, Samocolchi, Socani, Seci, Scimuite, Agarite, Merdi, Canapfeni, Chenides, Basilici, Hyperborei, Hippobagi, and others of as little note: these last so called from their eating of Horfes, which diet they have left unto their Successors. So like in manners and conditions, to the neighbouring Scythians, that they passed commonly by that name; and by that name are memorable for the great expedition by them made into Asia the Greater, at such time as the Cimmerians fell into Asia Minor. For passing without opposition thorow the Sarmatian Streights, where they might have been easily kept out; and leaving behind them the more barren Country of Albania, they fell into Media: where they were encountered (but victorious) by Phraortes, then King of the Medes: Who finding that he was not able to remove them by force, assayed it by cunning; and first persuaded them to look towards the South, as into richer Countries, and more like to yield them full content. Hereupon, full of Prey and Presents, they marched towards Aegypt, but were met in Syria by Phamiticus the Aegyptian King, who heard of their coming; and thought it best to entertain them on the way, and not to bid them welcome at home to his great cost. Out-lying the Median (as of the two richer Prince) he loaded them with gifts and treasures, and so sent them back again into Media, from whence they came: where for many years they afflicted that People, and the neighbouring Provinces, doubling their Tributes, and using all kind of Infolencies: till in the end, Cyxares, the Son and Successor of Phraortes, acquainting some of his most faithful Subjects with his design, caused the better part of them to be plentifully feasted, made them drunk, and flew them; recovering thereby the possession of his whole Estate. Afterwards imitated by the English in their Heckide laughter. Such of them as escaped this blow, and were not willing to be subject to the Kings of Media (as many of them were) were suffered to return home by the same way they came; whereas at their coming, they found foul work made by their Wives and their Slaves; the story whereof we had when we were in Russia. After this we hear nothing of them in the stories of the Greeks, and Romans, unless those Amazons, who attended their Queen Ibalgithi, when she belov'd a visit on Alexander, were rather of these Sarmatian Amazons, than of those of Pontus and Thermodon, as I think they were: the nearness of their dwelling to Hircania, in which place they found him, inducing me to this opinion. But possible enough it is, (though it be not certain) that some of these Sarmatian Tribes, though by other names, hearing of the successes of the Huns, Avars, and other barbarous Nations, which made havock of the Roman Empire, might join themselves unto them, and make up their numbers: those Nations being else too small to compound such Armies, as by them were brought into the field against the Romans, without such like helps. What their Estate hath been since subdued by the Tartars, hath been shewn already.

3. ZAGATHAT.

ZAGATHAT is bounded on the East, with the Mountain Imaus, by which it is parted from Cathay; on the North, with the main Scythic, or Erax Ocean; on the West, with Tartaria Deserta, from which separated by the River Socane, and the Lake of Kitay; and on the South, with the Caspian Sea, and the River Oxus, by which divided from the Empire of Persia. So called from Zagathay, a brother of one of the Great Chams, on whom it was conferred for his better maintenance; the Scythia intra montem Imaum of the ancient Writers.

The Country spreading out so far, on all sides, as before appeared, comprehendeth all those Provinces and tracts of ground, which anciently were called, 1. The Country of the Sace, 2. Sogdiana, with 3. Zagathay, specially so called; and 4. Tircheshan, included anciently in the name of Scythia intra montem Imaum; and 5. the Terra Incognita, which Ptolemy makes to be the Northern boundary of that part of Scythia. By taking a survey of all which Particulars, we shall find the temper of the whole.

1. SACE, or the Country of the Sacani, is bounded on the East, with the Mountain Imaus; on the West, with Sogdiana; on the North with Zagathay, properly and specially so called; on the South, with the River Oxus, by which parted from Bactria. So called from the Sace, the Inhabitants of it; but the reason of their name I find not.

The Country anciently either barren, or ill manured; full of vast Forests, wide Deserts, and the like uninhabitable places, few or no Cities in it, and not many Villages (Civitates autem non habent, as my Author hath) the People living most part in Caves, or otherwise wandering up and down with their droves of Cattel; Called for that reason Nomades by some ancient Writers. The name not proper to these only, but common to all those who followed the like roving life, as the Sarmatians, wild Arabians, Saracens, and the Inhabitants of Lydia and Nubidia in Africa. Only one fortified place they had, which from the materials of it had the name of Turris Lapidea, (ῥαβδὸς λίθου, in the Greek) or the Calliope Stones; Part hereof being peopled for the most part by Camels; or travelling only with those Creatures, had the name of Camelorum Regio.

Divided it was anciently into many Tribes, the Carate, and Comari, near the River Jaxartes; the Moggeta, and Gomede, near the hills called Alfatanus; the Eyles, and Grynei, more within the Country. All joined in one by the name of Sace; and by that name made a very fortunate Progress into Armenia (to which they had an easy passage by the Northern Banks of the Caspian Sea) and therein gave name unto the Province called Sacafena. But proceeding into Cappadocia, and there slain by the Persians in the midst of their Feallings, they left there also some remembrance of their name, in an annual Festival called Sace; celebrated by the Persians, in memorial of their good success in the war against them. Such as flaid here, being overcome by Cyrus the first Persian Monarch, did go good service to that Prince, that Amorges the King of these Sace, is said to have refused him from the hands of the Scythians, by whom otherwife he had been slain, or taken Prisoner. In the declining of that Kingdom, they were subdued by Alexander at the end of his Scythian, and Sogdian wars; who hereabouts, by Cobartanes a noble Persian, was presented with a Bevy of Beautiful Ladies; one of which was that Bargine, whom he made his Wife, and had by her that Hercules,

Hercules, whom Polyperchon and his Faction proclaimed King of Macedon. Not memorable in the following times for any thing which they did or suffered; as they have been made by the opinion or mistake of others; who building Casles in the Air, will needs derive the Saxons (our famous Ancestors) from this Original: as if they were called Saxons, quasi Saca Sones, or the Sons of the Sace. A fancy in my poor conceit, of no ground at all. For either the number of these Sace, when they left these parts, must be great, or little. If little, how can we conceive it possible, they should force their way through those valliant Nations of both Sarmatia's, who to the last maintained their Liberties and Estate against the Romans? If great enough to force their passage (for stout and provident Nations use not to give passage to great Armies, but they pay dear for it) how can we think it possible they should be shut up in a corner of Germany, betwixt the River Albis and the Cimbrick Chersonese? The Saxons then, whatsoever they were, were no Sons of the Saces; and what in likelihood they were, hath been elsewhere shewn.

2. SOGDIANA hath on the East, the Sace; on the North and West, Zagathay specially called; on the South, the River Oxus, parting it from Margiana. So called from a chain of Mountains named Montes Sogdii, being the chief of all this Country, though of themselves a spur or branch of the Mountain Caucasus.

The Country indifferently fruitful, and very rich in Pasturage, because very well watered. For besides Oxus, and Jaxartes, which are common unto them and others; they have many Rivers of their own. The principal of which, 1. Dynus, and 2. Arazates, both navigable, and capable of very good Ships; both also running down the hills with a headlong course, and passing through the Champion Country, empty themselves at last in the Lake called Oxiana; as is affirmed by Ammianus, but as Ptolemy faith, into Jaxartes.

Places of most consideration are, 1. Drepfa, the Metropolis or Mother-City of this People. By Pliny called Panda, by Solinus Darapsa, situate on the River Oxus. 2. Oxiana, on the same River, and from thence denominated. 3. Mareca, on the same River also. 4. Alexandria, called for distinction sake, Alexandria Oxiana, which name declareth both the founder and the situation. 5. Alexandria, for the same cause of distinction, named Alexandria ultima: either because the last City which he built in these parts; or because it lay furthest off on the borders of the Scythians, against whose invasions or irruption it was said to be built. 6. Tribarra, one of the chief hereof in the time of Ammianus Marcellinus. 7. Cyrcabata, more memorable, and not less ancient, than any of those named before, by Qu. Curtius called Cyrcopolis, built by Cyrus, to fortifie his borders against the Scythians. It held out against the great Macedonian, a long time; and he himself coming nigher to the Walls than discretion would permit an ordinary General, had such a blow on the neck with a Stone, that he fell to the ground, his Eyes swimming in his head, and his whole Army giving him for slain: but reviving, he took the Town by a mine, and levelled it with the ground, in revenge of so great a danger.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Oxydrace, and Candari, dwelling at the foot of the Sogdian Mountains; the Oxiani, and Cheromii, near the banks of Oxus; the Jafsi, and Tachori, near the River Jaxartes; the Drepfiani in the East parts bordering on the Sace; whose chief City was Drepfa: descended from their fevral roots but all called Sogdians. Conquered by Alexander, not without danger to his own person, as before was said; at the solicitation of Spitamenes a noble Persian, it rebelled again. Who being suppressed, and the Country in some measure quieted, Arimazes, a Native of the Province, renewed the war. Who followed with 30000 men, encamped upon the top of an hill, in a place of such notable advantage, that Alexander, neither by force nor fair words, could get him out of it. He therefore dealt with 3000 of his youngest and most active men, on the promise of great reward, to climb the hill; and without any noise to show themselves at the back of the Enemy: Which having performed with the loss of 30 of their company, Alexander sent one Cophes to Arimazes; to let him know that the whole Army of Macedon was at his back; who terrified with what he saw, more with what he feared, gave up the place, and was scourged and crucified for his labour. So necessary in the Art of warfare is a piece of wit. After this time, it saw the same alterations and change of fortunes, as the Persians did; till they were conquered by the Tartars, unto whom still subject.

3. ZAGATHAT specially called, is bounded on the East, with Cathay; on the West, with Turchistan, and part of the Caspian Sea; on the North, with the Country of the Samedes, the Terra Incognita of the Ancients; on the South, with the Sace, and Sogdiana. Anciently part of Scythia intra montem Imaum; and took this new name from Zagathay, the first Prince hereof, since the time of the Tartars.

The Country reasonably fruitful, but not so rich in the natural temper of the soil, as the industriousness of the people, more civil far than any other of the Tartars, studious of good Letters, lovers of Arts, as well ingenious as Mechanick, well skill'd in Manufactures, and very seldom without the concurrence of foreign Merchants. Populous, and well-fortified with Towns and Villages; both for their own more handsome dwelling and the entertainment of others.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. Jaxartes, now called Chesel, the principal of all this Country: great of it self, but made much greater by the waters of 2. Duix, another River of good note, rising out of the Mountain called Norofus, and falling with many others into Jaxartes; mixt with those streams they are dischannell'd in the Caspian Sea. 3. Jarius, 4. Polytimetes, falling into Oxus. Others there are whose names I find not in my Authors, descending from the Mountains of this Northern Region, which are great and many: As viz. 1. Norofus, spoken of before. 2. Alpisi, on the North of that. 3. Toporus, more unto the North. 4. The Mountains called Sychi, more Northward still. 5. Those called Anareti, besides 6. Imaus, of most name, but common unto Cathay as well as to Zagathay, and there we shall hear further of it.

Cities of most observation in it, 1. Aspabota, the only Town ascribed by Ptolemy to this Country, and by him honoured with the title of Civitas. 2. Zabafsi, of less antiquity, but of greater estimation at the present time. Situate on the mouth of the River Oxus (now called Abis) on the brink of the Caspian; and much frequented by the Merchants of foreign Countries, chiefly from India, and Cathay. 3. Maracandia, ancient, and of fame, but placed by Ptolemy (why I know not) amongst the Cities of Bactria: differing herein from the common and received opinion of other Authors, by whom this City is affirmed to be on the North side of Oxus, and consequently not within that Province. Made good by Spitamenes, (who having delivered the Traitor Bessus into the hands of Alexander, revolted from him) against the Macedonian Army; by which besieged under the command of Menendus. But Menendus being slain, with some of his Souldiers, Spitamenes escaped hence to Bactria, where he was slain by his own Wife, and his head presented ferred to the Conquerour. Here was it also that Alexander, being then Master of the Town, in a drunken fit slew his dear friend Clytus; who at the battle of Granicus had saved his life, by receiving a blow which was aimed at him. It was afterwards called Samarband, the Seat-Royal of Tamerlane, by whom enriched with all the spoils and treasures he got in the Wars; there being brought hither from Damascus only (and by that one influence we may guess at the rest) 8000 Camels laden with the choicest movables. Still the chief Reliance of the Chams of Zagathay, but far short of that magnificence which once it held. 4. Bichend, of no Antiquity, nor of such great name as the Regal Samarband, but at this time of greater wealth: situate somewhat in the mid-land, but populous, and a well-traded Town. 5. Azara, memorable for being made the Rendezvous of that mighty Army, which Tamerlane raised against the Turks, consisting in the total of 120000 fighting men when it was at the biggest. 6. Maranis, from which place the said Tamerlane, having received his aids from China, began his march.

These Tartars, called Zagathayans, by the name of their Country, are of a different government from that of the Great Cham of Cathay, though subject to him at the first, and have to be even since the time of Zaicham or Batma, the third great Cham; who gave it unto Zagathay, a younger Son, whence it had the name. To Zagathay succeeded Og, by some called Zain Cham; (the Father of Tamerlane) a peaceable and quiet Prince, who rather studied to preserve than enlarge his Empire. But Tamerlane being of a fierce and more warlike nature, made the first proof of his valour and good fortune against the Moscovite (for spoiling a City which had put it self under his protection) whom he overthrew with the slaughter of 25000 Foot, and 15000 of his Horse. Moved with this notable exploit, and the hopes of greater, Gim Cham, the Great Emperour of the Tartars gave him to Wife his only Daughter, and therewithal declared him his Heir apparent. Encouraged and enabled with this advancement, he first brake down the Wall of China, encountered with the King thereof, overcame him in battle, and imposed on him the sum of 300000 Crowns of yearly Tribute. Having left things quiet at his back, and taking with him a great part of the Forces of China, he advanced forwards against Bajazer, the fourth King of the Turks; of the greatness of whose growing Empire he began to be jealous. Passing along the left hand shores of the Calpian Sea, and so through Albania, and the rest of the Provinces which lay in his way (which he took and conquered as he went) he came at last into Asia Minor: where near the City of Sebacia, he encountered with Bajazer: vanquished him, slew 200000 of his men, and carried him away captive in an Iron Cage. Restoring those Princes disposessed by Bajazer unto their Estates, and taking to himself all the Turkish Provinces in Anatolia; he bestowed a private visit on Constantinople: which seen, he marched towards Syria, subdued both that Province and the Kingdom of Aegypt, then possessed by the Mamlukes; visited Hierusalem, and did honour to the Holy Sepulchre; returned by Babylon, and won it, and with it the whole Countries of Babylonia and Affria. And taking Perfia in his way impatronized himself of that Kingdom also; and such parts of India, as either lay near Perfia, or his own Dominions; now made the Sovereign Lord of all the Regions and Kingdoms in both Asia's, excepting India; for which the rich Kingdom of Aegypt, may be put in balance. Come home at last to Samarband, he there died in peace. A Prince of strong body, but lovely lineaments, his eyes bearing in them such rays of Majesty, that ordinary men could scarce endure to look upon them. His hair long, contrary to the custom of the Mahometans, (for the most part shaved on their heads) for which he pretended a descent from Samson. Perfect in the Arabian Learning, and a lover of all learned men; a hater of Idols and Polytheism; and a great friend to the Christians. More fortunate in the conquering of so many Kingdoms, than in laying any sure foundation to maintain his conquest. For by holding his Seat Royal in Samarband, Cambalu, and others the chief Cities of Cathay, he gave the remote Provinces the opportunity of returning to their former Governments; and by excelling his Estates amongst his Children, and kindred, this mighty flood which had so quickly overflowed both Asia's, returned in very little time within its own proper and original banks. Even Zagathay it self divided from the Empire of Cathay, had its King apart (hardly acknowledging the great Cham for the Lord in Chief) the most considerable of whom was that Saba, who in the new beginnings and untidelines of the Sophian Empire, invaded Perfia; but instead of recovering that Kingdom into the power of the Tartars, he lost some Provinces of his own: Hircania, Margiana, and some part of Bactria, being first subdued by Aba the late Sultan. Nothing fine memorable, that I meet with, in the affairs of this part of the Empire of Tartary.

4. TURCHESTAN is bounded on the East, with Zagathay specially so called; on the West, with the River Zeane, parting it from Deserts on the North, with those deserts which Ptolemy blindeth under the name of Terra Incognita; and on the South, with the Calpian Sea. So called from the Turks, some of which people when they left their first Seats near the Fens of Mosin, settled in this Country, and here still continue.

The Country as defere ill planted, as the rest of Tartary, nor to much out of any defect in the soil it self, as in the humour of the people: who though originally Turks, yet do compose themselves unto the lives of the Scythian or Tartarian Nomades, neglecting tillage, and abiding in no place longer than in that place affords them pasturage for their Cattel: huge herds of which they keep as their greatest treasure, but more to cloath their backs with the skins, than to fill their bellies with the flesh.

Amongst the Rivers of most note we may reckon, 1. Rhymanus, mentioned by Ptolemy, which by the position of it in the 91 degree of Longitude, seems to be of this Tract. It riseth out of the Mountains called Montes Rhymanici, giving name to the River, or taking name from it. 2. Ardoek, not known by that name amongst the ancients, and whether known at all or not, I am not able to say. Shaping its course towards the North, and weary of so cold a Climate, and such barbarous people; after a long and swift course of a thousand miles, it hideth it self under the ground for five hundred more; but breaking out again, and finding little or no hope of a better fortune, loath it self for ever in the great Lake of Kitay.

To look for Towns amongst a people which delight not in settled houses, were a labour lost: yet I once find ascribed unto them, the principal, but of no great note, 1. Calba, and 2. Ocerra. Then there is 3. Cristina, situate on or near the Lake of Kitay, never without the company of Russian and Tartarian Merchants: the Russian sailing to it by the River Ob; and the Zagathayans Tartars travelling to it by Land. By these two Nations more people, to maintain their Traffic, than by the Turcomans themselves, in whose Land it standeth.

These Turcomans are of the Posterity of some of those Turcs, who wanting Room, or otherwise oppressed with want, forsook their ancient dwelling near the Fens of Mosin, Mosin, and the Coasts of the Euxine Sea, to seek new seats, Anno 844. That their whole body settled here, and from hence made their conquest of Perfia, as some very indolent men are of opinion, I by no means grant. For when the Sultan of Perfia, having by the means of Tangulix and those Mercenary Turks whom he invited to his aid, obtained the Victory; and thought it fit for his affairs to detain them longer in his Service: it is said he shut up the River Araxes, to hinder them from returning to their habitations. The shutting up of which River, and fortifying against them all the passages and bridges off, had not served his turn, if the Turks had come from this place, for then he must have manned against them the River Oxus, and such as lay betwixt them and him in the common road. Nor is it probable, that the Turcomans dwelling in this Province, on the East side of the River Volga, would undertake the fording of that dangerous and violent Water; and force themselves a way thorow Albania and Armenia, with no greater numbers, than 3000 men, which was the whole strength that they carried with them. So that it is not to be doubted, but that they came first into Perfia out of Turcomania, and not out of Turchestan: and probable enough, that when they first left their own abode, and came into the Northwest shores of the Calpian Sea, they might there divide themselves. Some of which leaving that Sea on the left hand, and passing thorow the Sarmation or Albanian Streights, made their way into Armenia, and those parts of Iberia, which from them are now called Turcomania. The residue keeping that Sea on the right hand, and crossing the Volga, where they found the passage most easie for them, settled themselves in these parts of Scythia which they found less peopled, now from them named Turchestan. Some of which hearing of the good success of their Country-men in the Conquest of Perfia, might afterward join with them to assure that purchase. Governed hence their first coming hither, by the Chiefs of their former Clans, whom they honour with the title of Chams; but all of them Tributaries and Vassals of the Cham of Zagathay.

5. That part of the Kingdom of Zagathay, which anciently passed under the name of TERRA INCOGNITA, and was accounted the Northern limit of Scythia intra Imanus, hath on the South, Turchestan, and part of Zagathay, strictly and specially so called: extending Northwards to the Scythick or Frozen Ocean, and bounded on the West, with the River Ob.

The Inhabitants of this Northern Tract are now called by the name of Samgyeds; neither the people nor the Country known to the ancient Romans; and indeed neither of them without the knowing. The men black-haired, naturally hardihood, and not to be discerned from women. Old from the women wear a long Lock down to their ears. Clad from the head to the feet in Deer-skins, or Seal-skins, with the hairy side outwards; (nothing more nice in that than the other Tartars.) Their kind of life more rude than theirs, if more rude may be, ranging from place to place, without any propriety of house or dwelling; the leader of each Company their Priest, whom they call their Papa, who at every one of their Removes is to offer Sacrifice. Idolaters they are all, and most of them Wichers; especially such as live most towards the East, destroy their Idols, and rob them of the skins of Beavers, black Foxes, and Sables, wherewith those Idols are set forth to the publick view: but beslow on them greater heats in a good Fire, into which they commonly use to cast them.

These Zagathayan Provinces, with those of Margiana, and Bactria, before described, made that part of Scythia, which anciently was called Scythia intra montem Indum: though in the time of Ptolemy, when Margiana, Bactria, Sace, and Sogdiana, were reckoned as Provinces of the Kingdom of Perfia, this Scythia was retrained within narrower bounds, and comprehended only Turchestan and the Special Zagathay. Inhabited, besides the several Nations dwelling in the four Perfian Provinces, by many fierce and savage Tribes, as the Alani, Alamof, Sambeni, and Massei; towards Terra Incognita; the Tedjager, and Afioze, near the Mountain Imanus; the Jaxartes on the banks of the River so called; and the Mologue, not far off; the Zrarte, and Sajones, near the Mountains Alani; the Galdathophagi, or Milk-eaters, more towards the East; the Taporei, and the Syebi, by the hills so named: and many others not material to be here remembered. All now united under the general name of Tartars, by whom first subdued.

And now we are at last come to Scythia, truly so named; Sarmatia Europæa and Asiatica being called so only by way of participation and resemblance; because the Inhabitants thereof had so much in them of the manners and conditions of those natural Scythians. Here therefore we intend to speak something of them, their Name, Antiquity, Dispositions, Customs, and the most memorable Actions relating to them, as far as we can go by the light of story.

First, for the name, the Graecian Fables have derived it from one Scyber, the Son of Hercules, begotten by him on a Mountie, half Woman, half Viper. The Grammarians ἀνὴρ ἡμιγυνή, signifying to be fierce and angry; whence it is said of the Jewish Peritians, who failed to be seen of men, Σαυδοραϊστικῶς, that they looked with a fower, fierce, and a disfigured Countenance. Geopius Becanus doth derive it rather from the Dutch word Sebuten, signifying to shoot: agreeable enough to the custom and exercise of the Scythians, who are observed by Herodotus, Pliny, Lucian, and other of the ancient Writers, to be very good Archers. But that the word Sebuten signifieth the same in the ancient Scythick; or that the High-Dutch was originally the Tongue of the Scythians, will not so easily appear.

Letting that pass therefore as a matter not to be insisted, let us look on the Antiquity of these Scythian Nations: and we shall find it to be great, if not greater of all. Scytharum gens semper antiquissima. Thus the Syrian were of all others, the most ancient people: was received for an Oracle, in the clear ages of the world; and so resolved by way of Verdict, when in great Controversie touching the Antiquity of that Nation, was to be determined, betwixt the Aegyptian and the Scythian, who contended for it. And this hath passed with such a general approbation, that it is not now to be disputed. In which regard I am so far of the judgment of Becanus in that particular, as to conceive that the Countries lying on the North of the Mount Caucasus (on which the Ark is thought most probably to have rested) were peopled by the Sons of Noah before they travelled towards the West, or fell themselves on building the Tower of Babel. We had else no doubt heard somewhat amongst the Antiquaries, of the settling of some of those Adventurers in these Northern Regions; when giving off that enterprise, and falling upon new Plantations, they either went themselves, or sent forth their Colonies into all places of the world. But of any such Plantations, we cry quidem, not one word say they. Nor can it probably be supposed that Zoroaster, the King of Bactria, could have raised 400000 fighting men out of that one Province (though some of the adjoining Provinces were took into the reckoning) in those early days, in which he did encounter Ninus the great Affrian; had the Babrians, and the rest of these Scythian Nations, been but a Cything as it were of some second swarm, and not cœval with the rest. But besides these presumptions we have other proofs: viz. An old and constant tradition on this side the Mountains, that the greatest Vineyard of Margiana was of Noah's planting; and 2 the affirmation of Portius Cato, (though one of the Writers of Frier Ammian) in Scythia Saga renatum martiale genus, that mankind was repaired in these parts of Scythia, so called from Sabatinus Saga, an Armenian King, whose Dominions did extend thus far. So that I look upon it as a matter of strong presumption, if not demonstrably concludent, that these people were of the first Plantation which was made after the Flood; before the rest of the world was peopled by the Confusion of Languages: Scythiarum gens semper antiquissima, could not else hold good.

As for their dispositions, and natural inclinations, they are said by Trogus, or his Epitomator Justine, to be Gens laboribus & bellis aspera. "A Nation patient of labours and fierce in War"; of bodily strength immense; and valiant; yet to most Matters of their affections, that they made no further use of their greatest victories than the augmentation of their fame. Thence they esteemed the greatest crime, and that they punished so severely, that their flocks and herds might and did safely wander from one place to another, without fear of stealing. In them they placed their greatest wealth, feeding themselves with the Milk thereof, and making their Rayment of the Skin. Silver and Gold they contemned as much as it was coveted by others; there being no desire of Riches where there was no use. Mum, and Tum, those common Barretours, and authors of debate amongst other men, were not known amongst them; and therefore did not care for tillage, or made any inclosures nor troubled themselves with the care of building. But putting their Wives and Children upon Wains, or Waggon, covered with Hides against the weather, they removed from one place to another, no longer staying upon one than they found grass and herbage to sustain their Cattel. So just in all their actions that they needed not the restraint of Laws; and had attained to such an eminent degree of humane perfection, as not to covet. In a word, that moderation which the Greeks endeavoured to attain unto by the help of Learning and Philosophy, was to these so natural, that the ignorance of Vice did as much contribute to their Welfare, as the knowledge of Vertue. Such are the ancient Scythians affirmed to be. And being such, it was a wonder that the great Monarchs of the world, who had wealth at will, should make war upon them amongst whom there was nothing to invite an Army, or reward a Conquerour. Yet either on desire of glory, or to add unto the former multitudes over whom he reigned, they were first invaded by Cyrus the great Persian Monarch: who quarrelling with Tomyris Queen of the Massegetes, a warlike Nation, inhabiting on both sides of the River Oxus, discomfited her Army, and slew her Son Spargapises, who commanded it. In revenge whereof, the Queen, having in a second battle obtained the Victory, and took Cyrus prisoner, is said to have cut off his head, and cast it into a bowl of blood, with this scornful taunt, Satis te sanguine quem sitiisti. Now drink thy fill of blood which thou hast so thirsted. But others tell us otherwise of the success of this fight. By whom it is reported that the Horse of Cyrus being disordered on the sight of some Elephants, which came from India to her aid, and himself dangerously wounded, the Scythians had won the victory but for the coming in of Amorges King of the Sacians, (who of a conquered enemy was become his Confederate: ) by whom he was refused, and by the 20000 fresh men which he brought with him, obtained the honore of the day, though long he lived not to enjoy it, dying not long after of the wounds he had received. With Alexander they are said to begin the war, as loath to be behind land with him; arming themselves upon the building of Alexandria ultima, to fear their borders, which they conceived rather intended for a curb to hold them than, than for a bridle to keep them in. But being repulsed, and wise enough to suffer what they could not hinder, they fled for peace, and had it granted; Alexander being called away by the revolt of the Babrians, a matter of more consequence than these Scythian brabbles. With Alexander's Successors they had nothing to do, nor with the Persian Kings of the Parthian Race, the Parthians being their Allies, and of Scythian blood. And for the Romans, it is well observed by the Historian, Romanorum arma advidere nesciunt quoniam scilicet that they had heard much of their valour, but never felt it. Remaining undisturbed in their bound poverty, till the Tartari, an obscure and beggerly people broke out of their Prison and carried out the whole World before them.

As for their Kings, I find some of their names laid down, but without any note of time in which their reigns might be supposed to begin or end. Nor can I think that the Kings occurring in that Catalogue did either reign in the same place, or over the same Nations; or that they succeeded one another. However we will take their names as they come before us, in this list of 17 Lambinus, the last of all those Scythian Kings who are conceived to have the Government of these warlike Nations. But for my part I dare not say, that every any one King did command the whole people generally; each Tribe or Nation having their particular Kings as in other places not reduced into form and order. And therefore for those Kings, if such Kings there were (as for some of them I durst venture to swear the contrary) they must be such as in their several Countries were of greatest fame, most taken notice of in the world, or employed in the conduct of their joynt and united forces; and so conceived to be the Kings of the whole Scythian Nation: as Cassibellane, King of the Trimbantes, and perhaps not that, is by some Writers said to be the King of the Britanni; because he had the conduct of their forces against Julius Cesar.

4. CATHAI.

CATHAI is bounded on the West, with Zagathay, from which parted by the Mountain Imam on the East, with the Oriental Sea, and some part of China;

China, on the North, with Tartaria Amiqua; and on the South, with part of India. So called from the proper or special Cathay, the principal Province of the whole; the other parts into which it is commonly divided being 2 Altay, the Countries of the Eastern Tartars.

1. CATHAI, more properly and specially so called, is bounded on the East, with China; on the West, with the Mountain Imam; by which parted from Zagathay on the North, with Altay; and on the South, with India extra Gangem: So called from the Chata, an old Scythian people, who having conquered the Seres, and the rest of the neighbouring Nations, gave their own name unto the whole, according to the Custom of victorious people.

This Country is exceeding long, if it be measured by the Scale, and Rules laid down by Ptolomy; who placeth Anzacia, the most Western Town of Scythia extra montem Imam, in the Longitude of 144 degrees, and Sera the Metropolis and most Eastern City of Serica in the Longitude of 177 degrees and 15 Minutes; as on the other side he placeth Seta the most Southern Town of Scythia extra montem Imam, in the Latitude of 35 degrees, and 10 minutes, and Damia the most Northern Town of Serica in the Latitude of 51 degrees, and 40 minutes. By which account, supposing these four Towns to be placed in the very extremities and out-parts of this Country, it must extend from North to South 960 miles and somewhat upwards, and about 1500 miles from East to West in the length thereof; which as it sheweth the dimensions and extent of it to be very great, so it may probably infer that the Country is not in all places of the like fertility, the West parts of it being very mountainous and barren, and consequently not very fruitful, as being overgrown in most places with the spurs and branches of Imam. But in those parts thereof which lie towards the East, it is said to be abounding in Wheat, Rice, Wool, Hemp, Silk, and Musk; Great store of that medicinal Root called Rhubarb, or Rba-Barbarum, to difference it from the Rba-Pontic, growing on the banks of Volga. They have also very great Herds of Camels, of whose hair they make those stuffs which are hence called Camlets, or Chamlets; and such an infinite breed of Horses, as besides those which they preserve for their own use, they furnish the whole Realm of China with such multitudes of them, that at one time there were not fewer than 80000 for a Present to the King of that Realm by the Princes of these Western Tartars, as the Chinese call them; of which he that writ the Book called Bukhan Tartaricum, affirmeth himself to have been eye-witness, and to his credit I refer it, that the great Chan feedeth yearly 10000 white Mares, which he keeps for their Milk. Some of their Rivers are reported also yield Golden Sands; But whether it be so or not, certain it is, that it is so well provided of all things both for necessary use, and the pleasures of life, that it is thought to be inferior to few Countries of Europe. The air indeed not so temperate, as in many places; the Summers times extremely hot, and in Winter miserably cold: Summer many men die of heat, when they hear it. The winds no less violent than the thunder, do sometimes tear up trees by the roots, and beat men from their houses; but seldom bring with them any storm of rain: the greatest showers which they have, hardly wetting the ground.

The people are generally very warlike, strong of body, quick of action, fearless of the greatest dangers, patient both of want and labour: of mean attire, little eyes, sharp sight, and thin beards. Indulgent they are in several Manufitures; of a good wit for dispatch of business.

nefs: more honourable than the rest of the Tartars, as loving to dress themselves gorgeously, to fare sumptuously (if there be occasion) to live in handsome houses, and to frequent the most populous and best-traded Cities: All which civilities or refinements, call them which you will, together with the greatest part of their Arts and Manufactures, they first learned of the Chinese, during the time that the Chinese lived as Subjects under the great Chan, and the Nations had continual intercourse with one another. They account not any for a Wife till the bear them Children, nor till then do meddle with their Dowries but repudiate them at a certain time, if they find them barren. They reverence their Chan, or Emperor, even to Adoration; not suffering any Stranger to come in his presence, except he be first purged: if any otherwise presume, it is present death.

The Religion publicly allowed and countenanced, is that of Mahomet; but so that they retain the Pentateuch of Moser, and observe many things therein countenanced. It was much laboured by Pope Innocent, and King Lewis of France, that they should receive the Christian Faith; and they found some inclinations in the People, and chief Princes to it. But finding by the Mahometan Agents, who then laboured to bring them to their Superstition, that Mahomet allowed of many Wives, and other things more agreeable to their fleshly lusts, they conformed to that; Yet so, that there are many Idolaters in Cathay it self (I mean Cathay strictly so called) and some Christians also; the state of whose affairs we have thrown before.

Chief Rivers of the whole. 1 Polsung, which falling into the Eastern Ocean is navigable up to the City of Cambalu, to which it is a means of conveying great store of Merchandise. 2 Caroruman, so broad and deep that no Bridge can be made over it. 3 Quian, one of the greatest in the world; in length about an hundred days journey; for breadth, in most places six miles, in many eight, and in some ten. 4 Quianus, about half a mile over, and well stored with fish: of all which we shall speak more fully when we come to China. Here are also very many Lakes, both large, and useful, as 1 the Lake of Canielu, in which are said to be so many Pearls as would make them of no value, if every man might have leave to fish for them; which is therefore interdicted. (without special licence) upon pain of death. 2 The Lake of Cararami, about an hundred miles in circuit, and so full of fish, as might suffice for all the Country, did they love to eat of it. The Mountains we shall climb over in their several places.

Principal Cities of the whole at this present time, under the notion of Cathay, are 1 Cambalu, supposed to be the Ipsedon Serica of the Ancients, and like enough to be that City of the Cathayans, which made the notable resistance unto Gingis the first King of the Tartars, in his first attempts upon this Country, of which more anon. After afterwards, in regard of the pleasantness of the situation, and extreme fertility of the soil, the chief Seat of his Empire; and being exceedingly enlarged and beautified had the name of Cambalu, that is to say, the Seat or City of the Sham, in the same sense as the chief City of China had the name of Pekin, signifying in that Language the Court or City of the King. Built of Freestone, and situate in the midst of the Country as the heart and center to the rest. It is seated on the River Polsung, honoured with the Great Chan's residence, and enriched with a mighty confluence of Merchants of all sorts. Besides other Merchandises there are every year 10000 Cars loaded with Silk sent thither from China. Affirmed to be in compass 28 miles besides the Suburbs, in which, besides other Inhabitants of all sorts, are said to be 50000 Astrologers or rather Fortune-tellers. 2. Xaindu the Royal Palace of the Emperor, of a foursquare figure, every side extending eight miles in length: within this Quadrant is another, whose sides are six miles long, and within that another of four miles square, which is the Palace itself. Between these several Walls are Walks, Gardens, Orchards, Fish-ponds, places for all manner of exercise, & Parks, Forests, and Chafes for all manner of Game. 3. Carata, a fair City and a said to guild their Teeth. 4. Gonca, a fair City and a great, adorned with many Idol Monasteries. 5. Cavanfu, near which there groweth an herb called Chiny-Cathay, of admirable effect against many Diseases, & to be esteemed by the Natives, that they value an ounce of this at a fack of Rubarb. 6. Segni, the residence of a Nestorian Bishop.

Having thus took as good a view of the present face of this Country, as the time affords us, we will next look upon it in those integral parts, of which it specially consisteth comprehending (as before was intimated) those two long and ample Provinces, which the Ancients called, 1. Serica, and 2. Seythia extra montem Imaum, according to those Bounds and Characters which are given us of them.

1. SERICA, hath on the East, some part of China, on the South, India extra Gangem, and some part of the Country then inhabited by the ancient Sines, on the North, Altay, on the West, Seythia beyond the Mountains of Imau. In which I follow not the bounds laid down by Ptolomy, who for want of that knowledge in these remote Countries which these latter Ages have afforded, is fain to shut it up on the North and East with a Terra Incognita. At the present it is called CATHAY, and that most probably from the Chata, a Seythian People, who subduing the old Inhabitants, became Masters of it.

But for the name of Serica, it was derived originally from Sera the chief City of it; whence the people had the name of Seres, very indolent in their times, and amongst other things in the making of Silk (made of a fine wooll growing on their leaves of Trees) from hence named Serica. Of great esteem amongst the Romans, as is said by Pliny, Tam multiplici opere, tam longinquo orbis petiunt, ut in publico matrona tranflectat; being far fetched and dear bought, they were good for Ladies. Nor were they indolent only, but chaste and temperate. The names of Thieves and Whores were not known amongst them. They eat not any unclean flesh, nor used the company of their Wives either after Conception, or during their Menstrual Purgations. So moderate of diet, that they lived commonly to the age of 200 years; the quietness and mildness of their disposition helping much thereto. Of yellow hair, watcher or Sea-green eyes, and good complexion. Men of few words, but very just in all which they did or did. Governed by a Common Council of 5000 men, every one of which was to find an Elephant for the use of the State.

If you will take the Characters both of the Country and People from Ammianus Marcellinus, he will give it thus. "First of the Country, that it is plentiful and large, circled about with a chain of Mountains, the two famous Rivers Ochardar, and Banhsia with a hill and a flow stream running thorow the middle of the inclosed Plain, spaciouly stretched out to the sides of the precipices: in one place large and open, in another lying flat and low, with an easie descent in which regard they have abundance of Corn, flocks of Cattel, and plenty of Orchards. The temperature of the Air pleasant and wholesome, the constitution of the weather clear and pure, the blowing of gentle winds most commodious, and the Woods with a pritty glimmering of light, both within and under them: from whence the people with much sprinkling of water, softening that which the Trees bring forth like a kind of Picea, kemb a most fine and tender matter, which they spin into Silk, serving in former times for the Nobility and Gentry, now become common to those also of inferior rank. Then for the People, he saith, that they are a staid Nation, lovers of quiet, not troublesome unto their Neighbours, without the use of Arms, and the knowledge of battels, declining the company of Strangers, and so far from coverousness, or curiosities, that when any Merchants come unto them to buy their Silk, without much beating of the price, they let them have such things as are bred amongst them, without looking after the Commodities of other Countries. So he. And if he did over act the Panegyrist (as I see no reason why he should) never were people happier in the place of their dwelling, nor Country happier in its people.

Chief Mountains of it (and Mountains they had very many) were 1. the Montes Casii, and 2. Auzacii towards the East. 3. The Annie, environing a great part of the Country. 4. The Almarai, 5. and those called Seria, near the City Sera. 6. Tazuri, 7. Emmodur, and 8. Ottacora: but all of them probably the spurs and branches of the great Mountain Imau; But by what names now called it is hard to say; and no less hard to say how to accommodate the names of the Rivers spoken of before, to those which we find mentioned in the ancient Writers; the principal of which (all flowing out of these great Mountains) are, 1. Ochardar, by Pliny called Cambis, siting out of the Montes Auzacii; 2. Pisara, issuing out of the Almiri. 3. Banhsia, whose Fountain is in the Montes Casii. And 4. Lami.

Towns of chief note amongst them, 1. Sera, which gave the name of Serica, and Serer, to the Province and People. 2. Ottacora, near the Hills so called; whence it had the name. 3. Issidon, for distinction sake called Issidon Serica, to distinguish it from another of that name in Seythia, called Issidon Seythica; the chief City of the Issidones, gens magna, one of the greatest Nations in all the Country, as is said by Ptolomy; and like enough to be that City of the Cathayans, which made that notable resistance unto Cingis (which before I spoke of) in his first attempts upon this Country. 4. Orfana, 5. Dofache, 6. Daxata, of which little memorable. Some other Cities there were in it (about Nine more being named by Ptolomy) of which we find nothing but the names, and therefore I shall pass them over without further mention.

But here it is observed, 1. That Ptolomy gives unto this Country, and to some of the Towns or Cities of it, such a Northerly Latitude (ranging the furthest parts thereof in the same Parallel with the Isle of Thyle) as cannot possibly agree with that fertility of soyl, and delightful temper of the Air, which is given to Serica. 2. That he tells us of a Promontory called Tabya, situate in extrema Terra, in the extremities of the Country between North and East, which I cannot but exceedingly wonder at, considering that he shuts up this Country on the East and North with a Terra Incognita, and extends not any part thereof towards the Sea, rendering it thereby incapable of any such Promontory. 3. That some of our late Writers, both in their Table and their Maps, have placed the Regal City of Cambala so far towards the North, as very ill agree with that pleasantness and sweetness of situation, which induced the great Chams to make choice of it for the Seat Royal of their Empire. But as we thereof for the Seat Royal of their Empire. But as we may easily pardon these mistakes of Ptolomy in places to far distant from him, and then but little known to the Greeks and Romans; so we may easily pardon these of the later times, who grounding on the authority of so eminent an Author, have in some things been misled by him: it happening very many times (which I find somewhere mentioned on the like occasion) Magni erroris, magnorum virorum auctoritate, transmissos, that great errors are often entertained upon the credit of their Authors.

The old Inhabitants hereof, in those parts which lay next the Seythians, are said to have been Antropophagi, or Man-eaters, most probably a Seythian Nation, that Custom being so abhorrent to the mildness of the Serican temper. Or else, we must correct the Copies of Ptolomy, by the History of Ammianus Marcellinus, who instead of Antropophagi, placeth the Alitrophagi in the self same Tract. The other Nations not disdained with the like reputation, are the Sizygers, and Anabi, not far off the Auzacian Mountains; the Piale near the River Ochardar; the Gerani, and Rhabbanes, their nearest neighbours; the Thrauni dwelling towards the East, the Bae and Ottacora more towards the South. These with the residue, governed by a Common-Council of 5000 men, every one of which was to find an Elephant for the service of the Common-wealth, as was said before. And more than this we hear not of them in the way of Story; the Natives never going abroad with their wares, and having little speech with Strangers, when they come amongst them. Being vanquished by the Chata, a Seythian Nation, from whom it is like that it took their name of CATHAY (for in this we go but by conjecture) they continued under Kings of their own, till subdued by the Tartars, against whom they made such stout resistance, being belleged by Cingis in their principal City, that when they wanted stones to cast out of their Engines, they supplied that want with molten Silver; and held out so long, that Cingis finding Victuals to grow short in his Camp, commanded that every tenth man should be eaten. But at the last being undermined, the Town was taken, the Citizens massacred, and their King or Emperor (as some call him) slain: after whose death, and not before, Cingis assumed the Title of the Cham, or Emperor. The residue of their Story we shall have hereafter.

SEYTHIA EXTRA IMAUM was bounded on the East, with Serica; on the West, with Imau; on the South, with India extra Gangem; and on the North, with the Countries comprehended in the name of Altay, which Ptolomy hath given us in the notion of the Terra Incognita. Called Seythia, because planted by a brood of the Seythians. Extra Imaum was put to it, to distinguish it from that part of Seythia which lay on the West side of that Mountain, nearest unto the Greeks and Romans. But now the Mountain, and the Country, have the name of Altay.

To look upon it as it standeth by the name of Seythia extra Imaum, we find not any thing delivered of the Rivers or Mountains of it, but what is common unto them with the neighbouring Nations: the Mountains called Auzacii, and Casii, and Emmodur, being common unto this with Serica; as Imau jointly to both the Seythians, which it divided anciently the one from the other: though now this last be reckoned to belong to Cathay alone, because the Tartars on both sides of it profess themselves subject to that Cham. This the most famous Mountain in the East of Asia, beginning at the shores of the Seythick, or Frozen Ocean, and extending thence directly Southwards unto Cape Comari, a Promontory of the Southern or Indian Seas. By which account it divideth the Greater Asia into East and West, as Tartars doth into

North and South, which Mountain it crosseth in right Angles, about the Longitude of 140. as before was said. That part hereof which lyeth on the South of Tartars, was by the Ancients called Baris; and by the modern is named Gates: of which we shall speak more when we come to India. That on the North of Tartars, called Imau properly, was anciently most memorable for dividing the vast Countries of the Seythians, into Seythia intra Imaum, and Seythia extra Imaum; a division much observed by the old Geographers: now chiefly memorable for being the Sepulchre of some of the Chams of Tartary, most generally known by the name of Altay, but by some called Belgion.

Chief Towns hereof were 1. Auzacia, at the foot of the hills so named. 2. Chaurana, the Chief City of the Chauranai. 3. Seta. 4. Issidon Seythica, so called to difference from the other of that name in Serica. These with the rest, and all the Country, as far as it was known in the days of Ptolomy, inhabited by the Abii, Hippophagi, or horse-eaters, a diet still used by the Tartars or modern Seythians. 2. The Issidones, who are said by Pomponius Mela to make carousing cups of their Fathers heads, first trimmed and gilded. 3. The Cauranai, and 4. the Chata, who being (as it seemeth) the most potent Nation, caused all the rest to be called by the name of Cathay, communicating that name also to be conquered Seres. Besides the possessions of which Tribes, there was also the Regions of Adassa, Cassia, and Auzanai; these last so called from the Mountains upon which they stand. More than this we have not to say of this Country by the name of Seythia, there being nothing memorable of it in the course of Story, or worth the observation in the way of Geography.

ALTAY is bounded on the South, with Cathay, specially so called, and part of China; on the North, with Tartaria Antiqua; on the West, with the great Mountain Imau; and on the East, with the Nations or Countries of the Eastern Tartars. So called from its neighbourhood to that mighty Mountain, which the Tartars in their Language call by the name of Altay.

The Country utterly unknown to the ancient Writers, and not much canvassed or travelled by our modern Pens. In which respect I shall now trouble my self no further, than by giving a brief touch on the several parts of it. Of which the most that can be said, will be but little for the information of the judicious Readers; who are not to be bettered by the names of places, if there be not something in them of further use. Now for these Provinces the principal of them are, 1. Casac, 2. Cheshmari, 3. Lep, 4. Camul, 5. Tainfu, 6. Cainda, 7. Carazani, 8. Cardandan, 9. Erginul, 10. Tangush.

1. CASAC, bordering on the North-West of China, a Mahometan Country, but admitting of some Christians also; the largest Kingdom in all Altay, except Tangush only, and furnished with many Towns or Cities both of Trade and Note; the principal whereof are 1. Hischam, the Royal City of this Country, and Mart famous for concourse of Merchants; and variety of Merchandises. 2. Cialie, the chief Town of a Province or Kingdom so named, but subject to the King of Casac, who in the year 1603, was called Mahomet Chan, a Prince of credit in those parts, but neither equal in Port or Power to the King of Tangush. The people generally rude and barbarous, in so much that some parts here of both Sexes do indulge themselves this mutual privilege, that if the Husband or the Wife be absent above twenty days, the other party is at liberty to marry again.

2. CHEMUR, the Inhabitants whereof are generally both Idolaters and Inchanters, causing the dumb Idols to speak, the winds to rise, and the Sun to be dark.

darkened. For studying which Black Arts (if they come to them by study) they have many Monasteries, in which their Hermites or Monasticks live a strict kind of life, and are very abstemious.

3. LOP, memorable for a great Defeat of thirty days journey, to true a Defeat, that whosoever doth not mean to be starved, must carry all his victuals with him. Dangerous to Travellers, if not before-hand made acquainted with their danger: the evil Spirits using to call men by their names, and make them go astray from their company, where they perish with famine, or are devoured with wild beasts. The chief Town hereof called Lop, giving name to both.

4. CAMUL, an Idolatrous Country, the people whereof account it a great honour to them to have their Wives and Sisters at the pleasure of such as they entertain. From which brutish custom when restrained by Mango Cham, they petitioned him at three years end to be restored again to their former liberty; protesting they could never thrive, since they left that custom. Which desire of theirs was at last granted, and is still in use.

5. TAINFU, more civil than the rest, the people being very industrious, and good Artificers: making the most part of the Arms which are used by the Cham; and some of which they sell to Merchants.

6. CAINDU, with a Town in it of the same name, of great resort by Merchants (such as we call, perit Chapmen) for Womens Veils here made, with very great Art, of the Bark of Trees. And it is well that they have Veils to hide their hamelness, the Women of this Trade being prostituted unto every Traveller.

7. CARAZAN, inhabited by a barbarous and savage people, who in the day time live in Dens for fear of Serpents, with which (and some of them so pees long, and ten spans in thickness) they are much infested, and in the night go forth to prey upon Wolves and Lions. They have an use that when any stranger cometh into their houses, of an handsome shape, to kill him in the night: not out of desire of spoil, or to eat his body; but that the soul of such a comely body might remain amongst them.

8. CARDANDAN, near Carazan, and as savage as that. The people whereof draw black lines on their bodies, which they count for the greatest Ornament. In case of sickness they send not to the Physician but the next Incubators, who taking Council of the Devil, apply some remedy; or if they think the man put cure they tell him that his offences are grown too great to admit of help, and so put him off.

9. ERGINUL, possessed by an Idolatrous people, but mixed with some Mohometans, and Nestorians. In which Country they have certain Bells, as big as Elephants, with Mains of fine white hair, like fish, some of which they tame; and betwixt them and their Kine engender a Race of strong and laborious beasts, not inferior in that kind to Oxen. Here is also found a beast of an exquisite shape, but not bigger than a Goat, which at every Full Moon hath a swelling under the belly; which being cut off by the Hunters, and dried in the Sun, proveth to be the best Musk in the World.

10. TANGUTH, the greatest and most potent of all the rest, bordering on the North of Cathay, especially so called, and (like to that) inhabited by an industrious and laborious people, amongst whom the Art of Printing is said to have been extant a thousand years. Blessed here, to have with a great increase of Christianity; but now the Ceniles or Idolaters make the greatest part, with some

Mohometans amongst them. And for the serving of those Idols, they have not only many large and beautiful Temples, built in the manner of Christian Churches, and capable of 4 or 5000 persons: but also many fair Monasteries for the use of their Vaivaires and Recluses. They are possessed of many Towns, most of them well fortified, and planted with good store of Artillery. The chief of which, 1. Sacbian, bordering on the Desert of Lop, inhabited by some of all three Religions; in which it is affirmed that they first used the Art of Printing. 2. Campion, the Metropolis, or Mother City of this Country; where the Christians in the time of Paulus Venetus, had three fair Churches: now over-nimbred by the Geniles, who have here many Monasteries for the use of their Idols, and many Religious persons dedicated to their service only. Who though they live more honestly than the rest of their Order, and hold it an impiety to tempt a woman to the act of Lust; yet if the woman make the offer, they hold it no small sin to refuse her carnal desire. 3. Santa, a Town in the middle way betwixt Campion and Sucuir, as being five days journey from the one, and six days journey from the other; by which we may conjecture at the long extent of this Kings Dominion. 4. Sucuir, situate amongst Mountains clothed with Rubarb, from whence conveyed by Merchants over all the world; but so neglected by the Natives, that did the foreign Merchant bring it into request, they would scorn to gather it. This once a Kingdom of it felt, made subject afterwards with Tanguth, to the Cham of Chay, or the great Cham of Tartary. But the fury of this Tartarian tempest, being overblown, the Kings of Tanguth did not only recover their ancient Royalty; but by degrees possessed themselves of the most part of the rest of Alay, and perhaps part of Cathay also, being looked on at the present as the greatest and most puissant Prince betwixt the Mountains of Imau and the Eastern Tartars, to the description of whose Countries we do next proceed.

The Countries of the Eastern Tartars are bounded on the West, with Altay; on the East, with the Oriental Ocean; on the North, with Tartaria Antiqua; and on the South, with China; so called from their Eastern situation, in regard of those of Cathay and Alay, which by the Chinese are called commonly the Western Tartars.

The Country not very fruitful, because ill cultivated, so that the chief Commodities which they find abroad, are the Root called Ginseng, so much esteemed amongst the Chinese, and all sorts of precious skins, as those of Castor, Martron, and Zibeline; and also Horse-hair, of which the Chinese make their Nets, and the men (though madly) use it in tying up their hair, as the handiwork drest they can appear in. With these Commodities they traffick into Leatong, a Province of the Northeast of China (from which they are parted only by an Arm of the Sea) where commonly they make good Markets, their Merchandise being thence dispersed into all parts of that Kingdom. The people are generally of broad Faces, their colour White, but their Nose is not so flat, nor their Eyes so little as the Chinese are, sparing of speech, and somewhat penfive, but neither so unfriendly as their neighbours of China, or so barbarous and rude as the Tartars of Europe. They have both the head and the beard, referring only the Mustachoes, which they extend to a great length, and in the hinder part of their head they leave a Tuft, which being curiously woven and platted, they let hang down carefully below their shoulders; they have a round and low Cap, which is always garnished round with some precious skin three fingers broad, of Castor or Zibeline, and serveth to defend their Temples, Ears, and Fore-heads from Colds, and other Tempests. That which appears appears above the skin being covered over either with curious red Silk, or else with black and purple Horse-hair, which they dye and drest most curiously, so as their apparences being handsomely joined together makes the Cap both commodious and handsome. Their Garments are long Rubes falling down to the very foot, but their Sleeves are not so long and large as the Chinese use, but rather such as are used in Poland and Hungary, only with this difference, that they fashion the extremity of the sleeve ever like a Horse's Hoof. At their girdle there hangs on either side two Handkerchiefs to wipe their face and hands, besides there hangs a Knife for all necessary uses; with two Purses, in which they carry Tobacco, or such like commodities. On their left side they hang their Scymiters, but so as the Point goeth before, and the Handle behind; and therefore when they fight they draw it out with the right hand behind them without holding the Scabbard with the other. They seldom wear shoes, and use no Spurs to their boots, which they make either of Silk or of Horse-skin very neatly drest; but they often use fair Pattens, which they make three fingers high. In riding they use Stirrups, but their Saddles are both lower and broader than ours. In matters of war they are very nimble, never carrying any baggage with them, nor taking carter provision, but filling themselves with what they find; yet commonly they eat flesh, though half walked or half boiled: and if they find none, they fall upon their Horses and Camels. The earth covered with their Horse-dung is their bed, for they care not for houses and chambers, but if they are forced to dwell in houses, their horses must lodge with them, and they must have many holes beaten in the walls to let in the air; but yet their Tents are most beautiful, which they fix and remove with such Art and dexterity, as they never retard the speedy march of an Army.

They inhabit amongst many other Provinces, those of Semabasia, Tanius, Gupi, Nimban, and Niucho; of which I am able to say nothing in the way of Chorography, or of the four first in way of Histroy; only I find that those of Nimban were aiding to the King of Niucho, in the Conquest of China: and of the Gupi it is written, that they are so called, by reason they make their Coats of defence or Breast-plates of Fishes skins, which grow (as is affirmed) in a manner impregnable. None of which Nations count themselves originally of Tartarian Race. Yet either terrified by the noise of their great successes, or willing to partake of some part of their fortunes, they not only aided them in their Wars on that side of Imau, but were content to take their very name upon them. Never invaded nor subdued till the time of Hombu King of China, who having driven the Western Tartars, then Lording it over that Kingdom, from one part of it to another, compelled them finally to betake themselves unto those parts and Provinces of the Eastern Tartars, which now make up the Kingdom or Province of Niucho, where the War followed after them also, till by little and little they became more quiet; compelled to beg their Peace of the Conquering Enemy; divided into seven Hords or Tribes, and governed for a long time by their several Chiefs, they became at last united into one Kingdom called the Kingdom of Niucho, Anno 1550, or thereabout. Oppressed by the Princes of Leatong, in the way of their Trade, and suffering amongst many other indignities the death of their King, whom those Princes had entrapped and murdered, they made complaint of these outrages to the King of China, and finding no remedy at his hands, put themselves into Arms, invade the Province of Leatong, take the City of Leatong; and having besieged the King himself in the Royal or Imperial City of Peking, they returned home (finding no hope of taking it at that time) with the Spoil and plunder of all those parts through which they marched. The War thus first begun was managed for many years with great loss on both sides, the Tartars having got nothing by it, but the Eastern parts of the Province of Leatong, and the honour of having shewed themselves twice more at the Walls of Peking, till in the year 1644, being invited into China by Usangunius to support the then falling fortune of the Royal Family, they husbanded the opportunity so well as to make themselves the absolute Masters of that mighty Kingdom. The whole story and success of this notable action, we shall sum up in brief when we come to China. In the mean time take here the Catalogue of

THE KINGS OF NIUCHÉ.

1550 1. N. N. advanced unto this Kingdom after the reducing of the several Hordes into one main body, and Father of the King succeeding, who was slain at last by the treachery of the Princes of Leatong, as before was said.

1616 3. Theienmingun, who to revenge his Fathers death, invaded China, took the City of Leatong, braved the great Emperor at the Walls of the Regal City, and having enriched himself with the spoils of the Country returned home again.

1627 4. Theienzungu, the Son of Theienmingun, followed the War with the same fortune as his Father did, both of them growing greater in Renown and Riches than in Power and Patrimony.

1636 5. Zungius, the Son of Theienzungu, secretly brought up amongst the Chinese, by means whereof he grew not only acquainted with the conditions of that people but their weaknesses also; and consequently was the better prepared to lay the foundation of that greatness to which the Tartars have attained by the Conquest of it. Called into China by Usangunius, as before is said, he possessed himself of the City of Peking; and though he died as soon as he was Master of that City only; yet left he such instructions to his Brothers, and the rest of his Council, that very easily and speedily they possessed themselves of all the Kingdom.

1644 6. Xanbusius the Son of the former, of the age of nine years only at the death of his Father, the management of his affairs both for War and Peace being committed to his Uncles, but chiefly unto Amavangur the eldest of them, by whom so prudently conducted, that within the space of four years he was quietly settled in that Throne, all opposition and pretenders to the Royal succession, being beaten down, of which more hereafter.

5. TARTARIA ANTIQUA.

TARTARIA ANTIQUA hath on the South, Alay, and the Countries of the Eastern Tartars; on the West and North, the main Scythick Ocean; on the East, the Straights of Anian, (if such Straights there be) by which parted from America. So called, because the first habitation of the Tartars; who from this Den or Goal, made their first eruptions, and have since overgrown so much of Asia.

The Country cold and comfortless, as lying under the Polar Circle, and in part beyond it; not fit for any but such as can live no where else: yet heretofore a receptacle of many Christians (though those of the Nestorian Sect) who here enjoyed that liberty of their Religion, which the Persian and Saracenic denied them in more pleasing Countries. It contained many Regions, some not considerable. Those of most note are 1 Thebet, 2 Tarbar, 3 Tenduc, 4 Barbu, 5 Anian, and 6 Tartar.

1. THEBET a fenny Region, and full of Woods, rich in Coral, which they find on the Sea-shore, and use it instead of Money. So named from the chief City of it, the ordinary seat of the Abassie, or Pope of this Idolatrous People; much revered, and having in his power the disposing of all Offices, which concern the Service of their Idols. They have also some good flocks of Musk, and abundance of wild beasts which are bred in their Forests: But no beasts wilder than the People, who in times past (if not at the present also) used to bury their Parents in their own bowels, and to make drinking cups of their skulls; for fear lest in the midst of their jollity they should forget their Progenitors. Yet not more barbarous than immodest; it being contrary to their custom to take a Wife that is a Virgin. And therefore the Mothers use to prostitute their Daughters to the Merchant-Strangers, who having had their pleasures of them, gratify them with a Jewel, or some other Present, which they wear on their Wedding-day, the being the most acceptable bride to her Husband, who bringeth the greatest Dowry with her of those base rewards. It contained once several petty Kingdoms, (Homagers to the Kings of Tenduc) with many Cities; but now laid desolate by the Tartars.

2. TABOR, once a distinct Kingdom also. One of the Kings whereof in the year 1540, came to the Courts of Charles the Fifth, and Francis the First; where he found Princely entertainment. But upon proof that he was a Fetio for the Jem, and secretly solicited many unto that Religion, by the command of Charles he was burnt at Montma.

3. TENDUC a populous Kingdom of it self, but greater in name and power; the Kings hereof commanding all these North-east parts, as far as the borders of Cathay. Christians in Religion, till the Conquest of it by the Tartars, though according to the Nestorian tendencies: but now Mahometan as the most part, with some remainders, and but few of Christianity. Divided into many large and spacious Provinces, as Chincistales, Cersuth, Egrigata, Cerchau, others of less note; so called according to the names of their principal Towns, or having some Towns in them of the name of the Provinces.

Those of most note in Tenduc it self, 1 Cin Cham, the ordinary & picture of the Kings of Tenduc, before it was subdued by the Tartars, and since that also, a Caracaras, where Cingis was first honoured with the title of King, the Kings hereof bearing the Port of Kings, and the Office of Priests, were anciently called by the name of Priest John, or Priest John: a title now erroneously conferred by some on the Emperor of the Abassies, or Abissinians in Africk. Concerning which it is a wonder, that Joseph Scaliger, a man of high infinite reading, should be so deceived: and by the authority of his judgment deceive so many. For finding that there was a Priest John in the North of Asia, and hearing vulgarly that title given to him in Africk, he fell upon a fancy that this Abassie Emperor was formerly of the great power, as to extend his Empire over India, and the North of Asia; and in this last, for the assurance of his Conquests to hold his residence. A monstrous, and un-defensible fancy! For besides that, all Histories, even those of the Abassies themselves, are silent in it: how improbable is it, that a King reigning in the Heart of Africk, should subdue the most remote parts of Asia; and there keep his Court, for many great States and most puissant Nations being interposed or that so memorable an exploit should be buried in silence, and found in no record but in Scaliger's head! Besides it is well known, and generally granted, that the Priest John of Asia, was by Scot a Nestorian; but he that is so called in Africk, of the Sect of the Jacobites: and further, that the Christians of Ethiopia are circumcised, which never was reported of those of Asia.

Letting this pass therefore as an unwarrantable, and ill grounded fancy, we are to know that formerly this Province of Tenduc, was under the old Kings of Cathay, till the time of Cin Cham, the King thereof. After whose death a certain Nestorian Shepherd (that is to say, the Master of great flocks of sheep) being Governor of the Laymans, a People of Tenduc, took to himself the Title of King of Tenduc, whom they called by the name of Priest John, or Prince John (the same word in their Language, as in the Hebrew, signifieth both Priest and Prince). Dying he bequeathed his Estate and Flocks to his Brother Om-Cham, (commonly called in one word Uncham) a greater Sheep-Master than he; whose Flocks ranged over all the Pastures of the Moles, or Mongul Tartars, though dwelling fourteen days journey off, whom he had in subjection: the Title of Priest John, or Priest Johnnes, going along with the dignity and Royal estate. And though afterwards this Uncham was subdued by the Tartars, yet his Posterity for long time were suffered to enjoy the Title of Kings and Presbyters; (but Vallisi and Homagers to the Great Cham) the Great Cham, in regard of their Nobility and Royal Parentage, bestowing their Daughters on them in Marriage; as is laid by William de Rubrquis, who travelled in these Countries, Anno 1253. the King hereof being then named George (the fourth from Uncham) but commonly called Priest Johnnes, as his Fathers were.

4. BARBU, on the extreme Northwest, bordering on both those sides the cold Seythick Ocean, situate under the North-star; of the same nature, both for the Soil and People, as that of the Tartars. And

5. ANIAN, on the Northeast, opposite unto it, giving name unto the Streights of Anian, lying betwixt Tartary and America; which Streights (if any such Streights there be) the Tartars, and some other of these Northern Nations, are thought to have passed over, and to plant that Country.

6. TARTAR, so called of the great River Tartar, the principal of this Northern Tract, and giving name unto the Tartars: this being their Original Country, where they lived like beasts, having neither Faith, nor Letters, nor Habitation, nor the use of Arms, nor any Reputation amongst their Neighbours. In matters of Religion, the worst sort of Gentiles, worshipping the Sun, Moon, Fire, and the very Earth: to which they offered in the morning fasting, the first of their meats and drinks.

Their Idols made of Felt, and placed on both sides of the doors of their Tents or Booths, as the preservers of their Cattel, and the Authors of Milk. Divided into five Clans or Tribes, denominating to many Towns and Territories in which they dwell, that is to say, 1 Mongul, 2 Toka Mongul (or the Great Mongul), 3 Somungul, or the Water-Mongul, 4 Mercat, 5 Merris: each of them governed by its Chief, as commonly it is amongst barbarous Nations; though all those Chiefs subordinate to some higher power. Oppressed by Uncham, or Uncham, the King of Tenduc, who invaded their Pastures, and compelled them to pay unto him the tenth of their Cattel; with joyant content they removed somewhat further off, and denied their Tribute. This opportunity was taken by Cingis, one of the Tribe of the Toka-Monguls; and so well husbanded, that they admitted him to their King. For publishing abroad amongst the credulous people, that an armed man appeared to him in his sleep, with a white Horse, and said, O Cingis, or Cingis, it is the will of immortal God, that thou be Governor of the Tartars, and free them from bondage and paying Tribute, they found a general belief, especially amongst those of his own Clan, who joining themselves to him, followed him, as their King-leader, in all his actions. Thus backed and strengthened, he made War against the Somunguls, slew their Commander, and subdued them: and by their help successively assaulted the Mercats, and Merris, whom he also vanquished. And having thus subdued all the Clans of the Tartars, and added the Estates of Thebet and Tanguth unto his Dominions, he was by the consent of the seven Princes, or Chiefs of their Clans, (Thebet and Tanguth being added to the former number) placed on a Seat on a piece of Felt, (the best Throne they had or could afford) and saluted King; with as great reverence and solemnity as their State could yield. And first to make trial of his power, and their obedience, he commanded the seven Chiefs, or Princes, to surrender their places, and each of them to cut off the head of his eldest Son: which was done accordingly. Had John of Leyden been a Scholar, as he was but a Butcher, I should think he had studied the acts of Cingis, and proceeded by them. Assured by this of their fidelity and obedience, he set upon the Naymans, a People of the Kingdom of Tenduc, whom he overcame. And now conceiving himself fit for some great alliance, he sent to Uncham, and demanded one of his Daughters for his Wife; which Uncham with some threats, but more scorn, denying, he marched against him, slew him in the field, and possessed his Daughter, and with her also his Estate. Proud with this good success, and encouraged by so great an increase of power, he invaded the Kingdom of Cathay; pretending for that also the authority of an Heavenly Vision, in the name of the Immortal God: in which attempt, discomfited at first with a very great overthrow, but at last victorious; conquering the several Nations of it one by one, till in the end he brought the War to the chief City of that Kingdom, which at last he took, and therewithal the Title of Cham or Emperor. Continuing in this Dignity for the space of six years, and every year adding somewhat to his Dominions, he was at last wounded in the Knee at the Castle of Thayia; of which wound he died, and was honourably buried in Mount Altay.

This is the best account I am able to give of the beginning of this great Empire, the original of this spreading Nation, and the description of the Country of their first habitation. They that have Christened some of the most Northern parts of it, by the means of the Tribes of Dan and Nephthalim, and accordingly placed them in their Maps, might with more credit have supplied those vacant places, which they knew not otherwise how to fill, with the Pictures of wild beasts, or monstrous fishes; which might well enough have pleased the eye, without betraying the judgment of the looker on. Of his Successors I am able to make no certain Catalogue; their names being doubtfully delivered, and the Succession much confounded amongst our Writers: the names of the Provincial Sultans being many times imposed upon us, instead of those of the Chams themselves. But we will wade through those difficulties as well as we can, and exhibit as perfect a Catalogue of them, as the light of Story will direct me: first adding (what should have been before remembered) that it is recorded, that Cingis before he joyntly battled with Uncham, consulted with his Diviners and Astrologers of the success. They taking a green Reed, cleft it afunder; writ on the one the name of Cingis, and Uncham on the other: and placed them not far afunder. Then fell they to reading their Charms and Conjurations, and the Reeds fell a fighting in the sight of the whole Army, Cingis Reed overcoming the other: whereby they foretold the joyful news of Victory to the Tartars, which accordingly happened. And this was the first step, by which this base and beggarly Nation began to mount upon the Chair of Empire and Sovereignty, whereas before they lived like beasts, having neither Letters, nor Faith, nor dwelling, nor reputation, nor valour, nor indeed any thing befitting a man, as before was said.

The Great CHAMS of the TARTARS.

A. C.

- 1162 1 Cingis, Cincibus, Zingis, or Changius, was made King or Cham of the Tartars; he subdued Tenduc, and Cathay, changing the name of Seythians and Seythia, to Tartarians and Tartaria.
- 1168 2 Jochan Cham, or Hocata, succeeded. In his time the name of Tartar was first known in Europe, Anno 1212. in which year they drove the Polesjacks from the banks of the Encine Sea. By his Captain Batba, or Reido, he subdued Moscovia, or Russia; planted his Tartars in Taurica Cherfonisus; wasted Hungaria, Bosnia, Servia, Bulgaria; and by his other Captains took Perfia from the Turks.
- 3 Zaincham, Batba, or Barcham, ruined the Turky Kingdom of Damascus, and Asia the less.
- 4 Gino Cham, whose Daughter conveyed the Empire unto her Husband Tamerlane, or Tamberlane.
- 1370 5 Tamir-Cutla, Tamir Cham, or Tamerlane, a great Tyrant, but withal an excellent Soldier. It is thought, that he subdued more Provinces in his life time, than the Romans had done in 800 years. Of whose acts we have spoke at large. Dying, he divided his great Empire amongst his Children, as Perfia to Mirza Chabaruk his fourth Son, Zagatbay to another, (perhaps unto Sautochus his eldest Son) and so to others.
- 1405 6 Lutrochin, the second Son of Tamerlane, succeeded in Cathay, though the eldest was at first proclaimed, which his Father had before prognosticated: who when his Sons came to him before his death, laid his hand on the head of Sautochus, who was the eldest, but lifting up the Chin of Lutrochin, who was the second. He lived not long, succeeded to by
- 7 Alan, who added little to his Estate.
- 8 Mango Cham, to whom Haiton an Armenian Prince (and the chief Compiler of the Tartarian History) went for aid against the Caliph of Bagdat. By whose perfwasion the said Mango Cham is said to have been Christened, with all his Household, and many Nobles of both Sexes.

9 Cublay Cham, the Son of Mango.

10 Tamul Cham, the Nephew of Cublay by his Son Cingis.

11 Demy Cham, the Great Cham of Cathay in the year 1540, or thereabouts. What the names of the Chams are who have since reigned, we cannot learn; nor what memorable acts have been done among them. The great distance of Countreys, and difficulty of the journey, have hindered further discoveries. For the Great Cham, and his next neighbour the King of China, will neither suffer any of their Subjects to travel abroad, nor permit any Foreigners to view their Dominions, or enter into them: unless their Embassadors or Merchants, and those but sparingly, and under very great restraints, to avoid all giving of intelligence touching their affairs; saving that in these later times the Jesuits have found some footing in China, by whom notwithstanding, we have received little or no intelligence in matters which concern this Countrey.

The Government is tyrannical, the Great Cham being Lord of all; and in his langue (besides which they have almost no Laws) consisteth the power of life or death. He is called by the simple Vulgar, The shadow of spirits, and Son of the Immortal God: and by himself is reputed to be the Monarch of the whole World. For this cause every day as soon as he hath dined, he causeth his Trumpets to be sounded; by that sign giving leave to the other Kings and Princes of the earth to go to dinner. A fine dream of Universal Monarchy. At the death of the Cham, the seven chief Princes assemble to crown his Son; and they place on a black course cloth: telling him, if he live well, Heaven shall be his reward; if ill, he shall not have so much as a corner of that black cloth to rest his body on: then they put the Crown on his head, and killing his feet, swear unto him fealty and homage. And at the Funeral of these great Monarchs, they use to kill some of his Guard Soldiers, whereof he hath 12000 in continual pay, saying unto them, It & domus nostra fruite in alia vita. Paulus Venetus reporteth, that at the obsequies of Mongo Cham, no fewer then 10000 were slain on this occasion.

These Chams are for the most part severe Justicers, and punish almost every small fact with sudden death; but theft especially: Inasmuch that a man in Cambalu taking a piece of milk from a womans head, and beginning to drink thereof, upon the womans out-cry was apprehended, and cut asunder with a sword, so that the blood and the milk came out together. Nor are Adultery or Lying punished with less than death, and so ordained to be by the Laws of Cingis, their first Emperour. A wiser man, than possibly could be expected from so rude a Countrey, and of so little breeding in the knowledge of Books or Business: the Tartars being utterly without the use of Letters, till the conquest of the Huys, a Cathayan Nation built of Christian Faith.

What Forces the Great Chams, in the height of their power, were able to draw into the field, may be conjectured at by the Army of Tamerlane, consisting of 1200000 Horse and Foot, as was said before. And looking on them as confined within Cathay, we shall find them not inferior to the greatest Princes. For Cublay Cham, long after the division of this great Estate, which was made by Tamerlane, had in the field against Naijan his Uncle, and one Caiaids, who had then rebelled, an Army of 100000 Foot, and 360000 Horse: there being 500000 Horse on the other side, which was probable enough, if he were in both Armies. And this is probable enough, if report be true touching the Chams of Zagathay, and those of Turchistan, (before reduced under the obedience of the other) of which the first is said to have been able to raise 300000 Horse, and the last an hundred thousand more. For standing Forces, he maintains 100000 Horse, distributed amongst four Captains, for the guard of his Person; besides which he hath great Forces in every Province, and within four miles of every City, ready to come upon a call, if occasion be: so that he need not fear any outward invasion, and much less any homebred Rebellions. But on the other side, admitting this for truth which before is said, we find him of no power at Sea, without which great Princes are exposed most commonly to the invasions and affronts of such as are strong in Shipping: For either the Eastern Tartars interposed betwixt him and the main Ocean, whereby he is Landlocked (as it were) from all Trade at Sea; or if he have any Port in the North-east parts of this long Countrey, where it joyneth on Tartarea Antiqua, it is so far off, and so much out of the way, that it adds nothing to his power, and not much to his purse.

Of the Revenues of the Cham, I can make no estimate, but may conclude them to be what he list himself: he being the absolute Lord of all, the Subject without any thing he can call his own. But that which ordinarily doth accrew unto him, is the tenth of Wool, Silk, Hemp, Corn, and Cattel. Then doth he draw into his own hands all the Gold and Silver which is brought into the Countrey; which he causeth to be melted, and preserved in his Treasury: imposing on his people instead of money, in some places Cockle-shells; in others, a black coin, made of the bark of trees, with his stamp upon it. And besides this he hath to himself the whole trade of Pearl-fishing, which no body upon pain of death dare fish for, but by leave from him. So that his Treasury is conceived to be very rich, though his Annual income be uncertain, or not certainly known.

Hitherto I have profecuted the affairs of this mighty Monarch upon the common credit of approved Authors, yet must confess I am not very well satisfied in the truth and reality of the thing it self; it being rather my opinion, that there is no such man at this present time as a great Cham of Tartary, with Sovereign Power and Jurisdiction over all the other Members of that vast body; but that this Empire being broken in pieces by the Sons of Tamerlane, the conquered Countreys did by little and little return again to their former Governments, or else were seized on by the Visi Chams or Governours of the several Provinces. For first I consider it as impossible that there should be such a mighty Monarch, of such absolute authority, such an infinite power, and such unlimited Revenue; and yet that for the space of an hundred years and more, we should hear neither tale nor tidings of them, nor so much as of their names, especially in an active age, and when this great building of the world hath such Catefments in it. For it must needs seem strange to a rational man, that neither Jenkinson who passed into Persia by the Caspian Sea, nor Sir Robert Shurley who spent much time in the Persian Court, nor Sir Thomas Roe, or Sir Dudmore Cotton (the first Embassadors to the Great Mogul, the other to the Persian Sophy) should tell us any thing of this Prince, if such Prince there be; or that the Travellers of our Nation who have rambled over all parts of India, the next neighbouring Countrey, should bring us home no tidings of him; or the Jesuits with all their diligence should not find him out. Secondly, I consider it is a thing improbable, that if there were any such mighty Prince, keeping his Royal Court in the City of Cambalu, so near unto the Kingdom of China, he should permit the beggerly Nations of the Eastern Tartary to conquer that rich and mighty Empire in so short a time, he in the mean season sitting still as a dull spectator, neither considering his own danger, nor putting in for for a threat of so great a booty. Thirdly, I observe that in the decree of a Marriage between Ximbiu the great King of the Eastern Tartars, now reigning in China, with a Daughter of the King of Tangut, the King of Tangut is called Prince of the Occidental, or Western Tartars, by which name the Chineses call all the Tartars inhabiting the vast Countreys of Alay and Cathay, especially so called, (as being Westward of themselves, and the Eastern Tartars.) which Title the King of Tangut had not merited or durst have assumed unto himself, if there had been any such great Cham then reigning in Cathay, and residing in Cambalu, as our Authors speak of. And fourthly, I observe it as a matter probable, that as at the breaking of this Empire into pieces upon the death of Tamerlane, the Presepenses, or European Tartars submitted to a Prince of their own Nation, under the Power and Government of whole Successors, they do still continue: and much of the Afatick Tartary being subdued by the Misowites, the neighbouring Tartars did return to their ancient Government by Hordes or Tribes; that so the Kings of Tangut might not only recover their own Inheritance, but by degrees possess themselves of the greatest part of all Alay, if not of some part of the Proper Cathay also. And therefore that some of the late great Chams mentioned in the former Catalogue, are no other than the Kings of Tangut, or the Chams of Zagathay, in whom (if any where) remaineth the Succession of the House of Cingis.

From these Premises I conclude, that all which hath before been spoken touching the great power, authority, and revenue of the great Cham of Tartary, must either be referred unto the times of their greatest glory, when their Empire was entire, or not much diminished; or else relate, with some qualifications, to the Chams of Zagathay, or the Kings of Tangut. But these my observations and considerations, with the conclusion issuing from them; I willingly submit unto better Judgments.

OF CHINA.

HINA is bounded on the North, with Alay, and the Eastern Tartars, from which separated by a continued chain of hills, part of those of Ararat, and where that chain is broken off, or interrupted, with a great Wall extended 400 Leagues in length; built, as they say, by Tizianzon, the 17 King hereof, on the South, partly with Caucasian, a Province of India, partly with the Ocean; on the East, with the Oriental Ocean; and on the West, with part of India, and Cathay; and from which no otherwise separated than by such natural bounds, and Ramparts as commonly divide great Countreys from one another.

The Northern parts hereof were utterly unknown unto the Ancients, both Greeks and Latines; But for the Southern parts hereof, they make up that Countrey which Ptolomy called Sinae, or Sinarum Regio, by which name the whole Countrey is called at the present by our modern Latinists; and from whence that of China seems to be derived. By Paulus Venetus called Mangi, by the neighbouring Countreys Sangai, by the Natives Taine, and Tchinois: which last, signifies no other than a Realm; or by way of excellence, the Realm. By the Arabians it is called Tzsin; and the Inhabitants call themselves by the name of Togais.

It is said to contain in circuit 69516 Dies of China measure, which reduced to our European measure, will make a compass in the whole of 3000 Leagues: the length thereof extended from the borders of India, to the most Northern Provinces of this Continent, 1800 Leagues. But they that say so, speak at random. For besides that 1800 Leagues in length, must needs carry a greater compass than 3000 Leagues, they make it by this reckoning to be bigger than Europe, which I think no sober man will grant. And answerable to this vast compass, it is said also to contain no fewer than 15 Provinces, every one of which is made to be, of a greater Continent than the greatest Realm we know in Europe: Yet not a Continent of waste ground, or full of uninhabitable Deserts, as in other places; but full of goodly Towns and Cities. The names of which Provinces, and the number of their Towns and Cities, I have thought fit once for all, to lay down in this Diagram following.

The Provinces, Cities, and Towns in China.

Prov.	Cit.	Tow.
1 Canton	37	190
2 Foquien	33	99
3 Olam	90	130
4 Sijnan	44	150
5 Tolenchia	51	155
6 Canjay	24	122
7 Minchian	25	29
8 Ochian	19	74
9 Honan	20	102
10 Pagnia	47	150
11 Taitan	47	78
12 Quinchien	45	113
13 Chaguan	43	95
14 Sijnan	41	105
15 Quinsay	31	114

By which it doth appear, that in these fifteen Provinces there are 591 Cities; 1593 walled Towns; and besides them 1154 Castles, 4200 Towns unwall'd; and such an infinite number of Villages, that the whole Countrey seems to be but one City only. But here we are to understand, that these great Provinces are divided into many lesser, and some of them presented to us (in late stories) under other names, according to the Languages and Appellations of those several Nations, which either have recourse unto them, or do traffique with them; which the Reader may take notice of with less doubt or wonder, in regard that the main Country of China itself is called by so many several names, as before was shewn.

It reacheth from the 130th. to the 10th. Degree of Longitude: and from the Tropic of Cancer, to the 53 Degree of Latitude. So that it lies under all the Climes from the third to the ninth; indifferently: the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, being thirteen hours, and forty minutes; increased in the most Northern parts, to 16 hours and 3 quarters. Enjoying by this site an air somewhat of the hottest, especially in those parts which lie under the Tropicks; but withal very found and healthy, and fit for the production of the choicest Fruits.

The Country very rich and fertile, inasmuch that in many places they have two, and in some three Harvests in a year: well cultivated, and sowed with all manner of Grain, and planted with the best kind of Fruits: which do not only come to a speedy maturity, but to more excellency and perfection than any of these Western parts. The like is also said of their Pearls and Becora, fairer and of greater virtue than those of America, or any other part of the world besides. Particularly it aboundeth with Wheat, Barley, Rice, Wool, Cotton, Olives, Vines, Flax, Silk, all kind of Metals, Fruits, Cattel, Sugar, Honey, Rubarb, Camphire, Ginger, all kinds of Spices, medicinal wood, call'd China wood by the name of the Country, Musk, and Salt: the Custom for which last in one City only, which is that of Canton, amounteth to the yearly value of 180000 Crowns. It yieldeth also an Herb, out of which they press a delicate juice, which doth not only serve them in stead of Wine, but preserveth their health, and freeth them from many of those inconveniences, which the immoderate use of Wine doth breed to others. Such store of Poultry of all sorts, but of Ducks especially, that in the Town of Canton only before mentioned, it is thought there are 12020 eaten every day, one day with another.

The people are for the most part of swart complexion, but more or less, according to their nearness to the heat of the Sun, short nosed, black eyed, and of very thin beards. They wear their Garments very long, with long loose sleeves, and their Hair much longer than the neighbouring Tartars, who wear their Hair exceeding short, and their cloaths much closer; to which two Fashions so addicted, that more of them took up Arms for their Hair and Habit (when required to conform in those particulars to the will of the Conquerour) than had done either for their King, or their common liberty. So much delighted with their own fashion and composure, that as the Ne-groes use to paint the Devil White, as a colour contrary to their own: so when these Chinies use to draw the Picture of a deformed person, they set him forth in a short coat, broad eyes, long nose, and a bushy beard. They are much given unto their bellies, and eat thrice a day, but then not immoderately: drink their drink hot, and eat their meat with two sticks of Ivory, Ebony, or the like, not touching their meat with their hands at all, and therefore no great foulers of Linnen. The use of Silver Forks with us, by some of our spruce Gallants taken up of late, came from hence into Italy, and from thence into England. Their Marriages they celebrate most commonly in the New Moon, and many times put them off till March, when the year beginneth with them as it doth with us: in which solemnity they spare for no cost nor charge, Music, and Stage-plays, and good cheer many days together. Yet doth not this take them off a jot from their natural industry, and their proficiency in Manufactures and Mechanick Arts. For the Son is bound to follow his Father's occupation: which Law, preventing the roaving about of idle people, and exciting in each breast an emulation in every Art, maketh the Inhabitants excellent Artificers. In giving Alms they are bountiful to the maimed, and the lame; but reject the blind, as being sufficiently able to get sustenance for themselves by corporal labour, as grinding of Corn, &c. They have long enjoyed the benefit of Printing before it was known in Europe, but Print not as we do, from the left hand to the right; nor as the Jews, from the right hand to the left; but from the top of the leaf downward to the bottom. Guns also have been used among them time out of mind: whence they are so well conceited of themselves, that they use to say, They themselves have two eyes, the Europeans one, and the rest of the people of the world not one. A pretty flourish of self-praising. Now that Guns were in use in these Eastern Countries, and consequently also amongst them, even when Bacbus made his Expedition into India (which was some three or four years before, or after the departure of Ishad out of Aegypt) Sir Walker Rawleigh seemeth to affirm: because Philstratus, in the life of Apollonius Tyanus, telleth us how Bacbus was beaten from a City of the Oxydrace, by thunder and lightning; which he interpreteth to be the Cannon. But certainly himself in another place of his most excellent Book, acknowledgeth this Philstratus to have written fabulously; and therefore no fit foundation for a conceit so contrary to probability, and the opinion of all times. Besides, whereas Dion telleth us, that by the benefit of thunder and lightning from Heaven, Severus discomitted Pescennius Niger; and by the same means, was himself repulsed from the Walls of Petra in Arabia: we may (if this interpretation hold good) as easily maintain, that Severus had great Ordinance in his Camp; and the Arabians in their Town. As for Printing, whether John Guttenberg learned it of the Chinies: or whether good inventions, like good wits, do sometimes jump, I dare not determine: sure I am that he first taught it in Europe; and as some say, in the year 1440. At Harlem a Town of Holland, it is first said to be practised; and at Meniz perfected. Now whereas it is by some doubted, whether the Art of Printing be available to the proficiency and advancement of Learning, or not; I must not herein be both a Judge, and a party: but must leave the decision of the point to men uninterested. Only this I dare boldly say, that this most excellent invention hath been much abused, and prostituted to the lust of every foolish and idle Paper-blurrier: the Treasury of Learning being never so full, and yet never more empty; over-charged to with the froth and foam of all foolish and unnecessary discourses. In which (though all Nations have their share therein, and we of late as much as any) the Dutch have been accounted the most blame-worthy: who not content to scatter their poor conceits amongst themselves, and Print them in their own Tongue in only (as our English Paper-blurriers do) publish them twice a the Latine to the eye of others, and send them twice a year to the publick Marts, though neither worth the Readers eye, nor the Printers hand. Scriptura plus habet quam miserrimum olim cum caetera maxime; the complaint once of an old Comedian, was never truer than at the present.

But not to dive too deep into this dispute, the people, as before was said, are good Artificers, ingenious and excellent in all things which they take in hand: the Precious Dishes, curious Carvings, and the fine Painted Works which we have in Tables, Leather, Stuffs, being brought from thence. Effeminated with much ease and pleasure, they are not much given unto the Wars, which maketh them the more easie prey to the Neighbouring Tartars, whose very name hath bred more terrors in them, than their Arms

Arms or Conquests. Inasmuch that when Usangueius, requested Aid of Zungtze King of the Eastern Tartars, against Lycangtze, and his rabble of Rogues, which sacked the City of Peking, and placed himself in the Throne Imperial; the Tartarian having but few men in readiness, advised him to array a good part of his own Soldiers with the Arms and Colours of the Tartars, that on the Terror of that sight he might obtain the cheaper, and more certain Victory: which prudent Council was pursued, and it proved accordingly: but what they want in courage, they supply with Wit, being fain to be a politic and judicious people; but withal very jealous of their women, and great Tyrants over them, not suffering them to go abroad, or sit down at the Table if any stranger be invited, unless he be some very near Kinsman. A Tyranny or restraint, which the poor women give no cause for, being fain to be very honest and much reserved; not so much as shewing themselves at a window for fear of offence: and if they use painting, as most of them do, it is rather to preserve themselves in the good affections of their Husbands, than for any other lewd respects. For the most part of a fair Hair, whereof very curious, binding it about their heads with Ribbands of Silk, and garnished with Pearls and precious Stones. Neat in their drefs, and very costly in their apparel, with reference to their estates, and the degree of their Husbands: the richer sort wearing attire lusc'd with Gold, and interlaced with very rich jewels: the poorer in Serge, and razed Velvets. They have most of them little feet, which they take great pride in, and for this cause bind them up hard from their very Infancy; which they endure patiently though they be very painful: because a small foot is accounted for so great a grace. And yet it is conceived that this proceeded not so much from their own curiosity, as from the jealousy of the men, who have brought it in, to the end that they should not be able to go but with a great deal of pain; and that going with so ill a grace, and so little ease, they should have no desire to stir much abroad. A custom so Ancient and received, that it hath got the force of Law; and if any Mother should do otherwise in breeding their Daughters, they would undergo some censure or mark of infamy. If a desire to see their Parents get them the freedom of a wife, they are carried to them in clofe Chairs, and attended by so many waiters, that it is not possible for any man either to see them, or hold any discourse with them.

Of both Sexes it is thought that this Country containeth no fewer than 70 Millions. Which though it seem to be a number beyond all belief; yet it is knowingly averred, and may be thought probable enough, if we consider the spaciousness of the Country. 2 The secret goodness of the Stars, and temperature of the Air. 3 The abundance of all things necessary to life. 4 That it is not lawful for the King to make any War, but merely defensive, and so they enjoy perpetual peace. 5 That it is not lawful for any Chinies to go out of the Country. And 6 That here the Sea is as well peopled as whole Provinces elsewhere. For the Ships do resemble a City, in which they buy, sell, are born, and die. And on the several Rivers which water the Walls of Nanquin, and Pekin, for no less than 300 Leagues, the Ships are said to be so thick ranked, that it seemeth to be a continual Street.

The people hereof in matters of Religion, are generally all Gentiles, and conceive thus of the Creation; viz. that there was one Taine, who created Tanxon, and Panxina, whose Posterity remained 90000 years; but they for their wickedness being destroyed, Taine created Luitxam, who had two horns: from the right came men, from the left came women. When any of them dieth, they cloath him in his best apparel, all perfumed, set him in his best Chair, and there all his nearest Kindred kneeling before him, they take their leave with tears. When he is Coffin'd, they place him in a room richly furnished, with Candles continually burning on it. Not much unlike to which Ceremonies, we find, how whilst the funeral was preparing for Francis the French King, his Statue apparelled in Royal Robes, with the Crown, Scepter, &c. was laid on his Bed; whither Dinner and Supper was daily served in, with the like State and Solemnity as when he was living. But to return again to my dead Chinies; when he has lain, as is above said, fifteen days, he is carried forth to his Funeral, the place whereof is in the Fields; for to be buried within the Walls, were a thing of all others the most wretched. Hither, when they are in the manner of a Procession, come, they burn his body, and with it Men, Cattel, and other provision, for his attendance and sustenance in the other world: as they use in the Funerals of Tartary. As great Idolaters are also, sacrificing to the very Devil, and that upon the same reason, as the most ignorant sort of the Gentiles do; because forth he is a wicked and mischievous creature, and would otherwise hurt them.

Yet in the middle of this darkness there appeareth some light, whereby we may perceive that Christianity had some footing here, in the times foregoing; for they believe, that God is an immortal Spirit; that by him the first man was made of nothing; that the Soul dieth not with the Body, but is capable of reward and punishment in another life, according to the works it hath done in this. Which left they should be thought to be only some remainders of the light of nature, (the learned men amongst the Ancient Greeks and Romans, having so much Divinity as this, without the Gospel) we may here add, that the Idols most generally worshipp'd by them, is painted with three heads looking one on another; signifying, as themselves affirm, that they have all but one will, which makes some think they had been Anciently instructed in the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity. They have also the Picture of a very fair Woman holding a Child in her Arms, who, as they say, was Daughter of some great King; and that she was delivered of that Infant when she was a Virgin. And as some add, they have portraitsures of the Salmon, and with the marks or Characters of the twelve Apostles, (as usually painted in some part of the Christian Church: of whom they are able to say nothing, but that they were great Philosophers who lived virtuously here, and were therefore made Angels in Heaven. And finally they hold, that there is a great number of Saints, or men Elevated in an eminent degree of Happiness, who in their times exceeded others in knowledge, industry, or valour, or lived an austere life without wronging any man: or otherwise deserved nobly of the Commonwealth, as the Authors of some fabled benefit unto their Country.

These I conceive to be some evident remainders of Christianity, or the Remembrances rather of that Christianity, which formerly was known amongst them: first planted here (as may be probably collected) by St. Thomas, or some of his Disciples: an Ancient Breviary or Liturgy of the Indian Churches, giving good hint to it: Where it is said, Per D. Thomam regnum calorum volavit, & ascendit ad Sinas: i. e. that by St. Thomas the Kingdom of Heaven was Preached unto those of China. Some Chalrallies here were also of it, in the time of the Tartars, though now obliterated, and not visible but in these decavements; And in this state it stood till the time of our Fathers, in which the Jesuits (commendably industrious in the propagation of the Christian Faith) not without great danger to themselves, have endeavoured, and in part part effected, their Conversion. For though they have gained but few Profelytes, (in regard of those infinite numbers of people which are said to live here) yet some Converts they have made amongst them; and thereby sown those seeds of that saving Truth, (though mingled with some errors of their own) which may in time increase and spread over all the Country. For at the present they have not only got footing in the Ports and Sea-Towns; but also in many mid-land Cities, and in some also very far distant from the Sea; in all of which, they have both Churches for their followers, and Cells or Monasteries for themselves; and finally, have gained far upon the Court, as not only to have their doings well approved of by Authority Royal; but have also gained unto the Faith, the Mother, Wife, and eldest Son of Jungly the late declared Emperor of the Chineses, which eldest Son they have baptized (and be it an happy Omen, for the good of Christendom) by the name of Constantine.

Hills of great Note here are not many, here being but one Mountain touched upon by Ptolomy, in his description of the Country called Sinarum Regio, which we conceive to be the Southern part of this China: agreeable unto the observation of Modern Writers, by whom it is affirmed to be so plain and level, and so unfurnished with hills at all; that they have Carts and Coaches driven with sails as ordinarily as drawn with horses, in these parts. Not the less destitute of Rivers for this want of Mountains, Ptolomy naming in it, 1 Aphrata, 2 Senis, 3 Amphite, and 4 Cotiaris; all which had here their fount and fall: yet he knew the out-skirts of the Country only. But because the Country of the Sine, of which Ptolomy speaks, make but a South part of this great Country, and the Rivers which before we mentioned in Serica, pass into it also, it's possible enough, that we may find them all amongst the chief Rivers of this Country, whenever we shall come to have a more perfect Chorography hereof than former times have given unto us. In the mean season we may know, that the names by which the principal Rivers are now called, are 1 Tale, which rising in the North-east parts of the Country, and passing by the Southern skirts of Leantong, falleth into the Ocean over against the Island of Corea, making a little Iller at the Inflox of it, fortified with a strong Castle called Xaing-hai, to secure that entrance. 2 Croceus, which arising in the West borders hereof, first bendeth its course to the North-east, watering the City of Kiaingchen, and after passing directly Eastward, till it falls at last into the Tale. 3 Polyganga, which issuing out of some of the branches of Mount Imaur, first passeth by the great City of Cambala, and falls at last into the mighty Lake of Quinsay, and finally again contracted to its proper Channel, doth either lose it self in the Eastern Ocean, or in the great River of Kiang, of which more anon. 4 Cacamacan, another of those great Rivers which falleth into the Lake of Quinsay, and possibly may be the same which the Chetayzen Tartars call by the name of Caromoram. 5 Kiang, (or Quiam, as the Tartars call it) which having its original from Mount Imaur, and passing thorow the whole breadth of Cathay, cutteth thorow the middle of this Country, which it divideth (like an Equator) into North and South, watering therein the stately Cities of Nanquin and Cassing, where it is no less than 4 miles broad, encircling more and more in breadth by the falling in of other principal Rivers, till it come at last to be 30 miles over, and cutting up such Mountains of Water, that the Chineses call it not undervulgarly, The Son of the Sea. 6 Giantshan, the same (I think) which the Tartars call Quianzen, which rising out of some other spurs or branches of the Mount Imaur, falleth at last into this Country, and passing by the goodly City of Hangken on the North, and the fair Town of Xaoking on the South, endeth its course at last in the Eastern Ocean. 7 Queen, a River of the Southern parts, but not much observable. Here are also many great Lakes, not inferior to some Seas in bigness; so plentiful in Fish, as if they contended with the foyl, which should be most profitable: and yet so swelled with winds (though the winds many times blow strongly) that both upon these Lakes, and on the Rivers and Sea-coasts, they pass up and down in small Barks, with no other Sail than a Bough set up an end in the midst of them; by the help whereof they make good speed in their Navigations. Nor do these Lakes or Rivers use to overflow their banks, or endanger the Country: but when they do, it brings some fatal ruine with it; as in the year 1527, when the Lake of Sancey breaking out, overwhelmed seven Cities, many Towns and Villages, and Country people, almost infinite numbers.

Towns of most Note amongst the Sine, though nothing but the names be remaining of them, 1 Bramia; and 2 Rhabana, honoured with the title of Civitates, 3 Aphrata, 4 Achata, more within the Land; but all four under some degree of Northern Latitude, 5 Thine, the Metropolis of the Country, by some called Sine; 6 Sarata, 7 Catananagara, these on the South side of the Line. But in this Ptolomy was mistaken; it being found by the more certain observations of our later Writers, that no part of China comes within 20 degrees of the Equinotial; and so not capable of having any Towns or Cities of a Southern Latitude. Here was also a large bay called Sinarum Sinus, a Promontory named Nanpin, in the fourth degree of Northern Latitude; and another named Satyrorum, lying under the Aequinox. More than this of the Cities of the ancient Sine, I have nothing to say, which I dare offer to the Reader.

But to behold them as they are presented to our view in the Modern China, it hath been said, that for number there are no fewer than 501 Cities; and those so uniformly built, so conformable to one another, that they differ not in form and fashion, but in quantity only. Much like the Cities of Utopia, mentioned by Sir Thomas More, Idem situs omnibus, eadem, quatenus per locum licet, rerum facies, so near resembling one another, that he who knoweth but one of them, may conjecture at all. And this is the manner of their building. Most of their Cities have the benefit of some navigable River, near which they stand: the waters whereof serve them both for navigation, and domestic uses. Two great Streets crossing one another in the very midst, so broad, that horsemen may ride a breift in the narrowest of them; so that a man standing in the middle, may see either side; each end being shut up with a Gate of great strength and beauty; and those Gates fortified and strengthened with thick plates of Iron. Generally greater and more stately than those of Europe, but defective in that point of elegance which the Magnificent Churches, and more sumptuous buildings for the dispatch of publick business, in these parts abound with. Their private houses for the most part are also low, and destitute of Porches, Windows, Galleries, the principal ornaments and graces of Architecture. Nor are their Cities built only for resort, or trade, but for strength and safety, environed with deep and broad ditches, the Walls of brick or stonell, strong above belief, planted with Ordnance and Artillery in convenient places: and every night the Gates are not only locked, but sealed; not to be opened till unsealed by the principal Magistrate. So like they are to one another, that we may say with Ovid on the like occasion;

— Facies non omnibus una,
Nec diversa sament, qualem deest esse fororum.

Which

which I find thus Englished by G. Sandys.

Amongst them all no two appear the same,
Nor differed more than Sisters well became.

But not to rest our selves on this general Character, let us take a more particular view of some of the principal. And in that list we find, 1 Quinsay, called Sunien by the Natives, situate somewhat towards the South, on the Western borders of this Kingdom, where it consisteth on Cathay; of this Town many things are reported beyond all belief, as namely, that it contained once in circuit an hundred miles, and had in the midst of it a Lake of 30 miles compass; in which Lake were two goodly Islands, and in them two magnificent Palaces, adorned with all-necessaries, either for majesty, or convenience; in which are celebrated the publick Feasts, and the marriages of the better sort. The Lake nourished with divers Rivers, the chief being Polyganga, and Cacamacan; on which Rivers 12000 Bridges are said to have lifted up their stately heads: and under whose immense Arches, great Ships with Sails spread abroad, and top and gal land, might and did usually pass. It is also said to have had ten Market-places, each of them four miles amunder, and every one in form quadrangular, the sides thereof half a mile in length. Here were said also to be twelve Companies of Traddlers or Artizans, each Company having 12000 Shops, and in all a million and 60000 Families. But whatsoever it was in the former times, certain it is that at this time (if it hath at this time any being at all) partly on the removal of the Court from hence to Cambala by the Tartars; and since to Nanquin and Pekin by the Princes of the House of Hambu, and partly the fury of Wars, and partly by the violence of Earthquakes, it hath lost no small part of her ancient beauty and renown. 2 Unguen, famous for the abundance of Sugar there made. 3 Nanquin, seated 9 Leagues from the Sea, on the great River of Kiang, whereon ride for the most part no fewer than 10000 of the Kings Ships, besides such as belong to private men. The Town in compass 30 miles, being girt with three fair brick walls, having large and stately Gates. The streets in length two Leagues, wide and paved; the number of houses is about 200000, so that it may equal four of the fairest Cities of Europe. 4 Pekin, or Pagania, in the middle of the Province so named, (being one of the four Northern Provinces, which take up the whole breadth of this mighty Kingdom) where the King continually resideth; and that, either because the air hereof is more healthful and pleasant, than any of the other, or because it lieth near unto the Tartars; with whom the Chineses are in perpetual War: so that from hence the dangers which may by their invasions be either prevented, or relisted. The City said to be inferior to Nanquin for bulk and beauty, but to exceed it in multitude of Inhabitants, Souldiers, and Magistrates, occasioned by the King's abode. Environed on the South with two Walls, of so great breadth, that twelve horsemen may run abreft upon them; on the North, with one Wall only, but that so strong and vigilantly guarded, that they fear as little annoyance on that side as they do on the other. But the greatest Ornament hereof is the Royal Palace, compassed about with a triple Wall, the outwardmost of which would well environ a large City; within which pass, besides the many Lodgings for Eunuchs, and other Courtiers, are Groves, Hills, Fountains, Rivers, and the like places of pleasure, larger in circuit, but not comparable for the Arts of Architecture to the Royal Palaces of Europe: First built by some of the Tartar Kings of this Country in imitation of the Royal Palace of Xajinda, mentioned in Cathay, honoured sometimes with the residence of the Chams themselves, which as it gave unto the City the name of Pekin, that is to say, the Court or City of the King, in the Language of China; so gave it occasion unto some Writers to make this name, and Cambala the same, both names being of the same signification, though in divers Languages, 5 Cantan, supposed to be the Catigara of Ptolomy, by the Chineses called Quamchen, the least of the Metropolitan Cities of this Country, but beautified with many triumphant Arches, a navigable River, large Streets, and many goodly Bridges. Fortified with deep Trenches, 83 Bulwarks, and seated in so rich a soil, both for Fowl and Cattel, that here are said to be eaten daily 6000 Hogs, and 12000 Ducks, besides proportionable quantity of other victuals. If this be one of the least of their Metropolitan, what may we fancy of the greatness of a Town in which the Portugals drive a wealthy trade, being permitted in the day-time to come within the City it self, but at night excluded, and forced to find lodging in the Suburbs. By reason of which restraint they have settled their Mart at Macao, the Port-Town to this, where they have their Factor, and many Families; the Town being almost wholly peopled by them. 6 Leantong, the chief City of Leantong (another of the four Northern Provinces) and the first Town taken by the Eastern Tartars in their attempts upon this Kingdom, by this door making themselves an entrance unto all the rest. 7 Ningvien, made the Metropolis of Leantong after the taking of Leantong by the Eastern Tartars. 8 Sigan, or Singan, the chief City of Xensi, sometimes of the four Northern Provinces, and honoured with the Kings residence. 9 Xaoking, on the South side of the River Gienhang, one of the fairest Cities of China, so environed with sweet waters, as a man may contemplate its beauty, as rounding it in a Boat; containing a Navigable Channel whose sides are garnished with the like ornament; and of the same stone there is also built many fair Bridges, and triumphant Arches; the houses being all of the same stone also, which render it the nearest (though not the biggest) City in this mighty Kingdom. 10 Suebean, about two days journey from the Sea, seated in Marishes like Venice, but more commodiously, because those Marishes are of fresh water; the streets and houses founded upon Piles of Pine-tree; with many Bridges, and conveniences for passage both by land and water. Well traded, as the fittest Center for dispersion of Merchandise from all the other Ports of the Kingdom: by the multitude and frequency of Ships, almost denying faith to the eyes, which would think all the Ships of China to be here assembled. So infinitely rich, that the small Region whereof it is the Head, containing but eight Cities more, payeth 12 millions to the King of yearly Income. 11 Hamsen, or Hangchen, on the North side of the River Gienhang, out of which furnished with a Channel of great length and breadth, by which it trades into the Northern parts of this Kingdom; the Metropolis of the Province of Chequian, about two days journey from the Sea; in compass less than Nanquin, but better built: no places in it taken up with Gardens, Orchards, or other pleasures; but all employed for Shops, Houses, and other Edifices. So beautified with Triumphant Arches, erected to the honour of deserving Magistrates, that in one Street there are 300 of great masts, of workmanship. The Temples magnificent and many; the bank-sides of the Channels watering every Street, beset with Trees of shade, and most excellent Fruits: and in the middle of the City a round high Mountain, which gives the eye a gallant prospect into every Street. And not far off a pleasant Lake of great breadth and length, the banks whereof are beautified with Groves and Gardens, and the Lake it self even clothed with vessels of all sorts, on which the Citizens use to feast, and entertain their idle time with Plays and Spectacles. Two Cities to replenish with all kind of pleasures, that the Chinois use to a Proverb, Thien Xam, thien thum, ti Xamfu hum, that is to say, Look what the Hall or Prefecture-Chamber is in Heaven, that Hansen and Suecheu are on Earth. 12 Focheu, beautified amongst many other stately Structures, with a magnificent Tower erected on 40 Marble Pillars, of great elegance, cost, and bigness, every Pillar being 40 spans in height, and 12 in breadth: not to be parallel'd, as some say, by any the like work in Europe. 13 Lo-chian, as in which are 70000 Families, 14 Colan, famous for the best Porcellane. 15 Sciambay, by some called Thien-cin, a station to which an incredible number of Ships resort, both by Sea and River, from all parts of this Kingdom; seated within 24 hours sail of the Isle of Japan, and therefore defended with a strong Garrison, and a Navy. Situate in a pleasant and wholesome soil, the whole Country lo forth with trees, as if it were one continued Orchard. So populous, that it containeth 40000 Households, most of which get their livelihood by weaving Cottons, it being supposed that there are 200000 persons which attend that Manufacture. 16 Chinchiam-fu, whence by a River made by hand, there is a passage to Suecheu, the water of which never freezeth, and for that cause do clogged with Ships in time of Winter, that the passage is stopp'd with the multitudes of them. 17 Zuan-cher, a most rich and beautiful City, environed with large waters, and the only Southern Port within the Land to which Ships or Boats may have access. 18 Caiton, or Caitung, seated upon the River Giang, a City once of three Leagues in compass, whose Harbour was seldom without 500 Ships, and sometimes honoured with the Seat or Residence of the Kings themselves; most miserably destroyed Anno 1642, by Zuanchin the late King of this Country, who breaking down the dams and sluices to let in the River, for the dislodging of some Thieves and Out-laws, who had then belieged it, gave it to great and forcible a passage towards the Town, that it bare down the greatest part of the houses of it, and therein drowned above 300000 of the natural Citizens; before which time the Metropolis or chief City of the Province of Honan. 19 Kuingchen, on the South-side of the River Croeu, the richest and the fairest City in these parts of the Country, commodiously seated to command that River. 20 Chanking, the head City of the Province of Quam-tung, for the strength and convenience of its situation thought fittest for the seat of Jungly, the last deposed Emperor of the Chinses against the Tartars. 21 Sueilin, the chief City of the Province of Quangsi. 22 Taining, the Metropolis or chief City of Xanfi or Canfy, another of the four Northern Provinces, but not else observable for any thing I find of it, either in point of Trade or Story. 23 Manchang, a chief City of the Province of Kiangsi, of which little memorable; and less of 24 Cegiron, but that it is like unto the rest in form and Structure.

Besides the Provinces before mentioned, there are three others not directly under the dominion of the Kings of China, though depending on it, that is to say, 1 The Province of Suecheu, 2 The Island of Corea, 3 The Island of Cheusan.

1. The Province of Suecheu, lyeth on the Southwest of this Kingdom, of the same nature both for soil and air with the rest of China, but possessed by a more warlike people; the women here being trained up to feats of Arms, and so well practiced on their weapons, that when the Queen herself went to the aid of the Emperor Vanley against the Tartars, Anno 1618, she took with her a small

Army of 9000 women, performing actions not unworthy the bravest men: the chief City hereof is called Cingra, of great capacity, and to exceeding populous withal, that Changhiensungu (that most barbarous Tyrant) caused no fewer than 60000 of them (men, women, and children, all indifferently) to be slaughtered in one day before his face. The whole Country governed for a long time by its own Kings, of the name Taimingian Race with the Kings of China, from whom dwelling received their investiture, they were afterwards of absolute authority over their own Subjects, who acknowledged no other King but him. And in this state it did continue till the year 1644, when Changhiensungu, whom before I named, entering into this Country with his rabble of Rogues, made a Conquest of it, murdered the young King, Son to the Amazonian Queen, which before we spoke of: depopled the great City of Cingra, butchered at one time twenty thousand Priests, at another time eighteen thousand Students; and finally committed such unpeakeable outrages, that the Tartars, in mercy to that wretched people, sent an Army against him, by which he was vanquished, and slain; this Province thereupon submitting to the Tartars as their great deliverers.

2. Corea, is an Island of the Eastern Ocean, not far from the North-east of China, over against the fall of the River Yalu. The quality of the soil, the dimensions of it, and what Cities it containeth in it, I have no where found. The people far more warlike than those of China, with reason of the ill neighbourhood of the Japanese, with whom they have always either open Wars, or uncertain Peace. Invaded by them, they made an offer of their Country to the King of China, who having repulld the Invaders, restored their Country freely to them, without Lying any other Imposition on them, than of love and gratitude, which obligations those of Corea have discharged most fully. For when Vanley, the late Emperor of China, was first invaded by the Tartars, they sent up his aid twelve thousand men well Armed, and exerted in the Wars increasing their supplies in the time of Theinques, who next but one succeeded Vanley. Drawing the whole storm upon themselves by those friendly aids, they were accordingly assisted by the King of China, whose Forces came to seasonably in the heat of a Battle between the Coreans and the Tartars, that the Tartars after a long and terrible fight, were driven out of the Island, but with such incredible loss on all sides, that few or none escaped of the Army of China, seventy thousand of the Coreans slain, and the Tartars leaving fifty thousand of their men behind them; after this they were unhand of their fleet and final Conquest of the Kingdom of China, when seeing the Tartars Lords of all, and no possibility of resistance, they submitted to them, about the year 1648, upon condition of retaining their Hair and Habit, which no extremity of personal danger, or fear of publick defolation, could compel them to alter.

3. Cheusan, is an Island of the same Seas, on the South of Corea, opposite to the City of Nympus, in the main Land of China; an Island which being heretofore a dwelling place of poor Clowns and Fishermen only, is now become a potent Kingdom. For Lu Regulu, chosen by a party of his own to succeed to the withstanding the great China, and finding no hopes of withstanding the great power of the Tartars, retired himself into this Island with his friends and followers, followed not long after by great multitudes of the natural Chinses, who chose rather to forsake their Country, than to conform in Hair and Habit to the will of the Tartars; inasmuch that there are now now found in this Island threecore and ten Cities, with a strong and formidable Army, which hitherto hath commended all the Tartarian Power and Forces, and watch for some happy occasion to advance again their Kingdom in China.

The ancient Inhabitants of the Sine, in the time of Ptolomy, were towards the North, the Semantian bordering a Mountain of that name, and the only one remembered in all this Country: more Southward, the Acadre, and Alphire: Towards the Sea Anabazte, and Ich-shophagi (these last so called from living wholly upon Fish.) United into one body by the name of Sine, and known by that name to the Romans, in the time of Ptolomy, who boundeth them on the North with Serica, on the West with India extra Gangem, and on the East and South with a Terra Incognita: which though it make up the least part of the Modern China, Serica touching only on a Corner of the Northwest of it, and the main Ocean washing it on the East and South: yet the Arabians in their Tauin, and our late Latine Writers in their Sina and Sinensium Regnum, do from hence give the denomination to this mighty Kingdom. How far they stretched beyond the bounds laid down by Ptolomy, and whether they subdued the Eastern and more Northern Nations, or were Conquered by them, it were hard to say; nor is it easy to resolve, from what original these and the rest of the Inhabitants do derive themselves, whether from the Judians, or the Scythians: or that it was primitively planted by some of the Posterity of Noah, before the enterprise of Babel: which last may probably be concluded from the extreme populousness of the Country, the many magnificent Cities their Industry and Ingenuity in all Arts and Sciences, not to be taught them by their neighbours, more ignorant in those things than themselves. And hereunto the Chronicles of China seem to give some ground, which tell us of three hundred and forty Kings, which for the space of four thousand years have therein reigned. For as their Chronicles inform us, (if they may be credited) the Country being without Rule or settled Government, was first reduced into order by one Vity, the Son of Ezalem: by whom the people were instructed in Physick, Astronomy, Divination, and the Art of Tillage: to which, this Vity, having found out the way of cutting or sawing Timber, added the use of Ships and Houers, and many other the effects of Mechanical hands. Having by the valour of Lincheon one of the Commanders, subdued a great part of the Country, he drew them into Towns and Villages, distributed them into Offices, and several Trades, disposing those of the same Trade into Streets by themselves; and commanding that no man without leave from himself, or his Officers, should follow any other Trade than that of his Father. He prescribed them also the fashion of their Garments, taught them the Art of making and dying Silks: and having reigned an hundred years, left the Kingdom well established upon his Posterity. Of this Race there are said to have been 217 Kings, who held the State 2557 years.

The last of them was that Tzaintzour, who being ill-nourished by the Scythians (not yet called Tartars) is said to have built that vast Wall spoken of before: extended 400 Leagues in length, and at the end of every League a strong Rampart or Bulwark, continually garrisoned, and well furnished with all warlike necessities. He being slain by some of his Subjects, burdened and waded with his work, the Race of Vity ended; and that of Anchofan succeeded, a Prince of much Prudence, but greater courage. In his Line it continued under 25 Kings, but thrice shaken towards the close by a Civil War, between Trunshy, the 23 of his House, and his Nephew

Laupy. Hardly well settled under Quimrey, the last of this House, when Tzauu, a great Tyrant of the other Faction, set upon him, and slew him. And so the Majesty of the Blood-Royal being trod under foot, the Crown was also tossed from one hand to another, and made a Prey unto the strongest: there being of the Race of this Tzauu, eight Kings, reigning 62 years: Of the Race of Dian, five Kings, who reigned thirty one; of the Race of Tzoy, three only, who reigned thirty seven; Of the Race of Tenao, one and twenty, who held the Crown 294 years, and eight there were who reigned 120 years, of the House of Tanzum. Of other upright Families to the number of five, were fourteenth Kings also, who governed only for the space of 66 years: And then one Laitzun, try, obtained the Vitay, the first King of the Country, which he and seventeen of his Posterity, for the space of 320 years, governed with much peace and honour. Forsar, the last King of that Royal Family, foretold by Prophecy that he should be deprived of his Kingdom by one who had an hundred eyes, neglected the Advertisement, as unworthy credit: but it fell out agreeable to that Prediction, when vanquished by Chisfan-baan (which word signifieth an hundred eyes) Lieutenant unto Ujan, a Tartarian Prince, but made a Province of the Tartarians, was governed for the space of 93 years, under nine Tartar Kings, Tributaries to the Great Chan, and dependants on him: the Chams themselves many times passing into China, and abiding there according as their pleasures or affairs did invite them to it, which occasioned such a continual intercourse between those of China and Caitay, that they have much participated ever since that time of the manners and customs of each other. But here it is to be observed, that the Tartars spent almost as much time in the Conquest of China, as they did in the possession of it; the War being first begun, Anno 1206, finished 1268, the Tartars being totally ousted when they had reigned here 90 years only, that is to say, Anno 1358, or thereabouts, considering with himself the discontentedness of the Chinses under so long Bondage, the luxury of the Tartars, effeminated with the pleasures of that Country, and the unwarlike temper of Gim Cham, then reigning over all in the City of Cambalu, raised to himself so strong a Party, that in short time he drove the Tartars out of all; forcing them to betake themselves to those parts of the Eastern Tartars, which now make up the Kingdom of Sinche.

1. Finally turning towards the West, he not only recovered back to China such parts thereof (as had been layed unto Caitay, and incorporated with it by the Tartars; but growing thereby a formidable neighbour to the Cham himself; Advanced for this great Service to the Crown of China, Anno 1269, he took unto himself the name of Hungu (our late Writers commonly call him Humbin) which signifieth as much as the famous Warrior, and gave unto his Children, and their Posterity, the name of the Taimingian Family, which they still continue. For the recovery of this Country, great Tamerlane mustered up his Forces, and though Humbin brought into the field 350000 Horse and Foot, yet nothing could resist the powerful genius of that mighty Conqueror, who obtained here a signal Victory with the death of 60000 Chinses: but wisely moderating his prosperity, and mainly bent upon his war against the Turks, he thought it his best and safest way to let the people of China have a King of their own, imposing on him a Fine of 300000 Crowns in ready money, a certain annual Tribute (long time after paid) with certain other conditions, which as they were pleasing to the Victor, so they were not destructive to be vanquished. By means hereof it came to pass, that such a long communication in Affairs of State, having passed between China and Cathay (those of China in old times Lorded it over part of the Chinghisians, as the Cathayans in late times did over the Chinghisians), there grew a great resemblance between both Nations, in Manners, Conditions, Arts and Manufactures, as before is said, which circumstances lay together, may afford some reason why in some Writers, easily misquided by such probabilities, Cathay and China have been reckoned to be one and the same. Nor did the Empire of the Chinghisians extend in old times, only over part of Seythia, but also over part of India, and some of the Oriental Islands. But the Princes of the House of Hambu, finding their own Kingdom large enough to content their desires, abandoned all the Acquisories and Out-parts of their Dominions: prompted thereunto, not only by their own Moderation, but by some misfortunes which befell them. For as we find that the Romans having by the fury of two violent tempests, lost no fewer than 206 of their Ships and Gallies, resolved to abandon (and for a long time did forbear) the Sea, which had used them so unkindly: So the Chinghisians having received a great overthrow, and loss of 800 Ships, near unto Zeilan, they freed all the Islands from obedience unto them, and contented themselves with the bounds which nature had bestowed on them. And of their moderation herein we have a very rare example. For when the people of Corea, a small Island adjacent, on the Confines of China, were invaded by the Japoneses, they submitted themselves unto the King of China: who having repulsed the enemy, and thereby freed his own Country from danger, presently re-delivers over unto the Coreans, their Towns and liberty. A rare fact of a contented people. Whether it favours of greater moderation or magnanimity, I am not able to determine. In this Family had the Realm continued under 15 Kings, for the space of 266 years and upward, reckoning from Hambu unto Boneg: who being the twelfth in this Line, succeeded his elder brother, unfortunately slain with a fall from an Horse. Reported for a Prince of good disposition, great judgement, and a severe Justiciary, this Boneg (otherwise called Fanly) began his Reign, Anno 1573, governing this Kingdom in great prosperity and glory for the space of 40 years and upwards; when causing the Christian Subjects and the Jesuits their Converters to be harshly dealt with, and denying Justice to the Eastern Tartars for the many wrongs done them by his Prefects in the Province of Leontong, he drew that people into Arms, as if marked out for Executioners of Divine displeasure. Stript by them in the year 1618, of a part of Leontong, and braved by their Forces within sight of Pekin, he contracted some melancholick distempers, of which he died about two years after, leaving the Crown to his Son Taichang, who having held it but four months, left it, and all the troubles of it to his Son Thinkie, a valiant Prince and fortunate against the Tartars, but of short continuance. For dying in the year 1627, he was succeeded in that Kingdom by his brother Zunchinus, a Prince of contrary disposition, cruelly bent, a great Oppressor of his Subjects, and for these causes ill beloved; yet they continued in obedience (though for fear rather of the Tartars, than for love of him) until the year 1640, or thereabouts. At what time the people in many places oppressed with Taxes, and in the Northern parts with Famine, arise in 8 Companies of Armies, which growing wanton by success, and warring upon one another, they are at last reduced under two chief Leaders, that is to say, Lycungz and Changchibengum.

These two being come to an agreement took their several ways, the last of them falling into Suchuen, whose villanies and deferred destruction we have there related. Lycungz the more fortunate villain, in the year 1641, besieged Chifang the chief City of the Province of Hanan, a place of great strength, but far greater riches, on the ruin whereof by the Kings improvidence, and his subduing the whole Province of Xenfi, he took to himself the title of King, and would be called Lycungz the Prosperous; and not long after causing the people of the Taxes which the avaricious King had imposed upon them, putting the Tax-masters to death, and gaining upon all sorts of men by his courteous usage, he took unto himself the name of Emperor. Zunchinus succeeds his Brother, hindered by Factions in the Court, from sending formidable Forces against the Rebels, who passing over the great River Crocu without any resistance prevailed in all places where they came, even to the taking of the great City of Peking, and the Palace Royal; at the hearing whereof, the Emperor seeing no way to escape their hands, hanged himself in his own Orchard, Anno 1644. his example therein followed by the Emperors and his principal Servants. The body of the Emperor cut in pieces, his two younger Sons beheaded, the principal Magistrates murdered, and that great City sacked by command of the Victor. Forced to remove back again to Xenfi by Unguin Commander of the Army in Leontong, who called in the Tartars to revenge those Outrages, the Rebels taking with them all the wealth and treasure which the Emperors of the Tamining Family had amassed together in the space of 260 years and upwards, Zungun the King of the Tartars having thus got the City of Peking, died presently after, leaving his Son at nine years old to succeed him in that glorious fortune. By him commended to the care and protection of Uncles, who very faithfully discharged the trust reposed in them; infinite numbers of Tartars thronging into China upon this occasion, and those not only of the Eastern but the Western Nations.

By these the Infant-King was proclaimed Emperor of China, by the name of Xunehin, styling the new Imperial Family by the name of Tarting, the eldest of the Uncles whom the Tartars called Amavangum, having the chief conduct of Affairs.

Unguin by the Tartars not long after is declared King of Xenfi, out of which he shortly drove the Rebels, and possessed himself of it; Lycungz being either killed in the fight, or else otherwise lost. Hongquang Nephew to Vanley, and Cousin German to Zunchinus, elected Emperor by the Chinghisians of the Southern parts, is opposed herein by one that pretended himself to be the eldest Son of Zunchinus; which division gave the Tartars a notable victory over all their Forces, and the great City of Nanquin in reward thereof.

The new Emperor being shortly after betrayed into the hands of the Tartars is by them hanged on the Walls of Peking; which death the Tartars count most noble. The pretended Son of Zunchinus discovered, and served in the same fort also. And though Leontong first, and afterwards Jungly, and Lu. Regul, were chosen and declared Emperors by their several parties, Anno 1648, yet nothing could prevail against the fortune of the Tartars, Leontong being forced to put himself into their power, Jungly to fly into the Mountains, and Lu. Regul to secure himself in the Isle of Chenxan.

What hath succeeded since that year, future times will show.

The Government of this Kingdom is merely tyrannical; there being no Lord but the King, no title of dignity or nobility ever known amongst them; nor Toll or

Duty

Duty paid unto any but to him: the younger Princes of the blood being maintained by Stipends, and annual Pensions, large enough to support their Trains, but without any Lands or Tenants, for fear of drawing on them any great dependence. The King alone is the general Landlord, and him the Subjects do not only reverence as a Prince, but adore like a God. For in the chief City of every Province, they have the Kings portraiture made of Gold, which is always covered with a Veil: and at every New-moon, the Magistrate and other inferior Officers use to kneel before it, as if it were the King himself. By these and other Artifices of like contrivement the Common people are kept in such awe and fear, that they are rather Slaves than Subjects: calling their King the Lamp of the World, and Son of the everlasting Sun, without whose light they were able to see nothing.

In every Province, except Pequin and Tolenche only, he hath his Deputies or Vice-Royes, maintained by liberal stipends from the public Treasury: but those he governeth by himself. Some Laws they have, and those affirmed to have been written 2000 years since, as is like enough they were. So strongly do they favour of the ignorance and Atrocity of the darkest times: the manner of life by them allowed, most offensive and shameful; their Idolatry most gross and palpable; their Exorcisms ridiculous, and the prostitutions of their Virgins most abominable; and the variety of sensual prophaneations, to an illuminated mind most base and contemptible. In a word, nothing commendable in their course of life (notwithstanding the brags which they make of themselves) but their Arts and Industry.

The Forces which this King is able to draw into the Field must needs be infinite, considering that incredible number of Subjects under his command. For whereas France is thought to contain 15 millions of people; Italy with the Isles, as many; Germany, with the Swissers and Belgick Provinces, about that proportion; Spain not above seven millions; and the Kingdom of England about four: this Country only is computed at 70 millions; which is more by 15 millions than all together. Proportionably his Levies must be so much greater, than can be ordinarily raised out of those Countries. But because it may be thought that his Subjects, though more in number, may be less trained to the wars than those of Europe: the contrary is affirmed by such as have taken an estimate of the Forces, which every Province is bound to entertain in continual readiness. And by that estimate it appeareth, that in the year 1557 (though a time of peace) there were dispersed in the fifteen Provinces of this Realm, to the number of five millions, 846500 Foot, and 948350 Horse. Which notwithstanding it may be said, and not unjustly, that he is able to bring into the field, amongst such multitudes of men, but few good Soldiers, the people being generally unwarlike, and of no great courage, as was before observed of them in that general Character. Nor is he less powerful for Sea-service, having continually great Fleets for the guard of his Coasts, in continual attendance, and many more ready to set out when there is occasion: inasmuch that the Chinese use to say in the way of a Proverb, That their King is able to make a Bridge of Ships from China to Babylonia, which are 50 Leagues asunder. Some of these Ships (whereof the King hath above a thousand of his own, besides those of his Subjects) of great magnificence and beauty: the Officers and Soldiers in all which are exceeding well paid, and rewarded answerably to their merits. And as this King is able to raise greater forces than any from his own estates; so doth he also de facto do it, when the urgency of his affairs doth require it of him: his ordinary fleet being 300000 Foot, and 200000

Horse, without which compleat number (not only in the muster-roll, but in bodies of men) he vouchsafes not to go into the field.

Answerable unto these great Levies of men, must be his Revenue: which they who have travelled in this search if they tell us true, and do not build upon an hope of not being confuted, (as for my part I fear they do) affirm to be 123 millions of Crowns, answered unto him out of the profits of the Mines of Gold, Silver, and other Metals: the tenth of all commodities which the Earth brings forth; the toll imposed on that unpeackable quantity of Merchandise, which passeth on so many navigable Rivers from one Town to another; the Customs taken of all those rich wares which are brought into Europe, and the Gabel laid on Salt in all parts of his Kingdom. Out of which sum, the payment of his Fleet discharged, the entertainment of his Soldiers satisfied, and his Court defrayed, there remaineth 40 millions of Crowns de claro to be disposed of, either in his treasury, or private pleasures, or the works of magnificence and ostentation.

And thus far also according to the general current of received opinions have I followed the descriptions and affairs of China, as a distinct Country from Cathay; not ignorant that there are many probable reasons which might incline us to believe them to be one and the same; for first it is alleged in favour of this opinion that it is neither new nor strange, for one and the same Country, to be called by divers names, according to the languages and fancies of several Nations; that Country which we call Germany, being by the Natives called Dutch-land, not long since known most commonly by the name of Almaine; that part of Britain which we call Wales, being by the French called Galler, and Cambria by the Latine Writers: those mountainous people which the Romans knew by the name of Rhetis, being by some of our Northern Latins called Confederati Cant, Campi Camini by Ammianus Marcellinus, Grannipuntum by the neighbouring Dutch, and finally Grisius by the French, which four last names do carry all the same sense and signification, though in different words; that China it self, is by the Natives called Tabinu, Taisin by the Arabians, Mangi by Paulus Venetus, and by the neighbouring Nations Sanglay; that as it cannot be inferred from the like diversity of appellations that Almaine, Germany, and Dutch-land, make three several Countries, (& sic de ceteris) so neither can it be concluded on the same grounds that China and Cathay make two several Empires. In the next place it is alleged that since by later voyages and navigations, this mighty Kingdom hath been discovered, and made known unto us of Europe by the name of China, the name and Empire of Cathay hath grown out of knowledge. For proof whereof they bring in the Itinerary of Benedictus a Goez, a Jesuite, who in the year 1603, crossing from the North-east parts of Persia to the Realm of China, and naming all the several Countries and Towns of any note which lay in his way, makes no mention of any such Country as Cathay; nor any such Prince as the Great Chan thereof: telling us also that Martin Marinus, who had lived long in China, in his Books entitled Belium Tartaricum, comprehendeth all the Countries betwixt China and Mount Inu, under the general Name and Notion of the Western Tartars, not taking notice of any such Country as Cathay; nor of any greater Prince amongst them, than the King of Tangut; and that Ramusius in his notes on Paulus Venetus, reporteth some conference which he had with Chagimemet a Persian Merchant, who told him that he had seen Campion and Succur Cities of Cathay, in the reign of Demercan, which must be understood of Cathay.

in the general Notion, as it comprehendeth all the Tartarian Countries beyond Imam, it being well known that Campion and Succurri are two Cities of Tangut, and not of the proper Cathay, or Cathay specially called. In the third rank of proofs they inforce in the similitudes, or resemblances betwixt both Countries, and both people, which are so great and visible in the temperature of Air, fertility of Soil, and pleasantness of Situation, in Customs, in Ingenuity, Arts and Manufactures, as may be thought to carry an Identity, or sameness with them; which sameness or Identity they do also find in Pequin the chief City of China, and Cambalu, the supposed chief City of Cathay, being two words of the same sense and signification, though of divers sounds; for Pequin signifieth the Court or City of the King in the Chinian Language, and Cambalu signifieth the Court or City of the Cham, in the Language of Tartary. The like they also have observed of the Royal Palaces, adjoining to the said two Cities, so like in the vast greatness and extent of the outer Walls, the Parks and Forelands intermingled, the magnificent form and structure of the inner Palaces, with all the rest of the particulars before-recited, that a man might very well conclude them to be one and the same, adding withal that such an immense, and unparalleled work, as the great Chan's Palace called Xaindu, must needs require more hands and a longer time, than the great Cham (considering their continual wars, and little intervals of leisure) could bestow upon it. But their four head-proofs, which seem indeed to be the strongest, they derive first from the Testimony of Benedictus Gees above-mentioned, who without taking notice of any such Country as Cathay, in so long a journey, telleth us that at Ciala a City of the Kingdom of Cassir, and not far from China, he was first informed that Cathay and China were the same. 2<sup>d</sup>. From the Testimony of an old Mahometan Pilgrim, who returning from Meccha by Labar (the Royal Seat and City of the great Mongul) affirmed there that he had lived long in Cambalu, they chief City of Cathay, which Kingdom had in it one thousand and fifty Cities, the King thereof being a very mighty Prince, and having a strength of 400 Elephants brought thither from Malacca and Pegu, and that much Merchandize was brought in the Country by Sea: which if it be not meant of China (to which the story may agree in all particulars) must needs be one of the loudliest lies that ever came from the mouth of a Mahometan, or a Pilgrim either; our Geographers finding very few Cities or Towns of note in Cathay specially called, no access thither by Sea for any Merchandize, nor any way to bring those Elephants from Pegu and Malacca, which the Pilgrim dreamt of. 3<sup>d</sup>. A clearer Testimony of some other Mahometans respecting to Pequin every fifth year, either as Merchants or Embassadors, or as both together; by whom the Jesuits there living were informed, that in the Dominions of the Persian, and the great Mongul, from whence they came, the Kingdom of China was called by no other name, than by that of Cathay, they knowing no other Country of that name, but China only. And 4th. From the asseverance of Pantegia, another Jesuit; who in his Letters dated from Pequin much blamed our ordinary Maps for placing Cathay next to China, whereas (saith he) China or Sinai is Cathay, as this Pequin where we now are is the City of Cambalu; which two last evidences coming from the Pen of one who had lived many years in China, and not conducting any way to the advancement of the Catholic cause, must needs be thought to carry some great credit and authority with them.

These reasons if they be of force and moment to the point in hand, we must then add Penelope's part, unravelling all the Web which before was woven, Antique terms in Latin omne redibis opus, in the Poets Language, which that we may the better do, and with as little detracments to the whole piece as possibly we can, I shall thus proceed. First then it is to be conceived that Cathay specially called, was an aggregate body, containing many several Kingdoms, and distinct Estates, though Homages to the Kings of Cathay, or dependents on them: as anciently in the Realm of France besides the Kings of France themselves, there was a King of Burgundy, a King of Metz, a King of Suiffons, a King of Olestan; and after that a Duke of Normandy, a Duke of Bretagne, a Duke of Aquitain, and Earl of Campaigne, and Earl of Toulouze, all absolute and uncontrollable in their own Estates. And then the Kingdom of Tangut, which we placed in the Southern parts of Altay, must be made one of the Kingdoms of Cathay; and Demercan, whom we ranked in the Catalogue of the Chams of Tartary, must be brought a peg lower, and looked on as a King of Tangut only, and no more than so. 2<sup>d</sup>. It must be taken for granted, that the Tartars having conquered the Realm of Cathay, and afterwards, by the help of that people, subdued China also, caused all the Northern parts of China to be called Cathay, as being in the same Latitude and Parallels with it, and much of the same nature and complexion, both for Soil and Air, giving unto the Southern parts (which was the true and proper Country of the Sine) the name of Mangi, transferred afterwards by some Authors to the Country generally; and having thus extended the Name and Territory of Cathay, the first foundation of their greatness, they fixed their Royal Seat in the City of Pequin, which by a new Tartarian name (but of the same sense and signification) was from thence called Cambalu. Thus in the first place the French Kings of the Caroline Family, communicated the name of France (East France it was most commonly called) to the greatest part of Germany, then conquered by them; the Catholians of Spain extended the name of Castile on every side, as they got ground upon the Moor, till it became the largest Province of any one name in all that Continent; and Roger Earl of Sicily, having conquered the Eastern parts of Italy (which now make up the Kingdom of Naples) commanded it to be called the further Sicily, and himself to be crowned King of both, by the name of King of both the Sicilies. And in the second place, the French Dukes of Zweibrucken in high Germany are by the French called Dukes Deux-ponts, by the late Latin Writers Duces Bipontani, all in the same sense and signification; the Town of Sherizogen Bofch is by the French called Bois le Duc, by the Latin Writers, Status Ducis; and here at home the Military Towns or Stations of Liddesdunum, Colonia, Præfidium, ad Lapidem, and Portus Magnus were turned by the conquering Saxons (the former significations being still retained) into Bedford, Colchester, Warwick, Stoneham, and Portsmouth, commonly now called Portsmouth, Calverham Alutun into Edenburgh by the Pills or unconquered Britanni. 3<sup>d</sup>. We may take it for a truth unquestioned, that Hunbar having expelled the Tartars out of Mangi, or the Southern parts, and fixed the Royal Seat at Namquin, on the South side of the River Kiang (though paying both fine and tribute to victorious Tamerlane) did afterwards on Tamerlane's engagements beyond the Mountains, and the cantoning off of that great Empire amongst his Children, expell them out of the North parts also; his Successors thereupon removing the Court to Pequin (from henceforth China name) the better again by its true, proper, and Chinian name) the better to attend the motion of that dangerous Enemy. Tersusalem, commanded to be called Elir by the Emperor Adrian, and London named Augusta Treburanum by some other of the Roman Emperours; transferred to their old names names again, as-foen as that authority failed, it imposed the new. And 4th. as from this time forwards the Northern parts of China might still retain the name of Cathay, and being most traded by the Persian and Indian Merchants, might be best known by that name in their several Countries: so by dividing this great Empire into so many parts, removing the Imperial Seat to Sameracand, on the other side of the Mountains, erecting many new Estates out of the ancient Prefectures, and Governments of Cathay it self, and parceling the remainder of it between the Kings of Tangut, Cassir, and such other Princes of the Tartars, as were not wanting to themselves in those opportunities, the true Cathay might lose that name by little and little, which formerly it had communicated to those parts of China. Thus the Burgundian, Lombards, Vandals, Hungars, lost those names at home, in their ancient and native habitations, which still remain unto those Countries that were conquered by them. These reasons and considerations I willingly submit to the Readers Judgment, being my self to great a Sceptick in this point that I dare determine nothing positively on either side. It is enough that I have layed the cause open without partiality, or byassing on either hand, before the Jurors; let them give up their verdict in it as they like the evidence.

OF INDIA.

NDIA is bounded on the East with the Oriental Ocean, and some part of China, or as some others say, with a great Country called Mange (not much known unto us of Europe) intersected betwixt it and China, on the West, with the Persian Empire; on the North, with some branches of Mount Taurus, which divide it from Tartary; and on the South, with the Indian Ocean. So called from the River Indus, the nearest of esteem and note in all the Country, towards these parts of the world.

It is conceived to be the largest Country, of any one name in the world, except China and Tartaria; affirmed by Pomponius Mela, to be of such a great extent on the Seacoasts of it, that it was as much as a Ship could sail in 40 days. Extended from 106, to 159 degrees of Longitude, and from the Equator to the 44th degree of Northern Latitude. By which account it lieth from the beginning of the first, to the end of the sixth Clima: the longest Summers-day in the Southern parts being 12 hours only, and in the parts most North, 15 hours and a half.

Concerning the monstrous Fables which the Ages foregoing have delivered to us of this Country, give me leave to say, that as the Poets used of old to fill up the times of their that were ignorant, with strange Fictions, and prodigious Metamorphoses, or as our modern Geographers, in the Maps of the World, fill up those unknown parts thereof, with which they can give us no certain description, with strange Pictures and uncouth shapes of Beasts and Trees; so also the Writers in former Ages have filled the story of remote Countries, of which they knew little, with fables impossible and incredible relations. Hence there have been attributed to this India, the Fables of men with dogs heads, of men with one leg only, yet of great strength; of such as live by scent; of men that had but one eye, and that in their forehead; and of others, whose ears did reach unto the ground. It is reported also that this people by eating a Dragons heart and liver, attain to the understanding of the languages of beasts; that they can make themselves, when they list, invisible; that they have two tubs, whereof the one opened yields wind, the other rain, and the like. But these relations, and the rest of this strain, I doubt not but the understanding Reader knoweth how to judge of, and what to believe. For my part I am of the same mind with Curtius, Plura equidem transcribo quam credo; nec enim affirmare ausus sum que dubito, nec subducere sustineo que accipi: I may perhaps relate some things which I do not credit, but shall not let them pass without some cautions; that so I may neither impose any thing on the Reader's belief, nor defraud him of any thing conducive to his contentation.

The Country (to report no more of it than it doth deserve) enjoyeth an exact temperature of the air, two Summers, (or one as long as two) and a double increase, blest with all things which are either necessary to the life of man, or of convenience and delight; particularly with Mines of Gold and Silver; and with precious Stones; with Spices of all sorts, and Civets; with the best medicinable Drugs; Metals of all kinds, except Copper and Lead; abundance of all sorts of Cattel, except Horses. Somewhat defective also in Wheat and Vines, that so this Country might be beholding unto others, as well as others to this. Famed also for abundance of Camels, Apes, Dragons, Serpents, Rhinoceros, Elephants. These last more favouring of reason and humane ingenuity, or else more tractable and docile, than any brute creature whatsoever. Of this we have a fair influence in the Story of the Acts of Alexander. The Elephant which King Porus sat upon, finding his Master strong and lusty, rushed boldly into the thicket of the Enemies Army: but when he once perceived him to be faint and weary, he withdrew himself out of the Battel, kneeled down, and into his Trunk received all the Arrows which were directed at his Master. The greatness of the Creature makes it yet more admirable that either he should have soul enough of his own, to actuate so vast a body; or being of such strength and bigness, should submit himself to the instructions of another; some of these Indian Elephants, as Aelianus hath affirmed, being nine Cubits high, and as many long; and in breadth or thickness about five Cubits. Nor doth the Sea afford less plenty or variety, than we find on shore: yielding abundance of the richest and fairest Pearls, huge shoals of fish, and amongst them the Whale or great Leviathan; exceeding the proportion of that Land-monster the Elephant. For though the ordinary dimension of the Whale be but 46 Cubits,

Cubits in length, and eight in thickness: yet Nearchus in Arianus is said to have measured one, in these Indian Seas, which was of the length of 50 Cubits, and of breadth proportionable: not to say any thing of that incredible report of Pliny, who speaketh of some Indian Whales, which were nine hundred and threescore foot, or four Acres long.

The people are of five sorts, and as many Religions: that is to say the Natural Indians, derived from the Original Inhabitants of it. 2<sup>d</sup>. Moors, or Arabians, who more than two hundred years ago, possessed themselves of some Towns, driving the Natives up higher into the Country. 3<sup>d</sup>. Jews, scattered and dispersed (as in other places) into all parts of it. 4th. Tatars, in those Parts and Provinces which are under the Great Mongal. And 5th. Portugues, who have many Colonies and Factories in the Ports and Islands, but brag as if they had made a conquest of all the Country. Which notwithstanding, considering that the natural Indians are by far the greatest number, we must relate to them only in the *Charact*er which is made of this people. Affirmed to be tall of stature, strong of body, and of complexion inclining to that of the Negrees: of manners civil and ingenuous, free from fraud in their dealings, and exact keepers of their words. The common sort but meanly clad, for the most part naked, content with no more covering than to hide their shame. But those of greater Estates and Fortunes (as they have amongst them many Ancient and Noble Families) observe a Majesty in both Sexes, both in their Attendants and Apparel; sweetening the last with Oyls, and Perfumes, and adorning themselves with Jewels, Pearls, and other ornaments befitting. They eat no flesh, but live on Barly, Rice, Milk, Honey, and other things without life.

The Women not of much fairer complexion than the men, yet of lovely countenances, wear their hair long and loose, but covered with a thin Veil of Calico Linn. Their ears hung with many rings, so great and heavy, that they are torn, and stretched to much disproportion; their noses also ringed, and behung with Jewels according to their estate and quality. Servilely obsequious to their husbands, whose affections they divide amongst them without jar or jealousy: the men allowed here, as in all the East, the use of many wives, whom they buy of their Parents for a yoke of Oxen; and may marry as often as they list. In which they have too great a privilege above the women, who after the decease of their common husband, do either burn in the same flame with him, or else are forced to doom themselves to perpetual Widow-hood. But of this we may speak more hereafter, when we come to the particulars.

The Christian Faith was first planted in these Countries by St. Thomas, from whom the remainders of Christianity take denomination; and unto whom the Records and Monuments of that Church do ascribe their conversion. For in one of their Breviaries written in the Chaldean Tongue, and translated into Latine by Father Johann Maria Campanin a Jesuite, we find it thus, Per D. Thomam evangeti error Idolatrie ab Indi, &c. i. e. By St. Thomas the errors of Idolatry vanished out of the Indies; by St. Thomas, they received the Sacrament of Baptism, and the Adoption of Sons; by St. Thomas, they believed and confessed the Father, the Son, and Holy Ghost; by St. Thomas, they kept the Faith received of one God; And finally, by St. Thomas, the splendour of saving Doctrine did appear to all India. His body, as they say, is interred in the City of Maliapar, upon the Coast of Choromandel; the truth of which tradition I dispute not here. But this Plantation of the Gospel by the hand of St. Thomas was not universal over all the Country, but in some Parts and Provinces only: or else was forced to give ground while prevailing Heathenism. For in the Reign of Constantine, we read how the Indians living on the further side of the River Ganges (for so I understand the Indi interiores of my Author) were converted to the Faith by the Ministry of one Frumentius, of the City of Tyre; who having spent the greatest part of his time amongst them, was employed in that service, and consecrated the first Bishop (for those Churches) by the great Athanasius of Alexandria. But being the foundation of this building was laid by St. Thomas, the remainder of Christians here being, ascribe the whole work to him; called therefore Christians of St. Thomas. Governed originally by their own Bishops, subordinate to an Archbishop of their own also, residing at Gasegama fifteen miles from Cochin, one of the chief Cities of this Country; who for a long time acknowledged obedience to the Patriarch of Musal, by the name of the Patriarch of Babylon, as by these Christians of India he is still termed. The number of the Christians computed at 15 or 16 thousand Families; or at 70000 persons in that large tract of ground, which beginning at the out-lets of Indian and Ganges, stretcheth unto the Cape or Promontory called Cape Comari. The Points wherein they differed from the Church of Rome, 4. Their admitting the Sacrament of the Eucharist in bread seasoned with salt; 2. Administering in both kinds, but using instead of Wine (which is scarce, or not at all, to be had in this Country) the juice of Raisins soaked in water over night, and so pressed forth; 3. Not baptizing Children until 40 days old, except it be in danger of death; 4. Permitting no Images in their Churches, but that of the Cross; 5. Allowing one marriage to their Priests, but forbidding the second; 6. In painting God with 3 heads on one body, to denote the Trinity; 7. Denying the Use of extreme Unction; And 8. not acknowledging the Pope's Supremacy; but besides these remainders of those ancient Christians, there are some others now of late of a new Plantation, by the pains and travel of the Jesuites, though not with such success here, as they found in China: many of the Inhabitants, partly by the diligence of the Arabians, and partly by the power of the great Mongal, having embraced Mahometanism; and being consequently less inclinable to admit the Gospel, than when they were in the condition of their natural Genitism. Yet have they made such good progress in it, that Eshelar the Mongal, not only founded a fair Church for the use of the Christians in the City of Agra (the Regal City of that Empire) but committed to the care of the Jesuites the Education of two Princes of the Regal Family. And possibly they might have made a great increase of Christianity before this time, had they not been opposed thereto by Sultan Cerross, a bitter Enemy to their proceeding, in the Reign of his Father, and no great Favourer of them since. Inasmuch that hearing a Jesuite, called Francisco Carr, report unto his Father how miraculously a wooden Cross of his had escaped the fire, he was very urgent with his Father to have a great fire presently made, and the same Cross to be thrown into it, upon these conditions, that if the Cross consumed not, his Father and himself should be burned in the same fire with it. A fiery trial which the poor Jesuite had much ado to put off, and preserve his credit. Howsoever they have gained one point of view the old Christians they have gained to the Church of Rome, great confidence and importance to the Jesuites. For in the year 1599, by the solicitation of the Jesuites and others, the Indian Christians renounced their obedience to the Patriarch of Musal, and submitted their

Churches

Churches to the Jurisdiction of the Pope of Rome, in a National Synod held at Liamper, not far from Maliapar, by the Arch-bishop of Goa (the Primate of the Portugals in those parts) not only rejecting all opinions contrary to the Roman Tenets, but delivering all their Books and Liturgies to be altered and refined by the said Arch-bishop, according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Rome, which was done accordingly.

But these comparatively to the rest, come not to an handful; the main body of the people wallowing in their Genitism; and still retaining many of those ancient Customs, which they used of old: as viz. 1. Not knowing their Wives after they have born them two children: Nor keeping them, if after five years cobabitatio they can raise no issue by them, but then exchanging them for others; 3. Rewarding none for any military exploit, if they bring not with them in their hands the head of an enemy: 4. Killing their Friends, before they were withered or decayed by Age, or Sickness. To these they have since added others of a later invention, perhaps more barbarous; of which we may have opportunity to speak anon. Their Priests or Learned men in the time of old were called Brachmanes from one Brachman, the preceptor of their Rites and Laws, by whom introduced in the Endiments of their Philosophy; some of which, from their being naked, had the name of Gymnosophists; who were to them as the Chaldei to the Assyrians; the Magi to the Persians; and the Druids, to the ancient Britanni. Had in great Reverence by the People, and living for the most part an austere and solitary life, in Caves, and Dens, feeding on herbs, poorly apparelled, and for a time abstaining from all carnal pleasures; but that time past, they may indulge themselves more liberty, and admit the company of women. Others of them live together with the common people, as being their ordinary Priests. Of these, the great Alexander, when he was in this Country surprized ten; one of them called by the name of Calanus, with whom he had a great deal of communication: propounding to him many strange questions, and receiving back to many of them, (as himself confessed) some not unsatisfying, though strange answers. To these Gymnosophists, or Brachmans, the Brachmanes do now succeed, both in place and authority; but differ from them most extremely in point of learning, and the civilities of their lives: these Brachmanes being the most impure, libidinous, and sensual beasts in all the Country; privileged with the first nights lodging of every Bride, which when fared with their filthy lust, they sell, or traffick with, to strangers, serving as Strabons to old men, and as Panders to young; so steeled in wickedness, and ignorant of all good Letters, that they have nothing of a man but the voice and shape. Mahometanism is also entertained in a great part of the Country, first brought in by the Tartars, and neighbouring Persians, unto whom conforming; but much increased by the victories of the Great Mongol: who being, originally a Tatar, and of that Religion, hath caused it to be propagated in most parts of his large Dominions.

Mountains of most note in it, besides Cancesus, and some other of the branches of Taurus, or Ararat, common to this, and the Tartarian and Persian Empires, 1. Sardonicus, full of Mines of those precious Stones which are called after the name of the Mountain. 2. Vindicus, 3. Bitigis, 4. Adafrahas. 5. Those called Apoepi, and 9. Those named Oreidi. And on the further side of Ganges, 7. Repyrbus, 8. Mendarus, 9. Those called Danufi, and 10. Seambius; parts of this last extending also unto China. All of them very fruitful in the production of Mines, and Rivers, as will appear by looking over the particulars when we come unto them.

But the Mountain of chief note of all, is that which Pholom called Bitrige, and is now named Gase; the Southern part of the great Mountain Iman spoken of before: extended from Mount Caucasus, where it crosseth the Taurus in right Angles, to Cape Comari, a known Promontory of Indochina, or the higher India (which it divideth into East and West) for the space of 400 Leagues and upwards. Conceived by Ptolemy, a Learned Writer, to be that Mount Sephar, mention whereof is made in the tenth of Genesis, where it is said to be the utmost Eastern limit of the Sons of Jokan, Gen. 10. 30. With probability enough, for ought I can see; the Sons of Jokan being settled in these parts of India; and the Provinces of the Persian Empire which lie nearest to them. And of far Stephanus doth concur with Ptolemy, as to affirm of this Mount Sephar, that it is Mons Indus, and Indus Mountain: both of them grounding on St. Hierom, who expressly saith, Sephara mons Orientis in India, juxta quem habitaverunt filii Jokan. i. e. That Sephar, or Sepher, is the name of a Mountain of the East in India; near to which dwelt the Sons of Jokan. More probably, without doubt, than that we should transfer it into America, as I see some do; and make it there to be the great Mountain of the Andes, which runneth the whole length of Peru, from one end to the other, and thence, as some will have it, to the Straights of Magellan. Which should we grant, we must not look for Jokan, or the Sons of Jokan, either in Arabia Felix, where Bacharus placeth them; nor in the Eastern parts of Asia, where most probably they may be found; but we must cross the vast Oriental Ocean, and look for them in a place where they never were; besides, that granting this for true, we must allow America to have been known in the time of Moses, which no Author that I ever met with, did so much as dream of.

Rivers of most note are, 1. Indus, which ariseth out of that part of Taurus, which the Ancients called Paropamisus, the Moderns, Nangraos; and having received into it 19 other Rivers, after a course of 900 miles, falleth into the Ocean at seven Mouths, that is to say, 1. Sagappa, being the most Western; 2. Sinburn, 3. Aureum, 4. Cariphi, 5. Sappara, 6. Sabalassa, 7. Loribare, the most Eastern. But five of these being choaked with Sands, or drawn into the neighbouring Channels, there are now remains but only two. A River famous in Records and ancient stories, for giving name unto the Country and that celebrated voyage of Alexander, who sailed down it towards the Indian Ocean: the voyage holding above five months, of which there is said to have passed no day wherein he sailed not 15 miles, or 600 Furlongs. 2. Ganges, which riseth, as some say, from the Mountain Iman, (or rather from that part of Taurus, where Iman falleth right upon it,) and falling headlong down the Rocks, is first collected into a Lake or Pool, (supposed by others for the fountain and original of it,) whence with a candler pace it passeth towards the Ocean; taking in by the way, as is said by Pliny, 30 navigable Rivers. In the narrowest place of eight miles breadth, in the broadest 20, seldom so shallow but that the depth thereof is 100 foot, or 20 Geometrical paces. Parted into five great Channels it falleth at last into the Sea; the first of which most towards the West, is called Camblylin, 2. Magnus, 3. Cambervicus, 4. Phindolamun, and 5. that which lieth furthest towards the East, called Antiboli. This River erroneously supposed to be that Pisus which watered Paradise: and to encrease the reputation of the error, we find it countenanced by Josephus, and other no less eminent names; and also backed by some traditions of the people which inhabit near it. By whom it is affirmed, that one of the Bengalan Kings sent men up the River, who came at least to a pleasant place, blest with a fragrant Earth, swift air, and quiet waters; beyond which they could go no further. The truth and reality whereof doth so possit them, that at the mouth of this River called Gangage, such as are weary of this world use to cast themselves into the Current, and are presently devoured by a Fish, called Sea-dog, by whom they hope to find a quick passage to Paradise. The occasion of which error among the Ancients, proceeded from those words of the Scripture, in which it is affirmed of Pisón, that it compassed the Land of Havilah: which granting that it did, inferreth not that either this River must be Pisón, or that India is intended by that Havilah. For besides Havilah the Son of Joktan, planted in some part of India, there was another Havilah the Son of Chus, settled in the Land of Havilah or Chifiana, not far from Babylon: this last indeed watered by the River Pisón, and the first by Ganges: too far asunder, and divided by too many Nations, to be taken or mistaken one for another. But no less famous, because none of those which neighboured the Garden of Eden, perhaps of greater fame than any of those which did. For this River do the superstitious Indians make their solemn Pilgrimages, vainly conceiving that they shall be sure of their Eternity, if at the time of their death they may drink of this water. To the overflowings of this River do the people ascribe the fertility of the Countries adjoining, as the Aegyptians do to Nilus. And finally, by this River was the whole Country anciently, and at this present is, divided into two main parts, (each subdivided into many particular Provinces) viz. 1. India intra Gangem, 2. India extra Gangem. Of each of which we will first take a brief survey, with reference to the state and story of it in preceding times; and then consider them with reference to the present Age.

1. INDIA EXTRA GANGEM.

INDIA EXTRA GANGEM is bounded on the East, with the River Ganges, till the fall thereof into the Sea; and after that with that large and spacious Bay, called anciently Sinus Gangeticus, now the Gulf of Bengala; on the West, with Paropamisus, Arachosia, Gedrosia, Provinces of the Persian Empire; and part of the Arabian Seas; on the North, where it is broadest, with Mount Taurus, branched into Paropamisus, Caucasus, and other parts; and on the South, where it endeth in a sharp Point or Promontory, by Ptolomy called Comoria extrema, but now Cape Comari, with the Indian Ocean. So named from being situate on the side of Ganges; by the Moderns, Induflau.

The Country of the same nature formerly, as it is at the present, not altered but by changing of the Channels of Indus; which being shifted by an Earthquake, turned a great part of the once neighbouring Region to a sandy Desert: Indus (as many other of the Indian Rivers) fatning and enriching all the Land which it overfloweth. The people of those elder times, much like the Seythians, especially in their course of life, living without Cities, Temples, Houses, in their movable Tents: their food the bark of a Tree, called Tala, which served for bread; and the flesh of Bucks, Does, and other Venison, with the skins whereof they made their Garments. All of them Free-men, but no Slaves to be found among them. Less warlike than the Seythians, but as great contempters of death as they: the very women contending eagerly amongst themselves, which should accompany their Husband (one Husband having many Wives) to his Funeral Pile. Of which thus St. Hierom, He igitur contentum de amore viri, & ambitio summa certantem est appetitum mortis sollicita, dignum morte confert. A Custom still retained amongst them; of which somewhat hath been said already, and more is to be said in another place.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1. Hydaspes, by Ptolomy (and by him only) called Bidespes, one of the furthest bounds of Alexander's Conquests. 2. Sasus, 3. Cas, 4. Acesines, very memorable in the Jells of Alexander, 5. Sundabilis, 6. Varadrins: all coming from the Northern Mountains and all falling (Hydaspes with three other Rivers first received into it) into the great bed of Indus. 7. Diamna, 8. Sorabus, and 9. Soa, falling from the like Northern Mountains, into the main Channel of Ganges. 10. Naragons, issuing from Mount Vindius. 11. Bari, from Bitigga. 12. Chaberis, from Adisabris. 13. Tinds, from the hill called Uxentius; and 14. Tina, from the Orodian Mountains, with many others of less note. By what names called at the present, I determine not; nor find I any which have dared to adventure on it. But doublets to be found in 1. Catamul, 2. Cebba, 3. Ria, 4. Chenaa, 5. Rebeth, all tributary into Indus, which is now called Schinda. 6. Taphi, 7. Harnada, 8. Chambel, 9. Jamena, which empty their waters into Ganges; the which, with such others of the principal Rivers as were known by name to us, shall occasionally be touched on in that which followeth. Besides which Rivers, here is famous Lake mentioned in the Jells of Alexander, (but the name occurreth not) not much above a mile in circuit, but exceeding pleasant, shaded on every side with woods, memorable for the great refreshment which it gave to Alexander's Army, when even pined with thirst.

The Country for exceeding populous in the time of Ptolomy, that it afforded him the names of more noted Cities, than any one Country in the world. Of which 1. Cotara, 2. Nigama, 3. Sageda, 4. Rarsala, 5. Majopala, and 6. Pisandara, are honoured with the name of Metropoles; as being the head Cities of their several and respective Nations. 7. Ozeue, 8. Sora, 9. Palibotira, 10. Gange, 11. Batana, 12. Hippocra, 13. Cavara, 14. Madura, 15. Orubura, and 16. Malanga, mentioned as the Royal Seats of several Princes, by the name of Regie. 17. Bardaxema, 18. Tydiv, 19. Argari, 20. Cumula, 21. Chaberis, on the River so called. 22. Palura, on the shores of the Gulf of Bengala, and 23. Palura, on the banks of Cambysium. 24. Tilgammum, marked out above the rest with the name of Civitates (Cities) and therefore probably of more note than others not so distinguished. And finally, 25. Monoisium, 26. Simylla, near a Promontory of the same name, 27. Nitra, 28. Maziris, 29. Elancorum, 30. Celbi, 31. Sabur, 32. Sobura, 33. Poduca, 34. Mlanga, 35. Meliorpha, 36. Contacissila, 37. Nolyne, 38. Barganza, specified as the most noted and celebrated Empires: besides 39. Cambysium, 40. Statibus, (and 41. a Road open to Chrysis) two commodious Stations or Roads for shipping. The names and situation of these places is the most we find of them, which makes me pass them over with a bare recital, only to show how populous and well planted this Country was in the time of my Author.

Of less name, but of more note in the course of story, 1. Nisa, built by Bacchus at the time of his Indian Conquest, and called thus by the name of his Nephew, to preserve her memory, his Mother dying in Child-birth of him. Repentless by him with his sick and wounded Soldiers, whose Posterity continued here till the time of Alexander, who spared the City and the People for his Temple to Bacchus, who was therein worshipped in a Temple of his own foundation, planted about with Vines, and Ivy, whose shady branches covered the roof of it. In the midst thereof an Image, with all of Gold or metals belonging to a plentiful Vintage, all of Gold or Silver.

Silver. 2. Taxilla, or Taxiala, as Ptolomy calleth it, seated between Indus and Hydaspes, in the Region called Versa, and built most probably by Taxiles, a puissant King of India, in the time of Alexander. Adorned in elder times with a Temple dedicated to the Sun, and therein with an Ivory Image of Ajax, a Golden Statue of Alexander, and the portraiture of King Pornu made in Copper. The floor of Majical work powdered with Pearls, the Walls of red Marble interlaid with Gold, which made it shine a far off, like a flash of lightning. 3. Nagana, called also Dionysopolis in memory of Bacchus, who was also called Dionysius, and Liber Pater. 4. Adorne, by Dindrus called Aornus, and Avernus by Strabo: so strongly seated on a Rock, that Hercules was not able to force it: which made Alexander, (imitating, and therein out-going the Acts of Hercules) assault it with the greater force, and at last he carried it. 5. Bucephala, built by Alexander on the banks of Hydaspes, and named thus in memory of Bucephalus, his beloved horse, which had served him in all the course of his Fortunes, and dyed hereabouts, being then thirty years old. 6. Pireta, another of his foundations, so called by the name of his Dog whom he dearly loved. 7. Alexandria, on the banks of Indus, another of his foundations also. 8. Mazaga, on the West of Indus, one of the first Towns of India, taken by the Macedonians, though garrisoned within, and invironed without by an Host of 300000 men: but yielded after some resistance, with the use of her own body, by Cleopatra the Queen thereof, who received it back with other favours, from the hands of the Conqueror. 9. Sora, a strong City on the same side of Indus, taken by Pargaseron, one of his Commanders. 10. Samu, on the banks of the same River, taken by Alexander in the course of his Navigation down that Sea of Waters; the Inhabitants whereof fought against him with poisoned Arrows, with one of which Ptolomy, (afterward King of Egypt) was dangerously wounded, and cured with an herb which Alexander dreamt he had seen in the mouth of a Serpent. 11. Oxydrace, the chief City of the Oxydracians; at the Siege whereof Alexander is said to be the first that scaled the Walls, and the last that could do so, the Ladder breaking as soon as he was at the top. Standing thus alone as a mark to all their Darts, he was by the Soldiers desired to leap down amongst them; he in a daring bravado leaped into the Town among his Enemies: where it was not only his good hap to light upon his feet, but to have an old Tree at his back to defend him behind. In this posture he is said to have maintained the fight a long time, against all the Soldiers of the Town; killing two of them with his own hands, and that by example teaching the rest to be more manfully, till being wearied, and dangerously wounded, he was forced to leave his feet, and commit the weight of his body to his knees. In this case Leonatus, Pencester, and some other of his Captains, came to assist him; who defended their dying Master, till the whole Army entered the Town, and put all the people to the sword, in revenge of their King, whose life they had little hope to enjoy: though he with much danger did afterward recover. For my part I give little or no credence to this story, ranging it in the same Catalogue of truth with the Adventures of Danzel del Phabo, Rosicler, Belianis, Amadis, and the rest of the rabble of Knights Errant. Neither is this the first time that Curtius hath disgraced the foundnes of Alexander's Judgment, and the truth of his Actions, with the like idle and impossible Fables: though indeed in that particular, he faith that it was multo magis ad temeritatis quam de gloria famam. And 12. Nicea, built by Alexander on the banks of Acesines, in memory of his many great and signal Victories. Not far from which, finding how unwilling his Soldiers were to pass further East, he purposed to have behind him some Monument of his great Exploits, and to make his fame immortal amongst the Indians. And to that end he caused the form of his Camp to be enlarged, and the Cabins to be made bigger than sufficient for his men to lodge in; the Mangers to be set higher than his Horses could reach; Arms and Bills for horses of too great a size (made not for use, but ostentation of his might) to be scattered up and down the Camp, for the savage people to wonder at in the times to come. By means whereof he got nothing amongst knowing men, but suspicion that his Actions were intended less memorable, than they are reported to have been; since he so vainly laboured to have them thought greater, than indeed they were.

The old Inhabitants heretofore, where the Indo-Seythe, inhabiting on the North-West of Indus, the Mazaga, Sadama, Pirae, Limyricae, Aii, the Soringi, Arvati, Oxydrace, Moli, and Lambate, the Gandavides, or Gangarides, near the mouth of Ganges, the Caspian, under the shades of Mount Vindius, The Muscani, Chazziei, Polinde, Phyllie, Bitiggi, Chadramitie, Pezari, Adisabris, Mandale, Dryphits, Sabara, Pandion, with many others, to the number of 122. several Nations, if Megasthenes be not out in his reckoning, too many and too impertinent to be numbered here.

Originally descended from the Sons of Noah, before they left these Eastern parts to go towards the unfortunate Valley of Shinar. We could not else have found this Country full of people in the days of Semiramus, the Wife of Ninus: who leading an Army compounded of several Nations, to the number of four Millions and upwards (if Ctesias, and Diodorus Siculus, who reports it from him, be of any credit; but certainly the greatest Army that ever was raised) was encountered by Sinuo-bates, a King of India, with greater force made up of natural Indians only; by whom he was vanquished and slain. A matter beyond all belief, though neither Army could make up a fourth part of that number, if the Indians had been no other than some one of those Colonies, which were sent from ABE L; or rather a second or third Swarm of those former Colonies, which went thence under the command of the first Adventurers. For that any of the first Adventurers, who were present at the building of the Tower of ABE L, travelled so far East, is not affirmed by any who have laboured in the search of their Plantations. So that I take it for a matter undeniable, that the Plantation of India preceded the attempt of ABE L; though by whom made, there is nothing to be said for certain: Yet if I might have liberty to express my own conceptions, I am inclinable to believe that all the Eastern parts of Persia, with China, and both the Indians were peopled by such of the Sons of Sem, as went not with the rest to the valley of Shinar. For otherwise I can see no reason, that the Posterity of Taphis should plant the greatest part of the Lesser Asia, and the whole Continent of Europe, with the Isles thereof; and that the Sons of Cham should spread themselves over Babylonia, Palestina, the three Arabiae, and the whole continent of Africa: the Posterity of Sem being that up in a corner, the Greater Asia, hardly so big as some one of the Provinces taken up by the other Adventurers. And therefore that I may allow to the Sons of Sem an equal Latitude, I think it not improbable to fix them in these Eastern Countries; spreading themselves this way as they grew in numbers, before the rest of the Adventurers went to seek new fortunes at the Tower of ABE L. And being that the Country was large and wealthy and might have room enough to spare for some second company (especially descending from the same root with them.) I to supply which defect he furnisheth himself with Souldiers out of Perfia, of which his standing bands consist; most of their Sultans and Commanders of that Nation also. More given to Merchandize than War, and therein thought to be as cunning (if not deceitful withall) any people in the World: treacherous in their trust, proud in their carriage, bloody upon advantage, and much given to Venerie; ignorant of Letters, but well practiced in Mechanical Arts. In matters of Religion for the most part Gentiles, not knowing or contemning the Law of Mohomet; but very punctual in their own heathenish superstitions. The Banians in this Country, being natural Indians, nursed in Paganism, and so wedded to their old Idolatries, that no persuasions can prevail with them, make the greatest number; and seem to be all Pythagoreans in some opinions, for they eat not any thing that hath blood or life, but feed on Rice, Roots, Plantains, and such natural fruits: paying a large Revenue yearly to the Great Mongul, that no Oxen may be killed amongst them. And because new opinions should not grow amongst them, they marry in their own Tribes only, and never out of their own Traditions; secure thereby as they conceive from all innovations.

Cities of most observation in it, 1. Cambaia, three miles from the Indus, and as many in compass, one of the neatest and best built in all the East. So populous withall, that it is thought to contain 130000 Families; and is therefore called the Cair of the Indies. Of most esteem in all this Kingdom (though far less than Madabar) to which it doth impart its name. 2. Barache, Southwards of Cambaia on the top of an hill, with a fair River underneath it; well walled, and noted for the best Callicens (a kind of linnen Cloth so called from the City of Calicut, where it was first made) not to be matched in all the Indies. 3. Swaley, still more unto the South, and about a mile from the Sea-shore; but giving name unto a large and capacious Bay, where the ships ride that trade at Surat. 4. Surat, about ten miles from the Bay of Swaley, from whence the River navigable but by Boats and Shallops, fortified with a Cattle of stone, well stored with Ordnance. The houses for the most part of Sun-dried Bricks, very large and lasting: built with flat Roofs, but Battlemented on all sides for fear of falling and beautified with goodly Gardens of Pomgranates, Melons, Figs, and Limons, intercalated with Rivereys and Springs. Made of late years a Factory for the English Merchants, who have here their President, and a magnificent house for their reception, and staple of their Commodities. 5. Neriand, a great Town, and as remarkable for the making of Ludico, of the matter and making whereof we have spoke already, when we were at Biani, a Town or City of the Kingdom, or Division of Agra; as memorable for that Commodity as this Neriand, or any other of India. 6. Daman, upon the Sea-side over against Div; and possessed as that is by the Portugals. A beautiful and pleasant Town, fortified with a strong Cattle at the North end of it, of white chalky stone, well planted with Ordnance: opposite whereunto on the South side of the Town a goodly Church, edged on the top with white. Which with the houses for the most part of the same colour also, afford a pleasant prospect to the Sailors by 7 Campawels, situate on the top of an high Mountain, and environed with a seven-fold wall, once the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Cambaia. 8. Dacaiote, a place of little strength, that the Great Mongul could never get it by force. Rendered at the last upon composition, conditioned they should still be governed by a King of their own. 9. Netherby, a great Market of Brazen ware, Bealls, and Armour. 10. Bandore, 11. Tenai, &c.

This Kingdom taking in Guzarate and Sinda, as parts hereof, is extremely populous; said fad to contain 6000 Towns and Villages, very well inhabited; but the people not accustomed to, or unfit for wars. Anciently governed by Kings of their own, it was first subdued by the Arabians or Mooris, Anno 1423, under the conduct of one Mahomet or Machmut; who having forced the Reshetes or Naturals of the Country to betake themselves unto the Mountains, was made King hereof. To him succeeded his Son Mamudius, one of no great action. But what he wanted was supplied by his Son Badrinus, who having conquered the Kingdom of Citor, invaded that of Mandus also. His Army for that war consisted of 500000 Foot, 150000 Horse, 1000 great Pieces of Ordnance, 500 Wagons loaded with Powder and Shot, and as many Wain-loads of Gold and Silver to buy his Army. But being discomfited in two great Battels by Mehamed the Mongul Tartar, whom Galgie the Mandian King had called in to his aid, he shaved his beard, and fled in a disguise to Div, then possessed by the Portugals; whom he licensed in that districts to build the Cittadel, slain afterwards by a mean Mariner, as his return from the Portugal Vice-Roy, whom he had visited on ship-board. And though Mamudius his successor endeavored to free his Kingdom from both pretenders; yet weakened with the loss of so great an Army, he was not able to effect it. First driven from Div, which he had besieged both by Sea and Land, to his great dishonour; and after vanquished in battle by Adabar, the Son of Mehamed, not far from Serkiffe, the ancient burial-place of the Kings of Cambaia, but the Sepulchre of the Kingdom, which by that victory fell to the Great Mongul, who have since enjoyed it.

4. DECAN.

DECAN is bounded on the East, with Narisinga; on the West, with the Indus Ocean; on the North, with Cambaia; on the South, with Malabar and Canara. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

It lieth along the Sea-coast for the space of 250 miles, betwixt Aliga and Bate, two noted Rivers; extending East, as far as the Mountain Gates, and afterwards thrusting into the North betwixt Cambaia and those Mountains till it meet with Cambaia. The soil much of the same nature with the rest of India, but not so flourishing as Cambaia. The people for the most part Mahometans, which Religion was first planted there by the Conquests of Sa-Nasradine, 350 years ago; yet not without some intermixture of their ancient Gentilism.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Bider, the Seat-Royal of Mamudius, once sole King of this Country; who to beautify and adorn this City, commanded every one of his Prebsters, or subordinate City Governors, being eighteen in number, to build here a Palace, and to reside therein certain months in the year: each one to leave a Son there in perpetual hostage. Situate in the most Northern parts in perpetual hostage. Situate in the most Northern parts of the Country more near the Borders of Dely: from the King whereof Mamudius had then newly revolted; and therefore would make use of this place, as most in danger. 2. Visapore, bordering on Cambaia, after it was Seat of Idalcen, one of the Kings of Decan, confidenced into several Kingdoms. 3. Danagers, confidenced into several Kingdoms. 4. Canara, a beautiful and flourishing City, once the chief Seat of Nisalamcen, or Nizalimexa, another of the Kings hereof, after that division. 4. Decan, so called by the name of the Province; of which the chief City next to Bider, the Imperial Seat. Six miles from which there is an Hill compassed with an high wall, and kept there is a strong Garrison, because of the great fire of Diab by a strong Garrison, because of the great fire of Diab, which are digged out of it. The Town so wealthy, that that the people generally are attired in silks, or the purest Tiffany. 5. Sinacora, on the mouth of the River Aliga, wherewith falleth into the Sea. 6. Goa, a Sea Town also, situate in a little but most pleasant Island, called Tienarum, fifteen miles in compass; opposite to the mouth or outlet of the River Mandavus. A noted Empory, and one of the chief keys which unlock the Indies; for number of Inhabitants, magnificent buildings, and pleasantness of situation, one of most note in all this Country. Possessed by the Portugals, who have here their Arsenal, and harbour for their Indian Fleet; by which they do command these Seas. So strongly fortified withal, that though beleaguered by Idalcen (of whom before) with 35000 Horse, 6000 Elephants, and 2500 Piece of Ordnance, Anno 1573, yet he could not force it. Made in regard of the convenient situation and strength thereof, the ordinary Residence of the Portugal Vice-Roy, who hath here his Council, Chancellour, and other Officers, for the government of such parts of India as belong to that Crown: as also of the Arch-bishop or Primate of the Indian Churches planted by that Nation, who is hence called the Arch-bishop of Goa. 7. Chand, a Sea Town, in the hands of the Portugals also, and by them well fortified: Inasmuch as Nisalamcen assaulting it at the very same time with a very great Army, was fain to leave it as he found it. 8. Salagante, in the Up-lands or Hill-Country, whence it had the name: Basia in the Persian Language signifying a top, or summit of a Mountain; and Guate an Hill. 9. Brampey, once the chief seat of another Kingdom, called the Kingdom of Chandis, now the chief City of those parts of Decan which are subject to the Great Mongul. Situate on a great River in the midst of a spacious Plain, beautiful, and of very great Trading; in biggness equal unto Paris, yet yielded to Echebar the Mongul, without any resistance Anno 1600, Miram then the King thereof forsaking it, and betaking himself to 10. Syza, a strong Hold both by Art and Nature; Situate on the top of an hill, which is in compass five Leagues, and environed with a triple Wall: furnished with Victuals, and all other necessary Provisions, sufficient to maintain 60000 men many years; 3000 great Pieces of Ordnance planted on the Walls. Besieged herein by Echebar with an Army of 200000 fighting men, he held out against him till overcome by promises of fair correspondence, drawn out of his Hold some of his Counsellors being bribed to persuade him to it: he was detained by the Mongul; and the Commanders won by rewards and hopes yielded up the Fort, and therein all the Princes of the Royal Family, accustomed kept therein when the Throne was full; which vacant, the next Heir was taken hence, to succeed unto it. Of the same nature, as it seemeth, with the hill Amara in Atchipsia, or the Abassine Empire.

The Country formerly inhabited by a people called Venazarari, by Religion Gentiles, and held by them till the year 1300, when overcome by Sa Nasradine, a Mahometan, and King of Dely: who driving the Inhabitants into the Hill-Countries, possessed himself of a great part of it, compelling them to submit unto his Religion. The residue thereof subdued by Abdessa, whom Sa Nasradine left here to pursue the war, was by him governed with great justice for 20 years, when dying he left his Government to his Son Mamudius, confirmed by the Successor of Sa Nasradine in his Fathers Regency, on the payment of an annual Tribute. Mamudius soon finding that the young King was of no great spirit, not only refused to pay the Tribute imposed upon him, but took unto himself the title of King Decan, giving this name unto the Country (before called Canara) in regard that he had filled it with a Mongrel body of Christians, Mahometans, and Cenites, acknowledging no common Parent, nor agreeing in Language, Customs, or Religion; the word Decan signifying in that Tongue; as much as illegitimate brood, or a body of Barbars. Out of these he made choice of twelve (others say eighteen) whom he appointed Governors of so many Provinces: not daring to trust any of the old Nobility, or of the Natives of the Country; and hoping that these Slaves, so promoted by him, would be more subject to command. But here his silly hopes deceived him. For these Slaves either governed by their Masters example, who had done the like unto the Son and Heir of Sa Nasradine; or presuming on their own strength, and some Foreign Aids, left to their Master nothing but an empty Title; each one becoming absolute in his several Province. Nor did his Successors for any long time take that Title: Daquem, the last of them, being taken at Bider his chief City, and thereupon the name of King usurped by every one of these petit Tyrants, reduced at last into fewer heads. Such of them as were left, became considerable Princes, as appeareth by the great Army raised by Idalcen for the siege of Goa: But in the end, distressed on the one side by the Portugals, who embarrased their Trade, and invaded on the other side the Great Mongul with most puissant Armies, Melic entitled King of Decan, and Miram King of Brampey, were in subjection by Echebar, about the year 1600. Against whom and his Successors, though the Venazarari still hold out, as the Reshetes or Rasboos do in the Realm of Cambaia; and that the King of Amudanger, and perhaps some other petit Princes, are not yet brought under: yet we may look on the Mongul as the Lord of this Country, the residue of these Royalties, and petit Princes (if any of them be remaining) being Homagers or Vassals to him. Against whose further Progress to the Cape of Comari, which Echebar too greedily aimed at, the puissant Kings of Narisinga, and those of Malabar have opposed their power; whose Kingdoms and Estates we must next survey, before we take a view of those other Provinces which are now under the command of that mighty Monarch.

9. CANARA.

CANARA is bounded on the North, with Decan (whereof anciently it was a part;) on the South, with Malabar; on the East, with Narisinga, from which separated by the Mountain Gates; on the West, with the Ocean. The reason of the name I find not, nor much worth the searching.

The Country hath a fair Sea-coast, with many capacious Harbours in it, which cannot but add much to the wealth thereof; as liberally furnished in the in-land parts with Rice, Figs, and Sugars: but destitute of Wheat, Pulse, and Barley. Not much the poorer for that want, the people either not knowing, or not regarding the use of bread; but living on such fruits as the earth produceth of it self, without the charge or care of the husbandman. In other things but little differing, if at all, from the rest of the Indians; their Religion for the most part Paganish, but intermixed with Mahometans.

Principal Towns and Cities of it, 1. Melinde, a commodious Haven. 2. Ozora, Port Town of good note, sometimes held by the Portugals. 3. Baticalia, situate in the richest part of all this Country; never possessed by the Portugals, but under contribution to them. 4. Mangalar a Town of great wealth and trade; fortified with a strong Cattle, once destroyed by the Portugueses, but recovered and repaired by the King of Narisinga, who is Lord of this Country. 5. Meyender, more within the Land. And so is also, 6. Lisper, famous for her Quarries of Adamant.

mounteth on a Scaffold covered with Silk or Tapestry; and in the sight of all his People, gathered together to behold this strange solemnity, cutteth off his nose, ears, lips, and other parts, which he casts towards the Idol, and in his conclusion cuts his own throat at his bloody Sacrifice: his designed Successor being present at this bloody Sacrifice, who at the twelve years end is to do the like. Never was Scepter bought at so dear a rate: For though all Crowns be lined with shorn, yet here the pomps of Sovereignty be less lasting than in other places; the entrance full of fears, and the end of horrors.

These Kingdoms heretofore but one, till the year 900 or thereabouts, were branched and cantoned into these seven, by Sarama Peremal, the sole Monarch. He by the solicitations of some Arabians, trading to his Ports, became Mahometan; and therein for devout, that he relieved upon a Pilgrimage to Mecca, there to end his days. At his departure he divided his Estates into these seven parts, distributing them amongst the nearest of his Kindred; assigning unto him of Coulam the preeminence in sacred matters: and the Imperial dignity unto him of Caliente, with the title of Samorin, that is to say, Chief Emperor, or as some write, a God on Earth. He only privileged with the right and power of Coinage; the rest to be subordinate, if not subject to him. From Peremal's settling forwards to the City of Mecca, the Malabars accompt their reckonings, and begin their years; as the Christians from the birth of their Lord and Saviour. And for a time his Heirs were punctually observed. But the Kingdom of Caliente being weakened by the power of the Portugals, the other Kings began to free themselves from that subjection; and in the end to cast off all relation to him, and to his Prerogative. Yet still he is esteemed of more Power and Majesty than any of the rest of the Kings of Malabar; and looked on with more reverence than any of them. The certainty of his Revenues I have no where met with, but conjecture them to be very great; first in regard of that infinite trading which is managed from most parts of the World in this Port of Caliente; the Customs and Imposts upon which must needs be of exceeding value; and secondly in reference to the wealth of private Merchants, many of which are said to equal some Kings in Africa; and Dukes in Europe not a few.

Quid Domini facient? audient cum talia Fures.

And if the man such Riches have,
Then what must he that keeps the Knave?

What Forces he is able to raise may be fully seen by that which hath been said before; wherein we find him with an Army of 90000 men besieging and taking in the Fort of Chalen, with another of 100000 beleaguering the Castle which the Portugals had built near the City of Caliente. And when the said Portugals stirred up the King of Cochin to make head against him, he fell upon them suddenly, both by Sea and Land, with 60000 Land-Souldiers, and 200 good Vessels of War for his Service at Sea. Sufficient force to reduce the rest of these petty Kings to their old acknowledgments, but that some of them to avoid the danger, have put themselves under the Vassalage, or protection at the least, of the Great Mungu: others by suffering the Portugals to build Forts in their Kingdoms, have engaged them in defence of their Estate against this pretender. His Forces consist most of Foot, Horse being unfeivable in these Countries, by reason of those many Rivers which interlace it, and these Foot are compounded most of Gentry, which they there call Nairos, trained to their Weapons when they are but seven years of Age; every one to that Weapon which he most delighteth in, which makes them very expert and nimble at them; much privileged for that cause by the Laws of the Country, and to esteemed of by the King, that out of them his Sisters chuse what men they please to their Husbands, some of them by that means being made the Fathers of the King succeeding.

Nothing else memorable touching the affairs of Caliente, but the way of succession to the Kingdom: the Crown descending upon none of the Kings Children, but on the Son of his eldest Sister, or nearest Kinswoman. For being that one of the Bramines hath always the maiden-head of his Queens, and that some of these Stallions are continually allowed to keep them company, it is presumed, or very probably supposed, that the Queens Children are the Bramines, and not the Kings.

8. NARSINGA.

NARSINGA is bounded on the South, with Tra-vancor; on the West, with the Mountain Cates; on the North, with Oritan, or Oriza; on the East, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Narsinga the chief City of it, and the Royal Residence of the King.

The Country is said to be in length 600 miles, or as some say, of as much extent as can be travelled in six months, plentiful in the same Commodities which the rest of India doth afford, except Pepper and some other Spices which are proper to Malabar. Not to well furnished with Rivers as some other places: which want is liberally supplied by water falling from the Mountains and received into trenches, meers, and Lakes, which do wonderfully cool, moisten and enrich the Land, causing the Corn and Cattel to prosper above all imagination. Most destitute in this kind is the Province of Choromandel, in which if any year passeth without rain, they fall into such extremities, that they are fain to feel their children.

The People in Religion, Gentiles, to worshipping one God, as the Lord of all, which is taught them by the light of nature, that they join the Devil or their Togdes in Communion with him, whereto induced by the persuasion of their beasty Bramines, who therewith seek no small advantage. Some Christians there are intermixt of the old Plantation; especially in Maliapur, and the Region of Choromandel; but not so well instructed in the Principles of their own belief, as to be able to convince or convert the Gentiles, nor to disfigure them from the use of some Heathenish Customs though barbarous, inhumane, and against all reason: nor used in any place, but amongst the Indians. Amongst which I reckon for most savage, the forcing of poor women to burn themselves with their husbands bodies, the women kindred, not the husbands, thrusting them on these hard conditions; who reckon it a disgrace to their Family, if the should refuse. And because they will be sure not to have that infamy stick upon them, they have ordered that the woman who shall so refuse, must have her head, and break her Jewels, and not be suffered to eat, drink, or sleep, or company with any body till her death. A life more miserable than the Flames which they seek to shun. This makes them leap into the fire with joy and greediness; and to contend which shall be most; the being thought to have been most loving during his life, which is now most willing to accompany him in his death, and offer her self to his Names, at the Funeral Pile: wherunto thus alluded the Poet:

*Es certamen habent, letis, qui viva sequatur
Conjugium's pudor, et non licuisse mori.
Arden virgines, & prebent pistora flammæ;
Imponuntque suis una peritura virgines.*

A thame 'tis to die; they therefore strive,
Who may be fain'd to follow him alive.

The

The Victor burns, yields to the flame her breast;
And her burnt face doth on her husband rest; Chief Cities of this Country, 1 Caol, on the borders of Travancor, belonging anciently to the Kings of Coulam, now to those of Narsinga; the people wherabout called Paravi, are a kind of Christians, who live for the most part by fishing for Pearls, which they sell to the Portugals, and Bengal Merchants. 2 Golkonda, the chief City of the Province called Mushlipatan, the Lord whereof is a Moor, of the Sophian Sect; but a Vassal to the Kings of Narsinga. 3 Chamdagrin, one of the Seat-Royals of the King. 4 Prepeti, three miles from Chamdagrin, memorable for a yearly Feast here celebrated in honour of Peremal (once fole King of Malabar) reckoned for a Saint at least in these parts of India: the offerings at which accustomably amount unto 2000000 Crowns. 5 Chadamaram, the Mother-City of those Pagan Solemnities, which are done to Peremal who hath here a Temple endowed with 30000 Ducats of Annual Rent, all consumed by the Bramines belonging to it, who pretend to have been born out of Peremal's head. 6 Madura, honoured with the residence of the Chochanada, or the chief Priest of the Bramines of this Kingdom; so numerous, that in this Town, and the Territories of it only, are thought to be no fewer than an hundred thousand. The far also of one of three Naiichi, or Tributary Kings of the Crown of Narsinga; the other two residing at 7 Ging, and 8 Tanajir, the chief Towns of their Principalities, but not else observable. 9 Maliapur, called also St. Thomas, from an opinion that the body of the Apostle was here interred: martyred here by the Idolatrous Indians, whose Posity in other things like unto other men, are said to have one leg and foot as big as an Elephant's: a punishment inflicted on the whole Generation for the sin of their Ancestors. How true this I cannot say, but I am that Dorothew faith, that he rested at Calamina, where he was slain with a Dart. However the Portugals, to make some use of the old Tradition, removed some bones from this place, which were said to be his, and enshrined them in Goa, their own City; much visited by profitable Pilgrims, to their great enriching. The City once so large and populous, that it contained 330 Temples, for the use of divers Nations which resorted thither. In these latter days desolate and forlorn, inhabited only by some old Christians, till the Portugueses began to people it with new Colonies. 10 Choromandel, giving name to a large Sea-Coast, lying on the West-side of the Gulf of Bengala. 11 Calpa, a Town of Choromandel, in which the woman is not burned with her Husband, as in other places of this Country, but buried quick in the same grave with him. 12 Negapatan, in the same Region, inhabited for the most part by St. Thomas Christians. 13 Tanajari, once the chief City of a Kingdom so called, the King whereof was able to bring into the field 100000 Horse and Foot, and 100 armed Elephants, but now subject to the King of Narsinga. The people black, but so out of love with their own colour, that they willingly prostitute their Wives or Daughters, to any people of a whiter and more clear complexion. 14 Bisnagar, once the chief City of this Kingdom, whence the King is sometimes called the King of Bisnagar. In those times 24 miles in compass, with nine Gates in it, (amongst others) continually guarded with Souldiers; and a magnificent Palace, not elsewhere equalled. In the year 1565, sacked by four of the Mahometan Kings of Decan, who with their joint Forces had invaded this Kingdom; it became desolate and forsaken; and the Court removed to 15 Penegado, eight days journey within the Land (Bisnagar being seated on the borders of Decan) but long it had not staid there when removed to 16 Narsinga, where it hath ever since been fixed, which is now the chief City of this Kingdom, unto which it gives name; though the King many times calls himself by the name of that City where he resideth for the present.

Of the Antiquity of this Kingdom I have little to say, these Eastern parts not being known at all till these later times, not well known in these. About the year 1550 their King then reigning was imprisoned by three of his Captains or Commanders; who shewed him only once a year to his Subjects, parting the power and government amongst themselves. He being dead, and his Son kept in the like restraint, Romaragio the first Captain ascended the Throne, Timaragio managed the Estate, and Bengabe commanded the Army. But these Usurpers being overthrown by the Kings of Decan, in the year 1565, Timaragio the Survivor took the charge of all; whose Son, to make himself sure of the Kingdom, murdered his imprisoned Sovereign (the life and liberty of Kings being much of a date) whence followed many broils and troubles touching the succession, till settled in the person of Christamar, the undoubted Heir: who did not only restore peace and quiet to Narsinga it self, but recovered Canara out of the hands of the Idalcans, who had before endangered his estate therein. Of the great Army which he led against this Idalcans, we have spoke already; adding here only; that before he went upon this enterprise (called the journey of Rachol) he sacrificed in nine days 2036 Beasts to the Country Idols, the flesh whereof he caused to be distributed amongst the poor. Routed at first, and being perfwaded by some about him to go out of the field, he is said to have made this Noble Answer, That he had rather the Idalcans should boast that he had slain him, than vanquished him. And thereupon leaping into the thicket of his Enemies, and well followed by the valiantest of his Friends, he obtained the Victory. But this vast Army of 600000 Foot, 30000 Horse, 537 Elephants, with necessaries answerable to such infinite multitudes, speaks only what he can do on extreme necessity, or when he had some long time of preparation, as he had in that Action. The power of Kings is better measured by their standing Forces, than by necessitated Levies. And herein this Prince comes not much short of his great Neighbours: his standing Bands consisting of 40000 Nairos, or Gentlemen of his own Kingdom, which serve on foot; 20000 Horse, who are either Persians or Arabians, and 200 Elephants, well paid, and kept in continual readiness; his Foot defrayed out of his Revenues, his Horse maintained like the Turky Timariots, out of certain Lands distributed amongst his Captains (some of which are said to have a million of Crowns per annum) to furnish him with these stable Bands of Horse and Elephants.

As for his Revenues, it is reckoned at 12 millions yearly, out of which he is thought to lay up three; defraying with the rest the expence of his Household; and the entertainment of his Foot. This Sum amassed together out of the Lands, Mines, and Forreils of the Country, which are wholly his; and the waters of some Rivers, (sold by him to his Subjects) which he monopolizeth, the common people having nothing but their Arms and Labour. Of which, the Mines, Forreils, and one third of the Lands, he retaineth to himself; the other two being divided amongst his Captains. So that it is no marvel if so rich a Country yield him such an income, considering it is all his own. I do rather wonder (of the two) it should yield no more.

9. ORISTAN.

ORISTAN or ORIXA, is bounded on the South, with Narfinga, on the West, with Dely and Sauga; on the North, with the Kingdoms of Batanes, on the East, with the Gulf Bengala, and part of Patanaw or Patane; so called from Orissa, the Chief City of it.

The Country hath plenty of Rice, cloth of Cotton, and a fine stuff like silk, made of grasse, and there called Turva; with which, together with Long Pepper, Ginger, Myrabolan, and other Commodities here growing, they use to load 25 or 30 Ships from the Haven of Orissa only. The people to well governed, or so hating theft, that in the time of their own Kings, before they came under the Monguls, a man might have travelled with Gold in his hand without any danger. In other points, of the same temper and religion with the rest of the Indians subject to that Prince.

It is generally well watered, and interlaced with many Rivers, which do much moisten and refresh it; but none so beneficial to the Kings heretofore as the River Gauanga (of old called Chaberir) the waters whereof esteemed sacred by the Kings of Caticue and Narfinga, and much used by them in their sacrifices and superstitious purgations, are wholly ingrossed by this King, who selleth them to those Princes at excessive rates. Besides which Rivers it is watered with a fair Sea-coast, of 350 miles in length; that is to say, from Cape Guadurmo in the South, which divides it from the Realm of Narfinga, to Cape Legora in the East, which parts it from Bengala. But for all that not very much traded, because not so well provided of commodious Havens, as many other Indian Provinces of a far less Territory.

Towns of most note herein, 1 Orissa, on the Sea-side, or not far from it, the best traded Port of all this Kingdom; to which the name thereof is to be ascribed, as the Head City of the Country. 2 Cateoba, six days journey within the Land, the ordinary residence of their Kings: before it was subdued by the Great Monguls. 3 Angeli, a well frequented Port, at the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; from whence many Ships are yearly laden with Indian Wares. 4 Baceli or Bacila, more within the Land, and once the head City of a Kingdom, but a very poor one. 5 Simerang, where they held it an impety to eat fish, or kill any beast. 6 Senepate, of which little memorable. Nor do I find any thing which deserves much memory in the affairs of this Kingdom; but that the Kings heretofore were Gentiles, subdued many years since by the King of Patanaw's, and both grown weaker by that War, by Echebar, the Great Mongul.

10. BOTANIER.

BOTANIER (under which name I comprehend all those Petit Kingdoms which are crowded together in the North and North-East of this part of India) hath on the South, Orissan and Patanaw; on the West, the River Gauanga or Chaberir, by which parted from the Realms of Pengab; on the North, the Zagababan Tartars, divided from it by some branches of Mount Taurus; on the East the famous River Ganges. So called from Botia, the principal City of Botanier, which is the chief of these small Kingdoms.

The Country great, of three months journey in extent, full of high Mountains, one of which may be seen five days journey off, in which are said to dwell a people with ears of a span long or more, whom otherwise those of the Valleys count as Ape. In those parts which are next

Pengab, they are white, and Gentiles; in others, more enclined to the Olive colour. Their garments they wear close to their bodies, so freight that one cannot fee a pleat or wrinkle; and those they never put off by night nor day whilst they are able to hang on: nor do they walk at any time, for fear of deffiling so pure a Creature as the water. Contented with one Wife (deferred to behold a miracle in these Eastern parts) and yet cobah not with her after two or three Children. When any of them die, the South-sayer is to tell them what to do with his body; according to whose direction (first consulting his books) they burn, bury, or eat it. Few Towns of note there are amongst them. The principal, 1 Botia, the Metropolis of it, 2 Clamur, of which little memorable. 3 Kakores, the second Kingdom of this rank, large but exceeding mountainous, as being over run by the branches of Mount Caucasus, which divides it from Tartary. So named of Kakores the chief Town thereof, by some called Negarist, their Staples for the sale of their cloth (most of the people being Weavers) bought of them by the Chinays, and Tartarian Merchants, who resort frequently to those Markets. This is a distinct Kingdom of it self, the Kings whereof are called Derman, but Vassals to the Great Mongul. And so is he of 3 COUCHE, another Kingdom of this Tract, fronting upon Canchin China, beyond Ganges; so called from Conche, the chief Town of it. The Country rich, by reason that it may be drowned, and dried up again, when the people will: full of good pastures by that means, and those well stored with Sheep, Goats, Swine, Deer, and other Cattel; though the people neither kill nor eat them, but on the contrary build Hospitals for them, in which when lame and old, they are kept while they die. Yet many times they eat their money, and I cannot blame them; their small money being Almonds.

4 GOUREN, the most Northern Realm in this general division, so called of Gor, or Goren, the chief Town of it. The Country in some parts mountainous, out of which springeth the River Sichu, one of the Tributaries unto Ganges, the rest a kind of a Desert or unpeopled Country, joyneth close to Conche, in which are few Villages, grasse (or reeds rather) longer than a man, and therein many Buffs, Tigers, and other wild Beasts none wilder than the Thieves, who frequent the Wildernesses.

In this Tract also are the Kingdoms of 5 RAME, and 6 RECON, joyning upon Zagabab, or enclining towards it; possessed by the Mongul Tartars from the time of Tamerlane, if not before: but Fendataries to the Kings of Chabul or Arachofa, who commanded in the North-East of Persia, and these North parts of India; and from those places drew his Army or the greatest part of it, when called unto the aid of Galgée, the King of Mando. Here is also the Kingdom of 7 TIPPUR FA, naturally fenced with Hills and Mountains, and by that means hitherto defended against the Mongul Tartars, their bad Neighbours, with whom they have continual wars. But of these Northern Kingdoms lying towards Tartary, there is but little to be said; and that little of no certain knowledge, those parts being hitherto so untravelled, that they may pass in the Account of a Terra Incognita.

11. PATANAW.

PATANE or PATANAW, is bounded on the North, with the Realm of Botanier; on the East, with Ganges; on the West, with Orissan; and on the South, with the Kingdom and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Patane the chief City of it. There is another Kingdom

Kingdom of this name in the further India: but whether it were so called because a Colony of this; or from some resemblances in the nature of the several Countries, or from the signification of the word in the Indian Language, I am not able to determine. Certain I am, that though they have the same name, yet they are under different Governments, and situate in far distant places: no otherwise agreeing than in some resemblances, as Hiland in the Low-Countries doth with Holland in Lincolshire.

The Country yieldeth veins of Gold, which they dig out of the pits, and wash away the earth from it in great Bolls. The people tall, and of slender making, many of them old: great Praters, and as great deflenders. The women so bedecked with Silver and Copper, especially about the feet, that they are not able to endure a shoe. Both Sexes use much washing in the open Rivers, and that so intermix together in their natural nakedness; especially such as live near the banks of the River Jumena (esteemed more holy than the rest) which from Agra passing thence this Country falleth into Ganges.

Chief Towns heretofore, 1 Patane, a large Town and a long one, built with very broad streets; but the houses very mean and poor, made at the best of earth and hurdles, and thatched over head. The Metropolis of this Kingdom, because the ancientest, and that which gives the name unto it. 2 Banaras, a great Town on Ganges, to which the Gentiles from remote Countries use to come in Pilgrimage, to bath themselves in the holy waters of that River. The Country betwixt this and Patanaw, very fair and flourishing, and beautified on the Road with handsome Villages. 3 Siripure, the chief Seat of one of the old Princes of this Country; not yet subdued by the Great Mongul. 4 Cianderax, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; the Seat of another of their Kings. One of which memorable for a trick put upon the Jesuits, when blamed by them for the worship of so many Pagodes, as contrary both to the Law of God and Nature; For causing them to rehearse the Decalogue, he told them that he did offend no more against those commandments in worshipping so many Pagodes, than they themselves in worshipping so many Saints. 5 Satagani, a fair City (for a City of Moors) once part of Patanaw, since ascribed to Bengala.

The people of this Country properly called Patanawes, but corruptly Partibians, were once of great command and power in these parts of India. Lords, for a time, of a great part of the Kingdom of Bengala, into which driven by Baburax, the Mongul Tartar, the Father of Emanpaxda, and Grand-father of Echebar. Their last King being slain in that war, twelve of their chief Princes joyned in an Arifocracy, and warring upon Emanpaxda had the better of him. After this, their Successors attempted Orissan, and added that also to their Estate, but they could not long make good their fortunes, subdued by Echebar the Mongul, and made subject to him. Three of them, viz. the Prince of Siripure, the King of Cianderax, and he whom they call Majadalin, retain, as yet (for ought I can learn unto the contrary) as well their ancient Paganism as their natural liberty. The other nine, together with Mahometanism, have vassalised themselves to the Great Mongul, now the Lord Paramount of the Country.

12. BENGALA.

BENGALA is bounded on the North, with Patanaw; on the East, with the Kingdoms of Pegu; on the South and West, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Bengala the chief City of it. It containeth in length on the Gulf and River 260 miles, and as much in breadth into the Land. A Country stored with all things necessary to the life of man, great plenty of Wheat, Rice, Sugar, Ginger, and long Pepper. Such abundance of Silk, and Cotton, and of Flesh and Fish, that it is impossible that any Country should exceed it in those commodities. And which crowns all, blest with so temperate and sweet an air, that it draws thither people of all sorts to inhabit it. Here is also amongst other rarities, a Tree, called Moser, which beareth so delicate a fruit, that the Jems and Mahometans who live here, affirm it to be the fruit which made Adam to live.

The natural Inhabitants for the most part are of white complexion, like the Europeans, subtil of wit, and of a curious disposition; well skilled in dealing in the world, much given to traffick, and intelligent in the way of Merchandise, if not somewhat deceitful. Not ignorant of other Arts, but with some finattering in Philosophy, Physick, and Astronomy. Stately and delicate both in their Diet and Apparel; not naked, as in others of these Indian Provinces, but clothed in a shirt or smock reaching to their feet, with some upper Garment over that. The women of an ill name for their unchastity, though Adultery be punished with cutting off of their noses. Neat, if not curious and roe coltly in this one custom, that they never feast meat twice in the same Port. But for every boyings buy a new one. In Religion, for the most part Mahometans, especially on the Sea-shores, which lay most open and commodious to the Arabians; by whom Mahometanism was here planted many Ages since.

Of Rivers we need take no care, having spoken of Ganges; that with its many channels may abundantly serve to water so small a Province. But heretofore more anon in a place more proper. Proceed we now unto the Cities. The principal whereof, 1 Bengala, which gave name to the whole Kingdom, situate on a branch of the River Ganges, and reckoned for one of the most beautiful Towns of all the Indies. Exceedingly enriched by trade, but more by Pilgrimages, by reason of the holiness and divine operations ascribed by the Indians to the waters of it: there being few years in which not visited by three or four hundred thousand Pilgrims. 2 Guro, the Seat Royal of the ancient Kings, 3 Catagan, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, a well-traded Port. 4 Taxda, once a Town of great traffick, and situate in those times on the banks of Ganges; now by the changing of the channel (occasioned by the frequent over-flowing of it) above a League off from the River. 5 Porto Grande, and 6 Porto Pequeno, two Towns of the Portugals; but without Forces for defence, or rules for Governments. Places like the Asylum, which was built by Romulus; whereunto such as dare not stay in their own Countries, or any well regulated Cities; use to make their resort; priviledged here to live in all kind of licentiousness.

Here is also in the North parts of this Province, or adjoining to it, the City and Kingdom of ARACHAN; lying along the banks of Ganges, but so remote from the Sea, that it is 50 miles distant from the nearest branch of it. Wealthy, and populous withal; governed heretofore by a King of its own, so wallowing in wealth and sensual pleasures, that he had in this City, and the parts adjoining twelve Royal Palaces or Seraglios, all strowed with women for his lust. Now subject with Bengala and Patanaw, betwixt which it lyeth, to the Empire of the Great Monguls.

There are some small Islands in the Gulf of Bengala; which I account unto that Kingdom. 1 Bazacata, now called Basse. 2 Barasse, of which name there are five in Pulomy, three of them by Mercator said to be Mindana, Cailen, and Sabur. 3 Two, called the Islands of Good Fortune.

For some, by him placed upon the Aquator, and said to be inhabited by Anthrophagi, or man-eaters; and there were three more which he calls 4 Sadadibe, now named Cathana, 5 Isfide Satoryrion, or the Isles of Satyr, three calls like Satyr, and 6 those called Manilio, in number calls like Satyr, (now Isles de Prace) reported by Phalomy to be so few, (now Isles of Bones, that they violently drew off from any things or vessels which had Iron in them; for which cause they which used these Seas fastened the planks of their Ships with wooden Pins. But our later Navigators find no such matter, unless perhaps it may be in the exploits of Sir Elum of Bonduaux, where indeed we meet with such an Island, in the course of his Errand.

But to return again to the Kingdom of Bengala, we find it of a different constitution from the rest of the Kingdoms of these parts. Not governed by a Family of Successive Princes, defended from the Stem of a Royal Ancestry, as others are. Chance, or necessity, had brought thither many Habshinies, or Aethiopiens, who made a Conquest of the Country; and chose a King out of themselves. To keep what they had gotten, and perpetuate the Royal honour to the Habshinie Nation, they procured thence yearly thirty thousands of Slaves, whom they trained up unto the wars, advanced unto the highest commands in Civil and Military service; and out of them elected one for their Lord and Sovereign; as the Mamuluck in the Kingdom of Egypt, whom herein they followed. By some Arabians trading with them, they came to time to admit Mohometanism, amongst them the Sea-coasts especially. Dispossessed first of some part of their Kingdom, lying about Satagan, by the Part of their Kingdom, when driven to seek new dwellings by Baburza, the Mongul Tartars, and of the whole Kingdom, by the valour and good fortune of Echebar, who added it unto the rest of his Estate.

Thus have we drawn together all the Indian Provinces on this side of Ganges (the Kingdoms of Malabar and Narsinga being but a Parenthesis in the construction of this sentence) into the hands of the Mongul. So called for his descent from the Mongul Tartars, one of five great Tribes or Nations into which that people were divided. Derived originally from the famous and mighty Tamerlane, who having added almost all the Greater and Lesser Asia unto his Estates, left Persia, with the parts of India which lay nearest to it on the North, to Myrza Charrak, his fourth Son. But his Issue failing in Abdulla, the fourth of that Line, those Estates fell to Abusaid, descended from Maromcha, the third Son of Tamerlane: Whole Son and Successor called Zawer, by some Malawares, being diffided of the greatest part of the Kingdom of Persia, by Ulfan-Cassane, the rights of all, with the possession of Arachbia (now called Cabul) and Parapamisus (now Candabar or Sablonan) together with so much of India as was held by those Princes, remained in Hamed, one of the younger Sons of Abusaid, whose Posterity laying hold on such opportunities as were offered to them, have made themselves Masters in few years of this mighty Empire. Whole Successors and their achievements we shall here present.

The Great Mongul.

1743 1 Hamed, the son of Abusaid, of the Race of Tamerlane, after the Conquest of Persia by Ulfan-Cassane, succeeded in Cabul, Candabar, and the parts of the Realms of India subject to the Tartars.

1500 2 Babur or Baburza, in danger to be dispossessed of most of his Estates by the neighbouring

Uzbekes, living upon the borders of Persia, Tartary, and India, whom at last he quieted; enlarging his dominions by the Conquests of some part of Patanawa, and other Kingdoms in the North.

1532 2 Hamuyen, the Son of Babur, or Baburza, commonly called Emanpazda, vanquished by the Parthians or Patanaws, and their confederates, craved aid of Tamas, the second Persian Monarch of this Line, on promise to conform to the Sepbian Seti; and by that aid confirmed and settled his affairs; but held himself to the Principles of his Religion.

4 Merhamed or Miranandus, Son of Emanpazda, called in by Galgee the King of Mandao, against Badurim the Cambaian, vanquished the Cambaian King in two pitched fields; and conquered the Kingdoms of Mandao, and Balsafa, with some other Provinces.

5 Adabar the Son of Merhamed, added the Realms of Delly and Cambalia, unto his Dominions.

1550 6 Mahomet Selabdin, commonly called Echebar, brother of Adabar, the most fortunate and victorious Prince of all his Family, subdued the Kingdoms of Caximir, Agra, Decan, Orissa, Bengala, Patanawa, and divers others of less note.

1605 7 Selim, surnamed Jangheere, the Son of Echebar, who added nothing that I hear of, to his Fathers Conquests.

1627 8 Blackie, the Grand-child of Selim by his eldest Son, (wickedly murdered by the practice of Curroon or Agra) proclaimed King on the death of his Grand-father; but shortly after made away by Asaph Chawm, to make room for 1627 9 Curroon, the third Son of Selim or Jangheere, and Son-in-law unto Asaph Chawm; having by his own Ministers, and the hands of his Father-in-law, murdered the proclaimed King his Nephew, and all the other Princes of the Royal blood, succeeded into the Estates, and was Crowned at Agra. A wicked and bloody Prince, still living for ought I hear to the contrary.

To look a little on these Princes, their estate and powers in matters of Religion they have generally been Mohometans, that Religion being long since embraced by the Tartars, from whom they originally descended. But not so scrupulous or precise in that profession, as to endeavour the suppressing of any other opinions: both Echebar, and his Son Jangheere, being so inclined unto Christianity, that they permitted the Jesuits to build Colleges and Churches in Agra it self, the Imperial City, and many other chief Cities in his Dominions. Of Echebar it is reported, that being doubtful what Religion to adhere unto, he caused 30 infants to be so brought up, that neither their Nurses nor any body else should speak unto them: resolving to addict himself to the Religion of that Country, whose Language should be spoken by them, as most agreeable to nature; and he did accordingly. For as those Children spake no Language, so was he positive and resolved in no Religion; able to see the vanities of Mohomet, and the horrible impieties of the Gentiles, but not willing to conform unto the strictness of Christianity. And though Selim who succeeded, to content his Mohometan Subjects, declared himself for that Religion; yet his affairs being once settled, and his Throne confirmed, he became as Neutral as his Father; Sultan Curroon now reigning, Reigning, of the same Neutrality, and 'tis well he is so, there being no Religion so impure and bloody, which he would not dishonour by his known ungraciousness.

The Language spoken by these Princes, and their natural Subjects the Magores, or Mongul-Tartars, is said by some to be the Turkish. But I think rather, that it is some Language near it, than the very same: And that the Language, from which they speak is the ancient Scythian or Tartarian, from which the Turks (a Scythian people) differ but in Dialect; a sprinkling of the Persian intermixt amongst them. A mixture not to be denied, in regard of their long dwelling in that Country, the intercourse which their Subjects of those parts have with these of India; and that the greatest part of their Soldiers, Officers, and Commanders are supplied from thence.

Their Government is absolute, if not Tyrannical, the Great Mongul being Lord of all, and heir to every man's estate which is worth the having: the Persons and Purposes of his Subjects at his sole disposing; so that he may amass what Treasures, and raise what Forces for the Wars his need requireth; or the Avarice or Ambition of his Ministers shall suggest unto him. First, for his Treasures, it is conceived that his Revenue doth amount yearly to fifty Millions of Crowns; and there are reasons to persuade that it may be more. The Country very rich, and notably well traded from all parts of the world, the Impossi upon which, is of infinite value; besides the vast sums of money brought into his Dominions from all Countries whatsoever, which hold traffick here: their Commodities not being to be parted with but for ready Coin. The whole Land being also his, he estates it out for no term certain, retaining a third part of the profits to himself, and leaving two thirds to the Occupants, to be held by them during pleasure. Who if they thrive upon their bargains, they thrive not for themselves, but him: it being in his power, if he want patience to expect the Incumbent's death, to enter on the whole estate of the Tenant by the way of Echebar: but if he tarry till the death of the Occupant, it falls to him of course, the Wife and Children of the deceased being fairly dealt with, if he content himself with the personal estate, and leave the Land to them to begin a new; for Instance, of those huge sums which in so rich a Country may be had this way, it is said, that when the Vice-Roy of Lahna dyed, he left to Echebar three Millions of Gold, besides Silver, Jewels, Horses, Elephants, Furniture and Goods, almost invaluable: And of one Raga Nagur, another of his great Officers, that at his death the Great Mongul seized of his into his hands 3300 pound weight of Gold, besides Plate and Jewels. Besides these means of heaping Treasure, all the Mines of the Country are wholly his, and the Professors given by all sorts of Sutors hardly to be numbered; none being admitted to his presence which comes empty handed. Finally, if Badurim, which was King of Cambalia only, could bring into the field at once 500 Tuns of Gold and Silver to pay his Army; and after the loss of all that treasure, advanced upon the sudden the sum of 600000 Crowns, which he sent to Solymann the Magnificent to come to succour him both which it is well known he did: What infinite Treasurers must we think this Prince to be Master of, who hath more than four times the estate of the King of Cambalia, and far more trading now than in former times.

By the like Parallel we may conjecture somewhat at his Forces also; Badurim the Cambaian brought into the field against Merhamed, and the King of Mandao, as was partly touched upon before, 150000 Horses, 500000 Foot, 2000 Elephants armed, 2000 Pieces of brass Ordnance, of which were 4 Bastilks, each of them drawn with 100 Yoke of Oxen; and 500 Carts loaded with Powder

What then may we conceive of this Prince, and of so much a greater Estate than he, but that his Estate may be raised proportionably to 6 great Dominions? But because possibly Badurim did extend himself to the utmost of his power, and having lost two Battels, was never able to recruit again, which no wise Prince could do but in great extremities: It is conceived that the Mongul, without running any such hazards on the loss of a Battel, can in an instant raise 50000 Elephants 300000 Horses and Foot proportionable; and yet have stock enough for an After-game, if that he should chance to lose the first. But it is seldom that he hath advanced to so high a Messier. For in his action upon the Kingdoms of Decan, he had but an hundred thousand men, and a thousand Elephants for fights though possibly of all sorts of people there might be more than double that number. For in his ordinary removes in times of Progress, it is said that his followers of all sorts amount unto two hundred thousand; and that his Tents do usually take up as much ground as the City of London. Yet notwithstanding this great power, the fortunes of this Empire hath not only been at a stand, since the death of Echebar, but the Rashoobes in Cambalia, the Venazars in Decan, and other pusillat Rebels in other parts of his Dominions, hold out still against him; some of them being laid to command as much Land as a pretty good Kingdom, and to have always in readines 20000 horse, and 50000 foot, to make good their Mountains. Nature, or Divine providence hath given to Emperors, as to Men, a determinate growth, beyond which there is no exceeding.

2. INDIA EXTRA GANGET.

INDIA EXTRA GANGET is that part of the great Continent of India, which lieth on the further side of the River Ganges, from the spring or fountain of it, whosoever it be, to the fall thereof into the Sea by the fifth and last mouth thereof, which is called Ambohi: The other four being reckoned into the other part of India, on this side of that River. From hence extended Eastward as far as China and the Oriental Ocean, on other parts bounded as before.

The Country in those elder times so renowned for wealth, that one Tract of it had the name of The Silver Region, and another of The Golden Chersonese: this last supposed to be the Opbis of Solymann, of which more hereafter. The people of the same nature and disposition, in the elder times, as those which did inhabit on the hither side of the Ganges; nor so well known to the Greeks or Romans as the others were, by reason of the remoteness of their situation, nor so well discovered at the present. So that the best account we shall be able to give of it (though that lame enough) will not be so exact and punctual as of that before, with reference either to the state thereof in the times of the Ancients, or the affairs of it in these days.

Mountains of most note in it, 1 Byrrun, 2 Mandrin, 3 Semantinus; and 4 those called Damaji, touched upon before, in our general discourse of India. Out of which, and from other springs, flow these following Rivers, 1 Catabeda, 2 Borjanna, 3 Sadur, 4 Temala, 5 Bofyn-ga, 6 Chrysauros, 7 Polandus, 8 Atiabak, these three last in the part hereof called the Golden Chersonese, 9 Damas, and 10 Doria, rising out of the Mountains called Damaji. Others there are whose names I meet with in my Author, but of no great note: by what names any of them now distinguished it is hard to say. Nor find I any who have dared to adventure on it.

Of the chief Towns, 1 Balanga, 2 Cirtaba, 3 Tesale, 4 Tagma, and 4 Malibara, have the name of being the Metropolis of their several Nations, 1 Triglyphon, only D d honoured coming to the Crown, is to build a Temple; which he adorned with high Steeples, and many Idols. 2 Quedus, renowned for the bell Pepper, and for that cause very much frequented by foreign Merchants. 3 Tavay, upon the Sea-coast where it joineth to Pegu. Whence measuring along the shores till we come to Champa before mentioned, being all within the Dominions of the King of Siam (not reckoning the Chersonese into this Account) we have a Sea-coast of the length of 600 Leagues. 4 Lugor, upon the Sea-side also, near that little Hydra, which joineth the Chersonese to the Land; from whence to Malacca, is 600 miles sail all along the coast; 5 Calaman, the head City of a little Kingdom, but subject to the Crown of Siam. 6 Siam, the chief City of this part of the Kingdom, which it giveth this name to. A goodly City, and very commodiously seated on the River Menam, for Trade and Merchandize. So populous and frequented by foreign Nations, that besides the Natives, here are said to be thirty thousand households of Arabians. The houses of it high built by reason of the Annual deluge, during which time they live in the Upper-rooms; and unto every house a Boat for the use of the Family. Those of the poorer sort dwell in little sheds, made of Reed and Timber; which they remove from place to place for the best convenience of their Markets: And yet so strong, that being besieged by the Tanguan Conqueror, then King of Pegu, Anno 1567, with an Army of fourteen hundred thousand fighting men, for the space of 20 months together, it resolutely held good against him: not gained at last by Force, but Treason, one of the Gates being set open to him in the dead time of the night, and by that means the City taken. The people hereof are thought to be inclining to Christianity; but hitherto foil instructed in the Principles of it, that they maintain, amongst many other strange opinions, that after the end of 2000 years, (from what time I know not) the World shall be consumed with fire; and that under the ashes of it shall remain two Eggs, out of which shall come one man and one woman, who shall people the world anew.

5. MUANTAT, the last of these Kingdoms, lieth betwixt Jangama and Siam; memorable for nothing more than the City of Odia, or Udia, the principal of all the Kingdoms of Siam; and the usual residence of those Kings. Situate on the banks of the River Caspima, and containing in it 40000 Inhabitants, of which 5000 are trained to the Wars, and in continual readiness for present service. For though this King be Lord of nine federal Kingdoms, yet he useth none of them in his Wars but the natural Siamites, and those of this City, and the rest of his Subjects of Muantay. It is said that for the use of this City only (being seated like Venice upon many little Islands, not bridged together) there are no fewer than 200000 Sciffs, and Shallops; serving to wait the people from one place to another. By means hereof of great strength, and almost impregnable. But being beleaguered by the Tanguan or Bermin Conqueror with ten hundred thousand fighting men (an Army big enough to have buried a greater City than this, if every man had but cast a shovel full of earth upon it) it was won at last.

The Government of these Kings of Siam, was absolute heretofore, if not tyrannical, he being sole Lord of all the Land in his Kingdoms; which he either gave to his Nobles, or Farmed out to Husbandmen, during life or pleasure, but never passed over unto any right of Inheritance. And these he grants unto his Subjects, beside rents in money, upon condition to maintain a determinate number of Horse, Foot, and Elephants: thereby enabled without further charge unto the Subject, to levy 20000 Horse, and 250000 Foot for present service;

besides far greater numbers out of the residue of his people, if occasion be. And for his ordinary Guard he was said to keep 6000 Souldiers, and 200 Elephants, of which Beasts he is reported to have 30000, of which every tenth Elephant is trained up to the War. By reason of so great a power he became Master of the Realms of Cambaya and Campa; held those of Malacca, Jor, Pahau, and Panam, as his Vassals and Tributaries; with that of Jangama and the Laos, under his protection. But when the fatal time was come, and that his City of Siam was betrayed to the King of Pegu, he poisoned himself upon the news, his Son becoming Tributary to the Peguan Victor. This Son of his, too much a Prince to be a Subject, revolted from a Son of the Peguan, a vicious and tyrannical King, degenerating from the gallantries of so worthy a Father; by whom he was besieged in Siam with 90000 fighting men. Unable to resist his Army if he had presently declared such a resolution, he entertained the King with Treaties, and promises of delivering the City to him, till the third month after, (which was March) when ordinarily the River was to overflow all the Country for 120 miles about: by which sudden and violent inundation and the Sword together (the Siamites waiting diligently for the opportunity) there perished all of this great Army, except 70000. After this blow, the conquering Siam, Anno 1600, besieged and endangered the City of Pegu, of which more anon; and dying in the year 1205, left his Estate unto his Brother. Whole Son succeeding, settled a Factory in Siam of the English Merchants, Anno 1612, and was in a fair way of obtaining the Sovereignty of Pegu, then destroyed and wasted; if the violent and unreluctant coming of the King of Burma had not crossed him in it: to whom now subject with the rest of the Indian Princes, on that side of the River.

6. PEGU

PEGU is bounded on the East, with Jangama, and a part of Siam; on the North, with the Kingdoms of Bramas, on the West and South, with the Kingdom of Bengala. So called from Pegu the chief City, as that by the name of the River upon which it stands eth. Divided commonly into the Kingdoms and Estates of 1 Verma, 2 Macin, 3 Orachan, 4 Martavan, and 5 Pegu, specially so called.

1. VERMA is the name of a small Kingdom bordering upon Bengala; and so denominated from Verma, the chief Town thereof: A Kingdom which hath no Port or Haven at all; and therefore wholly freed of Moor and Mahometans, which can be said of no other of these Indians Kingdoms.

The People black, naked above the Waiste, and covered beneath it only with a Veil of Cotton; in matter of Religion, Gentiles; and in war right valiant. This last apparent by the long and frequent Wars which they had with the *Peguan*s; to whom made tributary in conclusion, but not fully conquered.

2. MACHIN so called from Macin the chief City thereof, is another of these Peguan Kingdoms. Of final esteem, but for the great quantity of the Sweet-wood, by the Latins called Lignum Vitæ, by the Natives Calamba, so much in use for Funerals and Batches, (as was said before) held a llo by the Indians for a sovereign and unparalleled Medicine against many dangerous diseases; great quantities hereof are brought hence yearly by the Merchant. One of the first Kingdoms which was conquered by the King of Burma, (upon whom it bordereth) in the beginning of his Fortunes.

3. ORACHAN, or Arachan, lieth on the West of Macin, and the South of Verma; environed round with with Mountains, and impassable Woods, Chief Towns whereof, 1 Dianga, taken and destroyed by the Portugals, in the quarrels betwixt them and the King of Arracan, Anno 1608. 2 Sundua, situate in an Island unto which it giveth name, six Leagues off from the Continent of Bengala, to which it formerly belonged. Subdued by the Portugals, Anno 1602, and from them taken by this King about two years after, and made a member of his Kingdom. The Island 20 Leagues in compass, very strong, fruitful, and the Town well fortified. 3 Arachan, the head City, which gives name to all, distant from the Sea 45 miles, but seated on a large and capacious River. The King and Kingdom of no note, till the ruins of Pegu, to the Crown whereof it once pertained. In the Desolation of which State the King hereof combining with him of Tango, besieged the second Peguan King in the Castle of Mear, and had betwixt them the whole Pillage of that wealthy City, together with the possession of the best Towns of it. After this victory, he returned to Arachan in triumph, leading with him the White Elephant of the King of Pegu, sumptuously adorned; the Brother and two Sons of the Peguan following in the Pageant. A solemn and magnificent entry. The better to assure himself of his new Dominions, this King bestowed upon the Portugals the Fort of Sirrahong, on the River Pegu. For which favour, ill-requited by the Portugals, who had taken his Son, and put him to a grievous ransom, they brake out into open Wars. In the pursuit whereof, for many losses, the King recovered from them the Isle of Sundua; and manning out a Fleet of 1200 Sail (of which 75 were of great burden, as to carry every one twelve Pieces of Ordnance) and in that Fleet 30000 Souldiers, 8000 hand-guns, and 3500 great Pieces, besieged the Fort: which in that action also by the King of Tango, and though he failed in his design, yet like enough he had prevented the King of Arachan, who took it in the year 1613, as before is said, had he not been out in the mean time of his own Kingdom by the King of Burma: of whose great life, the conquering of the Realms of Macin and Arachan were the first foundation.

4. MARTAVAN, the richest of these Kingdoms, lieth South to Arachan, a little turning towards the West. The soil so fertile, that it yieldeth three Harvests in a year; and sent annually fifteen Ships to Cochin, and as many to Malacca, laden with Rice. Rich also in Mines of Iron, Lead, Steel, Brass, Silver, Gold, and Rubies, and very liberally provided of Springs and Rivers. The Forts well stored with Harbs, Boreas, and Buffals; store of Pines and Palms: the Woods with *Sugar-Cane*s, many excellent fruits; the ordinary herbs and shrubs either Medicinal or Odoriferous. The principal City of it called also Martavan, situate on a Haven open at all times of the year, and not choaked with Sands, as usually other Havens are in the Indian Water: of great trading, much splendour, and a temperate Air. Faithful unto the last to the Crown of Pegu, to the Kings whereof their own were subject; and in that constancy they twice repulsed the King of Siam, who then had conquered the most part of the Kingdom of Pegu. Angry whereat, the Siamite called two of his cowardly Captains to be cast into a Caldron of boiling Oil; and at the third Assault became Master of it. Bannala the old King hereof (59 years old) with his heir apparent, and 200000 of his Subjects being compelled to hide themselves in the Woods and Defiles.

5. PEGU, the most Predominant Kingdom, lieth like a Crescent or Half-Moon on the Gulf of Bengala; extending on the coast from Negrais unto Tavan, the next Town of Siam, for the space of three hundred miles, and upwards; but little less in breadth, if not quite as much.

So called from the River Pegu, which runs through the middle of it, and gives this name also unto Pegu the most noted City.

The Soil hereof exceeding fruitful, by reason of the annual overflows of the River, which do yearly fatten it, fit to bear Wheat, and of Rice yielding an incredible quantity. It affordeth also many Rubies, great numbers of Civet-Cats, plenty of Lures, (a Gum there made by Ants, as here Bees make Wax) store of Elephants, and abundance of Parrots, which speak plainer, and are much fairer than in any place else.

The people of a mean stature, somewhat corpulent, and naturally beardless. If any trailing hair thrust forth, they always carry Piners with them to pull them out. Nimble and strong, but yet not very fit for Wars spending too much of their strength in the love of women, to which most passionately addicted. They black their Teeth, because they say that dogs teeth be white; and wear no cloaths but on their heads and about their nakedness. Said by the Jews to be descended from some of the Tribes of Israel, confined hither by Solomon; but by the Peguan themselves, to be begotten of a Dog and a China woman, which were saved here upon a Shipwreck. By Religion for the most part Gentiles, imagining innumerable Worlds one after another, and a determinate number of Gods for every World: more Orbicular, in aligning after the life, according to the merits of the party deceased, one place of Torment, and another of Delight and Pleasures, if they had not added a third also for Justification.

Chief Cities of this Kingdom. 1 Cosni, seated in a Territory full of woods, as those Woods of Tigers, Wild Bores, Apes and Parrots; the houses made of Canes, which serve here for Timber, (some of them being as big as Hogheads) covered over with Thatch. 2 Josabela, a great City on the River Pegu. 3 Dian, on the same River also where they make Barks or Vessels as big as Galleys; which serve both for Trade and Habitation. 4 Coslin, a City four-square, and each square four miles. 5 Langan, a pleasant Town, and full of Palm-trees. 6 Dala, in which were the Kings Stables for his ordinary Elephants: his four White Elephants (for so many he had) being all years kept about the Court, not seen abroad, but in great solemnities, when trapped in Furnitures of Gold; and no less honoured by the people, than the King himself: called therefore King of the White Elephant by the neighbouring Princes. 7 Silnangade, where many victualing Barks are made to serve for dwelling on the Sea. 8 Mear, can, where they are made to unload such goods as are to pass by Land to Pegu. Neighbouring by the strongest Cattle in all this Kingdom, and therefore chosen by the King for his place of Kerret, when distressed by the Kings of Arachan, and Tango. To the last of which making choice to yield up his Person, with his Wife and Children, because he had married him to his Sister, he was by him periodically and barely murdered. 9 Sirrahong, a strong piece on the mouth of the River, given by the King of Arachan to the Portugals, and by them committed to the keeping of Philip de Brito, in the year one thousand six hundred, or thereabouts. Who having made it good against him, and the King of Tango his associate for the space of thirteen years together, was at last forced to yield himself Prisoner to the King of Arachan, by whom cruelly tortured on a Spit. 10 Pegu, the glory of these parts, great, strong, and beautiful: Divided into two Towns, the Old and the New; the Old inhabited by Merchants, the New by the King and his Nobility. The Houses made of Wood, but covered with Tiles: a Cocoa-Tree before every house, yielding a comfortable shade, and a pleasant fence. The streets as straight as any line, and so broad that ten or twelve men may ride abreast in the the narrowest of them. In figures square, each square having five Gates, besides many Turrets, all of them beautifully gilded. The whole well walled with Walls of stone environed on all sides with great Ditches; and in the midst the Royal Palace, walled and ditched about, most sumptuously gilded; but especially the Temple or Idol-chapel, the walls whereof were hid with Gold, the Roof tiled with Silver.

In this magnificent Palace lived the Peguan Kings, in as much pomp and pleasure as the World could yield: his Empire not extending only over these Kingdoms now described, but over all the Provinces or Kingdoms of the Bramines also; which he governed by his several *Vice-Roy*s, or rather TRIBUTARIE Kings. A happiness too great to continue long. For in the year 1567, the Vice-Roy or Tributary King of Tangu, by the aid of his Faction, and reputation of his Virtues, entered into rebellion; and slaying the Nobles of the Land, usurped that Kingdom. After this he subdued the Cities and Kingdoms of Calam, Melintay, Prom, Miranda, and Ava, inhabited all of them by the Brames or Bramines; and therefore taking to himself the Title of the King of Brama, because his fame and fortunes took their rise from his victories over them. Following the course of his success he first assailed the Cities of Odia, and Siam, but repulsed with loss. To make amends for which misfortune, he beleaguered Pegu, and subdued it; and by the reputation which he got in that action, returning to the siege of Siam, had it yielded to him. Dying, he gave the Kingdom of Ava unto one of his Brothers; that of Prom, to one of his Grand-sons; the Kingdom of Jangona to a younger Son, but born after the time of his obtaining the Crown of Pegu; and finally that of Pegu, with the Sovereignty over all the rest, to his eldest Son, a Prince of a vicious and tyrannical nature: and not more cruel to his Subjects, than they disobedient to him. Whereupon preparations are made on both sides, the people, to defend their liberty; the King, to preserve his Royalty. During these civil discords, the titular King of Siam, whose late overthrow was not yet fully digested, came violently into the Country of Pegu; burning Corn, Grass, and Fruits, killing Man, Woman, and Child: and having satisfied his Fury, returned to his home. This spoil of the Fruits of the Earth, was but a prologue to an unsupportable Famine, which consumed all the Inhabitants of this flourishing Kingdom, except such whom the Granaries of the City of Pegu preferred, Anno 1568. For here the Fathers devoured their Children, the stronger preyed upon the weaker; not only devouring their more fleshy parts, but their entrails also: nay they broke up the skulls of such as they had slain, and sucked out their brains. This calamity incited another Tributary Prince of Tangu, to make his best advantage out of his neighbours affliction; though made his Brother-in-law, and advanced to great honours by his Father. For justly fearing the displeasure of his angry Prince, to whose aid he had refused to come, when sent for by him, he joined himself with the King of Arracan, besieged his Lord and Sovereign in the Fort of Meccan. Brought to extremities, the unfortunate Prince, thought best to put himself into the hands of his Brother of Tangu, who assaulted and entered Pegu: where he found as much Treasure as 600 Elephants, and as many Horses, could conveniently carry away. This havock being made, he villanously murdered the King, Queen, and their Children, and departed; leaving the gleanings of his spoil to the King of Arracan: who, Anno 1600, was expelled by the King of Siam, who enjoyed it not long. For the King of Burma having with an Army of an hundred thousand fighting men, and forty thousand Elephants, subdued the Kingdoms of Macin, and Arracan, followed the currents of his victories; conquered Siam, drove the King thereof from PEGU, where he hath built a most magnificent Palace: and is now the sole Monarch of the Twelve Kingdoms of this India.

A more particular relation of this King, and his new-settled estate, we cannot yet understand: what his Revenues are, what his Government, what his Forces. Merchants, whose iniquitiveness into the State-Matters of other Princes, is dangerous to their trading, cannot give us any full satisfaction: Scholars and Statists are not permitted to observe and such of the Natives as could give us the most light, are not suffered to travel. Only we may conjecture by the great wealth of those several Princes, and the vast Armies by them raised in their several Territories: that his Annual Revenues, Casualties, and united Forces must be almost infinite.

And so much for INDIA.

The Oriental Islands.

HE ORIENTAL ISLANDS, so called from their situation in the Oriental, or Eastern Seas, may be divided into the Islands of 1. Japan, 2. the Philippine, and Isles adjoining, 3. the Islands of Bantam, 4. the Malucces, 5. those called Sinde, or the Celebes, 6. Borneo, 7. Java, 8. Sumatra, 9. Ceilan, and 10. certain others of less note,

1. JAPAN.

JAPAN is an aggregate body of many Islands, separated by small Gulfs, Strights, and Turnings of the Sea; but taking name from Japan, the chief of all. Some reckon them to be 66 in all; others ascribe that number to so many Kingdoms, into which these Islands (be they in number more or less) use to be divided. But whatsoever the number be (the certainty whereof I can no where find, there are three only of account, to which the several petty Kingdoms are now reduced: that is to say, 1. Japan specially so called, which containeth 53 Kingdoms, of which 26 are under the King of Macao, 12 under the King of Annam, the other 15 under other Princes of inferior note. 2. Ximo, which containeth in it nine Realms, the principal whereof are those of Baigrand Figen, 3. Nicum, which comprehendeth four only of these petty Seignories.

JAPAN is the chief of all these Islands, to which the residue may be accounted of but as Appartenances, is situate over against the straits of Aniau (if such straits there be) towards which it looketh to the North: distant from New Spain on the East 150 Leagues, or 450 English miles; and 60 Leagues from Canton, a Province of China, opposite to it on the West. On the South it hath the vast Ocean, and those infinite shoals of Islands which are called the Philippine, and the Isles neighbouring upon them. Extending in length from West to East 200 Leagues, but the breadth not proportionable therunto: in some places not above 10 Leagues over, and in the broadest part but 30.

The Country Mountainous and barren, but of a very healthy air, if not too much subject unto cold, yet in some places they have Wheat ripe in the Month of Mays; but their Rice, which is their principal sustenance, they gather not before September. The surface of the Earth, clothed with Woods and Forrests, in which some Cedars of so tall and large a body, that one of them only is sufficient to make a Pillar for a Church: the bowels of it flooded with divers Metals, and amongst others with such inexhaustible Mines of Gold, that Paulus Venetus reporteth some of the Palaces of their Kings to be covered, in his time, with sheets of Gold, as ours in Europe are with Lead. But I find no such matter in our latter Travellers. Their Fields and Meddows full of Cattel, and hitherto not made acquainted with the making of Butter; their Fens much visited by wild Ducks, as their house-yards with Pigeons, Turtles, Quails, and Pullets.

The People for the most part of good understanding, apt to learn, and of able memories; cunning and subtle in their dealings. Of body vigorous and strong, accustomed to bear Arms until 60 years old. Their complexion of an Olive-Color, their beards thin, and the one half of the hair of their heads shaved off. Patient they are of pain, ambitious of glory, uncapable of suffering wrong, but can withal defensible their contentments of it till opportunity of revenge. They reproach no man for his poverty, so it come not by his own unthriftiness, for which cause they detest all kinds of gaming, as the ways of ill-husbandry; and generally abhor Slavery, Theft, and Swearings. Their mourning commonly is in white, as their scarls in blacks; their teeth they colour black also, to make them beautiful: they mount on the right side of the horse, and sit (as we are used to rise) when they entertain. In Physick they eat salt things, sharp, and raw; and in their salutations they put off their shoes. The very Antipodes of our world in customs though not in site, and the true Type or Figure of the old English Dunon, opposite to the Papists in things fit and decent, though made ridiculous many times by that opposition. In other things they do much resemble those of China, if not the more ceremony of the two: walking their Infant children in the nearest River, as soon as born, and putting off their shoes when they go to meat.

The People have but one Language, but those do intermingled with the words of other Nations, that it seems rather to be many Languages than one. They have long used the Art of Printing, which probably enough, they might have from Chinese Characters whereof are a kind of Brachygraphy, and signify not only Letters, but some whole words also. In matters of Religion, Gentiles, adoring anciently the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven, and giving divine honour to wild beasts, and the Stags of the Forrests: but finally worshipping some of their deceased Priests and Princes, by the names of Potatoes and Caneiros the first of which they use to pray for goods of the other world, and to the last for Temporal blessings. Their Priests they call by the name of Bonzes, settled in goodly Convents, and endowed with very large Revenues: who though divided into eleven different (if not contrary) Sects, do well enough agree in denying the Providence of God, and the Immortality of the Soul. Of late times by the care and diligence of the Jesuits, Christianity hath begun to take footing here; whether with such a large increase as their Letters called Epistols Japonicae have been pleased to tell us, I am somewhat doubtful. They tell us there are some Kings of these Islands, whom they have converted and baptized, that within 50 miles of Macao they had 50 Churches, 200 at the least in all, and that in the year 1587, the number of their Converts were two hundred thousand. Of this, if

There is not far off another Island, not in this account, called Timor, situate in the tenth degree of Southern Latitude; the chief of many little Islands which lie round about it; but not else observable, except it be for that abundance of Sanders both white and yellow, which growing there, is greedily exchanged by the Inhabitants for Iron, Hatchets, Swords, Knives, and the like commodities.

4. The MOLVCCOES.

THE MOLUCCOES are in number many; the King of Terate which is one of them, being said to have Dominion over 70 Islands: but the determinate number of them I do not where hind. Situate on both sides of the Aequator, and consequently of an hot and temperate air: the foyl so dry and spongiuous, that it sucketh up the greatest shower of Rain that doth fall amongst them, before it can pass into the Sea. Not very well furnished with necessaries for the life of man; but that defect supplied with the abundance of Spice which are growing here, Cinnamon, Ginger, Nutmeg, Mullick, Aloes, Pepper, and the like commodities; for which the Merchants bring them all things that the Country wants. But 'tis the Clowe, which is the great Riches of these Islands, and peculiar in a manner to them. A Spice, which groweth on Trees, like Bay-trees yielding blofoms, first white, then green, (at which time they yield the pleasantest smell in the world) and lat of all red and hard, which are the Cloves. Of nature so extreme hot that if a Pail of water should only stand in the room, in which they are cleansed and sorted, the Cloves in two days would dry it up. Of which nature the unsun Silks of China are affirmed to be.

Tin: People for the most part Idolaters; intermix with some Mahometans, dwelling on the shores; and of late times with Christians in their several Factories. Of several Originals, and different Languages, but all in general fraudulent, peridious, treacherous, inhumane, and of noted wickedness. Few of them clothed, nor much caring to hide their shame. Not civilized by the cohabitation of more model and civil Nations. Pure fuch ill conditions should be lodged in such handfome bodies : the people being faid to be better proportioned than the other Indians; and for ftrength and valour not followed by any of them.

of Orléans, the Islands which pass under this name, there are not above five or six of any reckoning: that is to say, 1 Tenote, 2 Tidor, 3 Maicir, 4 Rachin, 5 Maebian, and 6 Borac: None of them above fix Leagues in compass, many not so much; the whole cluster of them thronged together in a girdle of no more than 25 Leagues in the Circumference: yet of such consequence and importance, that the two famous voyages of American Vespulius, and Ferdinand Magellanus, the first employed by Enmanuel King of Portugal, the other by Charles the Emperour, and King of Spain, were undertaken only to find out the next way unto them.

Of the rest, Machian and Tidore have their proper Kings; so hath Bathoe also, if that be one of them: the King whereof had anciently some title and authority over those of Bandon. Machy, and Machian, are subject to the King of Terenate, who is a Mahometan in Religion; and said to be the Lord of 70 Islands. This the most puffed Member of this scattered body; and for that cause most aimed at by all Competitors, the Spaniards having here one Fortred, and the Hollanders three. Both Nations hated by the Natives, whom they continue and wait in the wars between them; but of the two the Spaniards looked on by the people as the more a Gentleman; and the other stomached and deplored for their ferdid dealings.

Nothing else memorable in the story of Cherography of them, but that they were discovered by the conduct of Magellanus, in the Reign of Charles the Fifth, who employed him in it, Anno 1519, and that there is in Ternate a Prodigious Mountain, in height above the Clouds of the Air, and in Nature agreeing with the Element of Fire, which it seems to mount to: huge flames whereof, with dreadful thunders, and dark smoke, it sends forth continually. reckoned by some amongst these Islands, but howsoever neighbouring near them, are those of Sulzerone, and Polarisay, the first more plentiful of Cloves, the second more proper for the Nutmeg, but both acknowledging the Sovereignty of the Kings of England; nor Palerone, by the general and voluntary Act of all the chief men of the Country, was surrendered into the power of King James, the possession of it being given for his Majesties use to Captain Court, Decemb. 23. Anno 1616, no other Nation at that time having any interest in it, or Pretensions to it: which notwithstanding it was not long after seized on by the insolent and ungrateful Hollanders, who being to reform it upon composition, cut down all the Clove-Trees, so to deprive the English of the benefit of them. Polarisay made the like surrender at the same time also, declared by setting up the English Colours on the top of their Castle, giving to Court a green tuff (whereby as by Livery and Scut) to take possession of the Country, promising the annual tribute of a branch of Nutmegs; and that they should sell neither Mace nor Nutmegs to any, but to those of the English Nation. The like done at or near the same time, by Wayre and Roffings, two other Islands of these Seas; which if they be not those two of Burdon, pointed at before, must needs be brought within the number of this latterd Company.

5. The SINDÆ or SELEBES.

Near the Molucces, and almost intermingled with them, are a set of Islands which Proslamy calleth SINDA, and the Moderns SELEBES; many in tale, but not above four of any weight; so that to say, SELEBES, 2 Gito, 2 Ambina, 1 Misciss; of which the two first are situate under the Equator, and the last somewhat on the South of it: all of them the time of Proslamy inhabited by Anthrophagi, and a long time after; inhom as the Kings of the Molucces did use to fend their condemned persons into these Islands, there to be devoured. Which said in general we will take a more particular view of them, as they lie before us.

1. SELEBES, which gives name to the reef, and hath under it many lesser Iflands, is large and rich. The soil thereof exceeding fertile, the people tall and comely, and of colour, not so much black as ruddy. Much given to Piracy, and all Idolaters full of lare. Governed by many Kings or petty Princes, the cause of much contention, and many quarrels: three of which are said to have been converted to Christianity; and for that cause much hated by their heathenish Subjects, who thereupon rebelled against them. It is situate West of the Molucces, and hath therein a Town called Sion, honoured with the abode of one of their Christian Kings: but possibly not so called until their conversion; the proper name thereof being Cian, 2. Nibon, in the South, and 3. Terdin in the North parts of it.

2. GILOLO, called also Batachina, is one of those Islands, which our late Navigators include under the name of Del Moro. Of large extent, conceived to be half as big as Italy. By that account (the truth whereof I do very much doubt) greater than Zeilan is in compass, though of less reputation: That being governed by its own Prince: This subject for the most part to the King of Amboyna.

Terenatc.

Tenante. Situate East of the Moluccoes, exceeding plentiful of Rice, well stored with wild Hens; and on the shores provided of a kind of Shell-fish, which in taste much resembleth Mutton. A tree they have which they call by the name of Sagu, of the pith whereof they make their bread; and of the sap or juice of it they compose a pleasing drink, which serveth them instead of Wine. Their intemperately hot; the people well proportioned but rude and savage; some of them Gentiles, some Manichaeans, of which last Religion is their King, the chief Town of it is Batchame, or Batashina, (whence the new name unto the Island) in which the Hollanders have a Fort to defend their Factory.

3; AMBOINA, South of the Aganina, and the third of the Sinde, hath many Islands of less note, which depend upon it, and do communicate in the nature. In compass about five hundred miles, said by Magnus to be extremely rough and barren; which must be understood with reverence to some kinds of Grain. For otherwise it is very fertile, abounding productive of Rice, Citrons, Limes, Oranges, Coco-nuts, Sugar-Canes, and other fruits, and very plentiful of Clowes. Which last, as it makes fame to reckon it amongst the Molucces; so may it be a reason why the Island is defective in fish fruits as require much moisture: the Clowe being of so hot a temper, as before was noted, that it draweth to it all the moisture of the Earth, which is near unto it.

The people much given to Piracy, wherewith they do infest all the neighbouring Islands, Detained for Cannibals, or Man-eaters: it being here a constant custom, that when their Parents were grown old, or sick of any incurable Disease, they give them to one another to be eaten by them. They have one Town of more note than other, which they call Ambonia, by the name of the Island. First, taken by the Portugals, and by them secured with strong Fortresses: during whose power here, the Jesuites, who had in it their several Residences, converted many to Christianity. But in the year 1605, the Island and the Port both were conquered by Stephen Hagan, for the States of the United Provinces: who having cleared the Country of the Portugals Forces, possessed themselves of it. Received by the Natives at their first coming with Joy and Triumph: but they got little by the change, as they found soon after: their new Masters being more burdensome, and insufferable, than the old had been. For claiming it in the right of Conquest, and think they may oppress the Natives by the Law of Arms; and ingross all trade unto themselves as the true Proprietaries. Infamous even amongst the rude and savage Indians for their barbarous inhumanity executed upon some of the English (the greatest Patrons under God which they have in the world) when in the year 1618. they most cruelly tortured, and most wickedly murdered: under colour of some plot to betray their Fortresses: but in plain truth for no other reason but because they were more beloved by the Inhabitants, and began to gain upon their trade.

4. West of Ambun, and South-West of Selebet, lieth the fourth of thise Islands, called MACASSARA, said to contain from East to West 600 miles; plentiful of Rice, Fish, Fih, Salt, and Cotton-Wool: not destitute of Gold and Pearls, and well stored with Sandar (Sandalum it is called in Latine) a medicinal wood, growing like a Nut-tree: of several colours, white, red, yellow, but the red, the best: the fruit in making like a Cherry, but of no esteem. In some parts overgrown with woods, in which certain Fly make nightly fuch shining lights, as if every twig or bough were a burning Candle.

In the middle covered with high Mountains, out of which now many navigable Rivers.

The people for the most part Gentiles, intermixt on the Sea-coasts with some Mahometans. Chief Towns heretofore, 1 Senderem, the Kings Seat, situate near a large Lake, very commodiously for traffick. 2 Macassar, an English Factory, so called according to the name of the Island.

Near to these Islands, and somewhat North to Batavia, are some other Isles, plentiful of all things necessary for the life of man; but inhabited by a thievish and Piratical people: the principal of which, is Terrao, 2 Sanguin, 3 Solor, 4 Moravia, in which last they eat Batata Roots, instead of bread; besides some others of less note. Most of the people Gemiles, except those of Sanguin, the Kingdom, whercof being gained to the Christian Faith, by some of the Jesuits, hath brought many of his Subjects to the same Religion.

6. BORNEO.

WEA of these Selebes, lieth BORNEO, of more note and greatness, than any hitherto described, in the Indian Seas. In compass, after their accompt who speak most sparingly, 2200 miles; but as some say, no less than three months fall about. Situate under the Equator, which parteth the Dominions of the King of Borneo, and the King of Lau: opposite on the North to Cambodia; on the South, to Java; on the East, to Selebes; on the West, unto the Isle of Sumatra.

The Country said to be provided naturally of all things necessary; yet said wical to be unfurnished of Affes, Oxen, Herds of Cattel, except only Horses, and these but small of stature neither: the greatest riches of it being Campfire, Agarick, and some Mines of Adamants, cronomically conceived by Mercurio to be the Infu-la bene Fortune, spoken of by Ptolomy; that being seated opposite to the out-lets of Ganges, in the Latitudes of a hundred forty five Degrees, and fifteen Minutes; the warm degree degrees of the Golden Chirifonee, and consequently twenty Degrees distant at the least from that Island in Prolomy.

The people generally more white than the rest of the Indians, of good wits, and approved integrity, though all Mahometans, or Gentils. Divided betwixt two Kings, and two Religions; the King of Borneo and his Subjects being all Mahometans; those of Lau still remaining in their ancient Gentilism. They think the Sun and Moon to be man and wife, and the Stars their children; ascribing to each of them divine honours, to the Sun especially, whom they salute at his first rising with great Reverence, saying certain Verses. Their publick businells are treated of commonly in the night, at which time the Councillors of State meet, and ascend fome tree, viewing the Heavens till the Moon rise, and then go to the Senate-house. The same Apparel generally of both Religions; but thin, by reason of the great heat of the Air: a shirt of Silk, or Calicote, or some flesh sight stuff, worn more for modesty than for warmth.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Borneo, situate in the North-West part of the Island near a goodly bay, but in the middle of the Fens like the City of Venice, and feated as that is, on Piles; the building sumptuous, of hewed stones, covered with the leaves of the Coco-tree. The Town so large as to contain 2500 Families. 2 Taipura, 3 Tamaraot, 4 Malano, all of them noted for fair Cities, or commodious Havens. 5 Sagadana, a Factory of Englib. 6 Lavi on a large Bay in the South-East part of the Island, the ordinary Seat of the King of Lauu. 7 Paro, on another capacious Bay, not far from Lavi, and directly opposite to Borneo: that being feated on the North-West, and this on the South-East of the Island. Betwixt these two Kings is the whole divided; but so, that of Borneo hath the greater part of it, and therefore keeps the

th

Government, Anno 1604. The name of the New King Sultan Pedrucks Siric, who in his Letter to King James, spoken of before, titles himself the sole King of Siamatra: either with greater brag than truth, or else because the Kingdoms of Teco, Priaman, and Barosse, being conquered by him, all the rest were become his Tributaries. Associated with the Forces of the King of Jor, or Jabor, who had married his Sister, he belieged Malacca, and distressed it: But being beaten from it by the Portugals, he turned the tide of his displeasure upon his Confederates, and subdued that Kingdom; who with the King of Sich (some other petty Prince near by) and two of their brethren, were in the year 1612, brought Prisoners to Achem.

The Government of this King is absolute, and merely arbitrary, executing what he hath a mind to, without form of Law. So cautious, that without his Placard no stranger can have Ingreſs into his Dominions, or free Egreſs out of them. Nor is admittance to his presence granted unto any whom he first finds not for by an Officer with a Gilded Staff. He is conceived to be living both by Sea and Land, his Country populous, his Elephants many and well trained, able to part to Sea 120 or if need be 200 Gallies and Frigats fit for any service, most of which carry Demi-Canon, Culverin, Sakar, Minion, and other like Ordnance of Brass. So great a Master of his Subjects, that in 21 days he had a goodly Chandel drawn about his Palace, from a River which was eight miles off. Of his Revenues, I am able to make no conjecture, but think him to be full of Gold, by that great quantity of Golden Furnitures which he hath about him.

Golden Fur-trade's whence the Kings Gold, I cannot but take notice of some Islands on the West of Sumatra, called Aurea Isula, or the Golden Islands; the chief of which named Amboina, is possessed by Cannibals, or Man-eaters. Opposite unto which on the East lie the Malacca, and Andamania, are those called Linga, Bintia, and Bintama; the last of which is said to be very woody, well watered, and to afford a commodious Station for shipping. The houses are built of Stone, but thatched, except that of the King (for even these forry Indians love to have a King of their own); whose house more eminently seated, is more handiome covered.

9. ZEILAN.

WEST of Sumatra, somewhat inclining to the North, is the Island of ZEELAND, ten degrees distant from the Aequator, and near adjoining to the Promontory in the higher India which Protemy calleth by the name of Cory. The length hereof computed at 250 miles, the breadth at 150 miles only, the whole circumference at 750 or 800 miles. Conjectured by the Situation, and other probable inducements, to be the Taprobane of the ancient Writers. Orellius and most other intelligent men of thise latter times are of that opinion. Only Mercator, who hath carried the Golden Chersonese to the Ileoc Zagan, and fixed Taprobane in that of Sumatra, (in which I left I must confess he hath many Partners) will have this Island to be that which Protemy calls Nangeris, though that be four Degrees more West than the Promontory of Cory to which this Ile in former times seems to have been joynted.

Taking it therefore for an evident and undoubted truth, that this Zeilan or Ceilan is the Taprobant of the Ancients, we will a little look on the state of that Island, with reference to the times when those Authors lived. By Pliny is affirmed to be plentiful in Rice, Honey, Ginger, Gold, Silver, Precious Stones, and all kind of Metals. By Pliny, that the Gold is pure, and the Gems rarer than any in India; that there were also Groves of Palm-trees, and great fote of Elephants; is declared by Elian, and some others. Watered with many fair and pleasant Rivers;Scythia 1. Sasne, 2. Alexand, 3. Baracuz, 4. Gandes, 5. Phafri: the Hills in many places having a full prospect over the adjoining Valley; the chief of which were Males, and those called Calbi, the Vallies perpetually enriched with the choicest Fruits. Exceeding populous for the bignesse, and stored with many Towns of note. Of which Margaramm only hath the name of a Metropolis, 1. Margana, 2. Tegana, 3. Sindocanda, 4. Hlodca, 5. Nababira, 6. Dogana, 7. Dionysopolis, 8. Docana, 9. Aboras, 10. to Hicetum, 11. Nagadiba, 12. and 13. Amudaria, the famous name of Cities; 14. Medimena, and 15. Talacorum, noted for the Towns of Traffick. 16. Priape, 18. Mardana, 17. Rhizela, 18. Spataura, and 19. that of the Sax, for commodious use of the People, 20. Amnogramm being honour'd with the title of Regia, or the Royal City. As for the Scythians, it is said by Euſtoly to have been firſt called Targabana, then Simodi Enlyma, and finally in this time Saxiſcia and the People Sax; from whence the name of Sclan or Sclen frogs to be derived.

To take a view of all the present, I find it did to be of an Oval form, divided from the main Land by a narrow Channel, the Havens refreshing it with their Dewes, the Air with a fragrant freshnes, the Earth diversified into many Rivers and Fountains; the Earth diversified into lofty hills, and low vallies; her inward Chambers filled with Metals, and lowly Jewels; her outward Coat of the pleasant colour, coloured with whole Woods of Cinnamon, besides Fruit, Lemons, Oranges, &c. bettering both Spain, Of Limbs and Beasts great plenty both wild and tame, and the best breed of Elephants in all the world. Deliciteious use of the Vine, the want of which supplied with a pleasant drink made of the juyce of fruits, more natural to them than the other, and so preservative of life that the people are reported to be longer lived than in any other parts. In a word, so abounding in all contentments, that the Indians hold it to be Paradise, and take upon them to point out some of Adams footings, left for a memorial in some parts of it. And to confirm them in this Error, they have an Hill there which the Spaniards call by the name of Pico de Adam, affirmed to be seven Leagues in height, from whence Adam ascended into Heaven? for that cause visited by the Moors or Arabians, with continual Pilgrimages.

The People for the most part tall and frail of body, naked from the girdle upwards, unwarlike, and much given unto craft and pleasures; So quaquam fowmached that the poorest of them will not eat that meat which another hath touched; inclined to bravery, which they stretch out wide holes in their cars, which they stretch out with Jewels to their very Shoulders. Cunning Artificers in all Metals, one of them making a Cross of such exquisite workmanship, that it seemed to give life to the dead; and was sent by the Archbishop of Goa to the King of Spain, as the rarest of the world which had ever graced his Royal Cabinet. They are also very active, and well skilled in Navigation, both men and women, travelling thorow India through their tricks and Hobby-horses, by which they get themselves both delight and money. In matter of Religion, they are generally Idolaters, especially the Natives, whom they call Cingales, which live in the In-Lands: the Sea-coasts (as in other Islands) being filled with Moslems. No Christians that I hear of but in Columbo, a Town of the Portugals.

Cities of most repute amongst them, 1 Candie, the seat of one of their Kings, supposed to be the Sindocandia of Plotomys, memorable for the Statue of their supposed Adam, most artificially wrought, of five or six Fathoms high, Symmetrically proportionable to the print of his foot, which which they conceive to have amongst them. 2 Vemane, of great renown for an Idol-Temple, in compass 130 paces, of great height, and all white except the top, which hath the Spires thereof so gilded, that when the Sun shines, men are not able to look upon them. 3 Janaspatan, 4 Triqui Lemale, (supposed to be the Tarich of Ptolomy) 5 Betecolum, 6 Vilaflem, 7 Tanamaca, 8 Laula, 9 Galle, the seats of many of their Kings; the Nogaria, conceived to be the Nigari; as 11 Agenda, the Jagaria of Ptolomy. 12 Columbi, the seat Royal of the chief King of this Island, situate on a capacious Bay in the Southwest of it, and of most trade in all this Country : many great Ships laden with Cinnamon, Gems, Elephants, and other Indian Commodities go yearly hence. Fortified by the Portugall (by whom called Columbo) with a very strong Castle, built with the King's leave at first, to secure their trading; but since used by them as a curb to hold him in with, and to compel him to pay Tribute.

This Country first discovered to be an Island by Oncristus, Admiral of Alexander's Fleet, was in the time of Troilus inhabited by several Nations. The principal of which were the Gathis, and Madure dwelling in the North; the Rhogandani and Nanigiri in the South; the Sindocade in the West; and the Tarachi in the East, the middle parts being taken up by the Autrogrannati, Mazeshi, Saani, Serni. But little or nothing is said of them in the story of Ulys, but that they were good Mimicks, did imitate the tunes of Birds, and could speak to two at once, as if double tongued; that they were very studious of Astrology, and worshipp'd the Sun and the Host of Heaven; that some of their Embassadors coming to the time of Claudius Cæsar, Solem à Leva oriri nitui jun, &c. admir'd to see the Sun rise on the wrong side of them; and finally, that the King was chosen by the people with respect had to his age and clemency; who being enthroned, appointed thirty Judges to administer Justice to the Subject, without the Major part of whom, sentence of Death was to pass on no man. In following times this Monarchy (for such it was in the time of those Authors) was broken into many Pieces: the Portugals finding nine Kings in it, at their first coming hither, all Homagers or Tributaries to the King of Columbi. After that, this their chief King was wickedly murdered by his Barber, who drove the other Kings out of the Country, and for a while usurp'd the Monarchy to himself. Since which time, having once again recover'd their Kingdoms, six of them (as I have somewhere read, but remember not where) put themselves under the protection of the Great Mogul, and became his Feudatories.

Near herecallto on the Coasts of Malabar, are the Islands which they call Maldive, many in number, but few called from the principal of them, as that from Moldova, a noted and well-traded Empory, where the King resideth: Not very plentiful of necessaries for the use of man, did not the Palm alone supply them in all other wants. Inhabited by an indolentious and slobber people, who make themselves long Garments of Silk or Flax, brought from other places, wherewith more modestly adorned, than the rest of the Indians: and by their Filting draw up shells of such mingled colours, that they serve amongst the Siamers instead of money.

10. ISLANDS of less note.

BEHIDES these Islands represented to us by their several names, and some who have nothing but their names to take notice of; there be many thousands of Isles note which we find in grofs: that the Indian Seas being to prodigiously full of Islands, that it is almost impossible to believe there should be such multitudes; & yet utterly impossible to credit what is told us of them. Some of the most remarkable of them we have touched upon, as Accellories Appurtenances to some greater Islands. The rest we shall present only in the general Muster, together with a taste of some of those strange reports, with which some men have fouled their Papers, and abused their Readers. Of the Philippines there are said to be 11000, though but 40 of them in possession of the King of Spain. More South, but over against China, is another Frie of them, affirmed by Mariners to be no fewer than 7448; and (as if nature had delighted to disport her self by lowering Islands in these Seas) another Shoal of them about India, no fewer in number than 127000, all which laid together would make a Continent as large as three or four parts of Europe; and are full growing under the burthen of Heathenism. These Islands stand loo nigh unto one another, that they seem only to such as are afar, to be all but one firm Land; & yet whosoever allo passeth between them, may with his hands touch the Boughs of the Trees on the one side, and on the other. Of these and the other Indian Islands, Travellers relate many incredible Fables, viz. That there are Hogs that have two teeth growing out of their snouts, and as many behind their ears, of a span and a half long; a Tree whose Western part is rank poison; and the Eastern part an excellent preservative against it. They tell us also of a Fruit, that whosoever eateth, shall for the space of twelve hours be out of his Wits; and of a Stone, on which whosoever sitteth, shall suddenly have a rupture in his body. We are told also that hereabouts are taken Tortoises of that bigness, that ten men might fit and dine within one of the shells; and that there is a Tree, which all the day-time hath not a flower on it, but within half an hour after Sun-set, is full of them. All huge and monstrous lyes, and not fit for credit. Galsano reporteth also, that in some of these Islands there is a Fruit, of which if a Woman that is with child eat, her Child will presently move; that there is a River plentifully stored with Fish, whose water is yeft so hot, that it doth immediately scald off any skin of the Beast that is cast into it; that some of the men have tails; and most of their Swine hogs; that they have Oysters which they call brats, the shells whereof are of so large compals, that they Christen Children in them; that in the Sea there are stones which grow and increase like Fish, of which the best Lime is made: that there is a bird called Monicodacta, which having no feet is in a continual motion: and that there is a hole in the back of the Cock, in which the Hen doth lay her eggs, and hatch her young ones. I bid no man to believe these Relations: for my part I lay with Horace,

Quodcunque ostendis mihi sic, incredulus odi.

Whatever thus thou tell'st me, I

Will always hate it as a lyc.

And so much for these EASTERN ISLANDS.

An Advertifement to the Reader touching the ERRATA of this PART.

IN the first place the Reader is to be advertised that Fol. I have adventured to prove the Alamaths of Ptolomy to be the Chamath, or Hamath-Sobab, of the Holy Scriptures, The place ill pointed, but the judicious Reader will easily find out the scope and meaning. Yet if this shall not be approved of, I should then think it to be that Elam or Belam where David discomfited the Army of the Mesopotamians; mention whereof is made 2 Sam. 10. 16. 17. In the next place he is to know, that Fol. within the compass of five lines, the Victory which Afa King of Judah obtained against the numerous Army of Ethiopians, is twice repeated: in the first place ascribed to Jethir, in the next to Marcella, (though the other also hath good Authors) let that of Jethir be supplied in this manner following. 5. Jethir or Jethira, in the North Border of this Tribe toward Eleutheropolis: a City anciently of the Levites, in St. Hieroms time called by the name of Jethira, and then replenished altogether with Christians: now nothing but the name remaining. 6. Marcella, &c. And finally, whereas Ajalon, p. is placed in the Tribe of Ephraim, and p. in the Tribe of Dan, the reason is, because being situate in the Borders of both Tribes, it is by some Writers ascribed to Dan, and by others to Ephraim. The like may be also said of Michpas, mentioned also in two Tribes according as it is disposed on by several Authors:

PART I.

CONTAINING THE CHOROGRAPHY and HISTORY OF AFRICK,

AND ALL THE

OF AFRICK.

AFRICK is bounded on the East by the Red-Sea, and Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Asia; on the West by the main Atlantick Ocean, interpoling betwixt it and America; on the North by the Mediterranean Sea, which divides it from Europe and Anatolia; and on the South, with the Ethiopic Ocean, separating it from Terra Australis incognita, or the Southern Continent. Parted from all the rest of the World, except Asia only, to which joyned by a narrow Isthmus, not above 60 miles in length, and memorable for the great design which Cleopatra the last Queen of Egypt had upon it, which in brief was this. When Mark Anthony was encountered by Augustus in the Naval Battel of Actium, Cleopatra fearing the success, fled through the midst of all his Fleet, with the 60 Gallies which were appointed for her Guard. Being come to the North part of this Isthmus, she gathered together all her portable Treasures, and intended to hoist her Shipping out of the Mediterranean, and hale them over the Land to the Red-Sea, from whence she had purposed to take Sail, and together with her Sweet-heart Anthony, and some other choicest Friends, to seek out some other place of dwelling far enough from the Romans. But from this, Anthony, who fled after her, and vainly hoped for a change of fortunes, did at last dissuade her.

The Form hereof is like a Pyramid reversed; the Basis of which, from Tanger on the Strait of Gibraltar, to the point where it joyneth unto Asia, is reckoned at the breadth of 1920 Italian Miles, the Comus of it very narrow. But from the Comus or Pyris to the most Northern part of the Basis, it extendeth it self the space of 4155 Miles, being much less than Asia, and far bigger than Europe.

By the Grecians it is called most commonly Libyá, (of which more hereafter) part of it taken for the whole; by the Ethiopians, Alkebi-Lam; by the Indians, Beseant. But the most noted name thereof is Africa, which Josphus out of Cleodemus and Polybistor, deriveth from Ephor or Apher, one of the Nephews of Abraham, by Midian the Son of Keturah. The Arabians, by whom it is called Iffrebia, derive it from the Verb Farnab, signifying to divide; because more visibly divided both from their own Country, and the rest of the World, than any other part thereof which was known unto them. Some of the Greek Fablers fetch it from one Afer, a companion of Hercules, whom he attended unto Spain. Some fetch it out of Apher, an Hebrew word, signifying Dust, agreeable to its sandy and dusty Soil. Festus an old Grammatian, from A Frigatium, and the Greek word phos, which imports ports a country void of cold, as suitable to the fiery temper of the Air. By Barbatus, who brings all from the old Phœnician, it is said to be derived from Purus, Spica, an ear of Corn, which mollified into Ferie, came at last to Africa, that is to say, a Country plentiful in Corn, which Etymology of his may receive some countenance from that great plenty of Corn which with the Romans called the Proper Africa, whereof we shall speak more when we come to Barbary: the whole Continent taking from that Province the name of Africa, be not worth accepting) I should prefer the Etymon of Fertus before any other, unless we might be sure that Carthage anciently was called Africa, as Suidas telleth us it was; for then without all peradventure we would seek no further. For other more particular names by which it hath been called in some elder Writers, i. e. Olympia, Oeania, Elphaitica, Coryphe, Ammonia, Hesperia, Origia, and perhaps some others, it is enough to our design to take notice of them.

It is situate for the most part under the Torrid Zone, the Æquator crossing it almost in the very midst; and for that cause supposed by many of the Ancients not to be inhabited at all, or but very thinly, in the middle and more Southern parts of it: or at all, with such strange people, as hardly did deserve to be counted men. Pomponius among others was of this opinion, gushing the inward parts thereof to be taken up by such strange Brutes as the Cynophantes, who had heads like dogs; 2. The Scelopores, who with the shadow of their foot, could and did hide themselves from the heat of the Sun; 3. The Gamagaphantes, a naked people, ignorant of the use of Weapons, and therefore fearfully avoiding the sight of men; 4. The Blennyes, who being without heads, had their eyes and mouths in their Breasts; 5. The Aripiani, who had no other humane quality to declare them to be men, but the shape and making of their bodies. These people as they thought possessed some small portion of the mid-land parts of this great Country; the rest they knew not, or conceived to be uninhabitable, in regard of the great heats thereof. But late discoveries and navigations have found the contrary, the Country proving in most parts to be well inhabited, and the coolness of the nights, by mists, dew, and gentle gales of wind, to mitigate the heat of the day.

Quodque die Solis vehementer exarduit æstus, Humida nos reficit, paribique refrigerat horis.

That is to say,

What the Sun burns by day, the Night renews,
And doth as much refresh with moistning Dews.

For notwithstanding that it be in some places full of sandy deserts, a disease incident to some parts of Arabia, Pæstia, and other Countries of a more Northerly situation; yet it is said by some, who speak it upon knowledge, that the greater part of those Regions which lie under the Life, or near it, (both in America, and here) have so many goodly Fountains, Rivers, and little Brooks, such abundance of Cedars, and other stately Trees of shade, so many sorts of delicate Fruits ever bearing, and at all times decked with blossoms; as may make them hold comparison with any others, supposed to be of a more temperate situation.

But as was said before, the Ancients knew not much of this Country, and therefore spoke upon conjecture, or more doubtful hear-say. For though Humo a noble Carthaginian employed by that State, discovered much of the Western Shores of this great Peninsula, yet he ventured not so much into the Land: nor did his Journal (either suppressed by the Romans, or not much took notice of) give any great light to other Nations to pursue those Voyages; being writ in the Carthaginian Tongue, but since translated into Greek, and published at Basil by Siegmund Gelenius, Anno 1533. As little credit did it find in former times, that some Phœnicians in the days of Pharao Necho, passing down the Red-Sea, should sail about the Coasts of Africa to the Straits of Gibraltar, and to return again to Egypt by the Mediterranean; as we find in Herodotus, that they did. But what those Ages disbelieved or deemed impossible, is now grown ordinary, the Circumnavigations about this Country being very frequent, since first performed by Vasquez de Gama, an adventurous Portugal, in the year 1647, being 80 years after, or thereabout, from the time that the Portugals first attempted the discovery and circumnavigation of the Coasts of Africa, which at the last, to the no small glory of their Nation, was accomplished by them. For so it happened, that having extended their dominions as far as they could upon the Continent of Spain; and having withal a large Sea-coast, and fit for Shipping, they turned their Forces on the Moors which dwelt in Africa, from whom they took many of their best towns which lay along upon the Shores of the main Atlantic. Encouraged by this good success, Henry Duke of Viseu, one of the younger Sons of King John the first, resolved to spend his purse and credit upon new discoveries. And to that purpose, having had some conference with some persons of knowledge and experience in Cosmography, he drew together the best men of Action, both in Spain and Italy. By their means, and his own good fortune, he first discovers the Isle of Madaga, Anno 1420. The Isle of Holy Pet, Anno 1428. The Islands of Cape Verde, Anno 1440. the Maritime parts of the Land of Guinea, Anno 1452, which fair foundations being laid, and the way opened to those great discoveries which after followed; that glorious Prince deceased in a good old age, Anno 1463, leaving this Character behind him, that he was the first that made the Portugals in love with the Sea; discontinued after his decease above 20 years, it was resumed again by King John, the second of that name, who by the conduct of Diogo Con, Anno 1486, discovered the Realms of Angola and Congo, with the Isle of St. George, and thereupon resolves in the next year following, to try his fortunes for conquering the whole Coast of Africa, thereby to find a way to the wealth of India, in which he employed Captain Bartholomew Diaz, who passing beyond Cape Verde, discovered first the Princeps Island, and sailing from thence Southward to the furthest Promontory (since called the Cape of good Hope) returned home again: either discouraged by crofs Winds, or unready Seas, or the untractableness of his Mariners, or by all together. The man to who the honour of this Enterprize was reserved, was that Vasquez de Gama above mentioned, employed in this service by King Emanuel, Anno 1597, who having in his voyage discovered the Islands of St. James, and St. Helen, and after doubled that terrible Cape, which Bartholomew Diaz durst not pass, gave it the name of Cabo di Buena Esperanza, or the Cape of good Hope, because of the good hope it gave him of finding the desired way to the good Trade of India; and having so doubled this Cape, and after Africa on the left hand of him, he kept his course on towards the North, till he discovered the Countreys of the Quiloas, Mombaza, and Melinde, with the King of which last he contracted an especial friendship, by his favours and directions, found the Port of Calicut in East-India, from whence with infinite joy and due honour he returned to Lisbon, Anno 1500. The design followed followed the next year by Alvarez Capralde, furnished with 12 ships, 1500 Souldiers, but he being cutt upon the Coasts of Brasil, and diverting wholly in a manner on the discovery of that large Countrey, it was pursued the next year with greater strength, by Vasquez, and his Brother Stephen, afterwards by Ferdinand de Olmeda, and Alphonso Albuquerque, and divers others of that Nation, and finally by the English, Hollanders, Merchants almost of every Country, which have any Trade upon the Ocean. By means whereof the latter Ages are better instructed in the particulars of it than the former were; who knew not much beyond the limits of the Roman Empire, and some parts adjoining upon Egypt, more than the strange beasts and more strange reports which they had from hence; occasioning hereby the By-word, Africa semper aliquid apertat novi.

Touching the state of Christianity in this great Continent, it is very weak; most of those Regions which Christian Religion had once gained from Idolatry, Mahometanism having since regained from Christianity: inasmuch that not only the North part of Africa, near the Mediterranean, from Spain to Egypt, where the Gospel once so exceedingly flourished, that three hundred Catholic Bishops were at one time banished thence by Gensericus King of the Fandals; as at this present utterly void of Christianity, (except some few Towns belonging to the King of Spain); but even in all this vast Country, thrice as big as Europe, there is not any one Region entirely Christian, but the Kingdom of Habshia only, and perhaps not that, nor where the Christians are intermingled with Mahometans, but only Egypt; nor where mingled with Idolaters, but in Congo and Angola, and some few Towns upon those Coasts in the hands of the Portugals. So little benefit have those Nations gotten by our late discoveries; it being Gain, not Godliness, which the Merchant aims at.

The Nations inhabiting this Country, or dispersed in it, may be reduced to Africans properly so called, Egyptians, Habshians, Arabians, Jews, and some European Christians only in their Forts and Garrisons; the Jews in all the good Towns where Trading is stirring; the Arabians chiefly on the Sea-Coasts bordering on the Red-Sea; but wandering in great hords or companies all about the Country with their Wives and Children: the Habshians and Egyptians in their several Kingdoms: The Africans again subdivided into Moors and Cafers; of which the Moors are wholly under the Law of Mahomet, the Cafers dwelling in the in-land and more Southern parts, nor discovered anciently in their wonted Gentility. Accordingly, the Languages herein spoken are different also; The Portugal or Spanish being used by the Europeans; 2. The Chaldean or Syriack by the Jews; 3. The Arabic, by those of that Nation, and in all Barbary except Morocco only; 4. The Habshian, and 5. the Egyptian in those Kingdoms: 6. That called Aguel-amari, or the Noble Language, supposed to be the natural and original language of the Roman Africans, intermixt with some Arabian words, and spoken generally in Morocco, and so amongst some of the Inhabitants of Barbary, nearest to Mount Atlas: 7. That named Sungul, used in Tombutu, Guinea, and others of the people of the Land of Negroes; and 8. That called Gubco, spoken by those of Æthiopia inferior, and such of the Land of Negroes as lie next unto it.

In reference to the state of the Roman Empire, it contained only the Dioceses of Egypt, Africa, and part of the Dioceses of Spain. The Dioceses of Egypt subdivided into the Provinces of, 1. Libya superior, 2. Libya inferior, 3. Thebais, 4. Aegyptiaca, 5. Aradia, and 6. Egyptus, especially so called, distinguished by other names in the Nicens Council: That of 1. Africa, Tripolitana, 2. By- zacena, 3. Zengitana, 4. Numidia, 5. Mauritania Cesariensis, 6. and Mauritania Sitifensis; the other part of Mauritania, called Tingitana, being laid to the Dioceses of Spain. The rest of this Peninsula, as they never conquered, so it never was much taken into consideration. But being more perfectly discovered now than in former times (though not so perfectly, as that I can be able to promise an exact account of it; it is divided commonly into these seven parts. 1. Egypt, 2. Barbary, or the Roman Africa, 3. Numidia, 4. Libya, neither of which the same with those of the ancient Romans; 5. Terra Nigritarum, 6. Æthiopia superior, and 7. Æthiopia inferior. Such of the Islands as do not properly belong unto any of these, shall make up the eighth. In the descriptions whereof we will follow the Method of Plamations, and begin with Egypt, as being peopled and possessed before all the residue.

OF EGYPT.

EGYPT is bounded on the East with Idumæa, and the Bay of Arabia; on the West with Barbary, Numidia, and part of Libya; on the North with the Mediterranean Sea; on the South with Æthiopia superior, or the Habshian Empire.

This Country in the Holy Scripture is called Misraim, from Misraim the Son of Chus, and Grandson of Cham, by whom first planted after the Flood, the Footsteps of which name do remain among the Arabians, who still call it Misra. Named in the fame regard in the Book of Psalms, the Land of Hem: a name retained in the name of the sacred Offices of the old Egyptians, where (as Plutarch witnesseth) it was called Chemia, for Chamia no doubt; as that from Cham or Ham, the first flock of their Nation. In prophane Authors it hath had the several names of 1. Aria, from the fertility of the Air, which is never clouded; 2. Potamia, from the propinquity of the Sea, washing two sides of it; 3. Oggia, from Oggys, a supposed King thereof; 4. Metamopods, from the black colour of the soil; 5. Osiria, from their God Osiris, here in high esteem; 6. and finally, it was called Egyptus, which in the end prevailed over all the rest, either from Egyptus the Brother of Danais once King thereof (in the stories of this Nation better known by the name of Ramses) or from Egyptus, the old name of the River Nilus, by whose annual over-flowings made both rich and famous; and of the soil and rubbish which that River brought with it from the higher Countreys; it was by some supposed to have been raised into firm land, and gained out of the Sea. Called therefore in some Writers by the name of Nili domus, or the gift of Nilus. Yet some there be, who would have it called Egyptus for Aegyphus, and that derived from Al Coptus, which signifieth the Land or Countrey of Coptus, that being supposed to have been anciently the chief City of it. And some again will have the name derived from Chibth, by which the Egyptians call themselves to this very day.

It containeth in length from the Mediterranean to the City of Aisra, or Syene, bordering on Æthiopia, 562 Italian Miles: in breadth (exclusively of Cyrene and Libya) from Rosetta unto Damietta, or from the most Westerly branch of Nilus to the farthest East, 160 of the same miles; to which the adding of those two Provinces makes a great accession: situate under the second and fifth Climates, so that the longest day in Summer is but 13 hours and an half.

By reason of this Southerly situation of it, the Air is here very hot and offensive, so that to avoid the insupportable heats thereof, and to have the benefit of some fresh wind, the inhabitants are accustomed to build high Towers ers in all their Towns, on which they use to solace and refresh themselves. The soil made fruitful by the overflowing of Nile (whereof more anon) is so exceeding plentiful of all sorts of Grain, that it was called Horreum Populi Romani, the Granary or Store-house of the People of Rome: which City it did annually furnish with four months provision, inasmuch that it was said by Pliny, that the greatness of the Roman Empire could not long continue without the Corn and Wealth of Egypt, the plenty or famine of that City depending wholly on this Country. It abounds also with rich Pastures, in which they feed great flocks of Camels, Horses, Asses, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats, greater of growth than usually in the places else, and by reason of the moonlightness of the Country, they have great flocks of Fowls. Of Poultry they have also good numbers about their houses, hatched in a different manner from all other Countries, not by the fitting of the Hen, but by the heat of Furnaces or Ovens; in which their Eggs are orderly laid in dung, and by a gentle heat brought to animation. It is also liberally furnished with great plenty of Metals, some precious Stones, good Wines, and the choicest Fruits, as Limons, Oranges, Pomgranates, Citrons, Figs, Cherries, and such as these, excellent both for taste, and colour. Of Palm-trees also great abundance; of which though we have spoke before, yet we shall here more fully declare the nature and strange properties of them. They grow in couples, Male and Female, both thrust forth Cods full of Seed, but the Female is only fruitful, and that not, except growing by the Male, and having his Seeds mixt with hers. The pith of these Trees is an excellent Salad, better than an Artichoke, which in taste it very much resembleth. Of the branches they make Bed-reds, Lattices, &c. of the leaves, Baskets, Mats, Pans, &c. of the outward husks of the Cod, Cordage; of the inner, Bristles. The Fruit it bears best, known by the name of Dates, are in taste like Figs; and finally, it is said to yield whatsoever is necessary to the life of Man. It is the nature of this Tree, though never so ponderous a weight were put upon it, not to yield to the burthen, but still to resist the heaviness of it, and to endeavour to lift and raise it self the more upwards. For this cause planted in Church-yards in the Eastern Countries, as an Emblem of the Resurrection: in field whereof we use the Eve-tree in these cold Regions. For the same reason given to Conquerors as a token of Victory, it being the Emblem or Hieroglyphick of a Soldier's life. Hence signifiatively used for Precedency, as Hic equidem confilio Palmam do, in Tertius; sometimes for the victory it self, as Non astant vamen hanc Palmam, in Pliny; & Plurimum Palmam homo, for a man that had won many Prizes in the Pence-School, as in Tully pro Roscio: more naturally for the sign of Victory, as in that of Hætzæ:

—Palmæ nobilis
Terrarum Dominos exivit ad Deos.

That is to say,

The Palm, of Victory a sign.
Equals men to the Powers Divine.

The People, though the Country lie in the flame Climate with Barbary, are not black, but tawny, or Olive-coloured, affirmed by Pomponius Mela to weep and mourn over the bodies of their dead, daubed over with dung: to have held it a great impiety to burn or bury them, but having imbalanced them, to lay them in some inward Room of their Houses: the men to keep themselves at home, for the household-business, the women to follow Merchandise and affairs abroad; the men to carry burthens upon their heads, and the women theirs upon their shoulders; Antipodes in these last to most other Nations. But certainly they were a witty and ingenious people, the first Inventors of Geometry, Aritmeticke, Physick, as also of Astronomy, Necromancy, and Sorcery. They first taught the use of Letters to the neighbouring Phœnicians, by them imparted to the Greeks. Accustomed at the first to express their conceits in the shape of Birds, Beasts, Trees, &c. which they termed Hieroglyphick; of which two or three Examples out of Orus will not be impertinent. For Eternity they painted the Sun and Moon, as things which they believed to have had no beginning, nor were likely to have any end: For a Year, they painted a Snake, with his tail in his mouth, to shew how one year succeeding another, kept the world still in an endless circle. For a Month, they painted a Palm-tree, because at every new Moon it feth forth a new branch. For God, they painted a Falcon; as well for that he soareth so high, as that he governeth the lesser Birds. For Integrity of life, they painted Fire and Water, both because these Elements are in themselves most pure, and because all other things are purified by them. For any thing that was Abominable to the Gods, they painted a Fish, because in their Sacrifices the Priests never used them; and the like. From this manner of expressing ones self, the invention of Letters is thought to have had its original (though learnt by them no question of the children of Israhel, whom they lived amongst them;) the History whereof take briefly, and word for word, out of Tacitus. Primi per formam animarum Ægyptii, &c. "The Ægyptians first of all expressed the conceptions of the mind, by the shapes of Beasts; and the most ancient Monuments of man's memory, are seen graven in stones; and they say, that they are the first inventors of Letters. Then the Phœnicians, because they were strong at Sea, brought them into Greece; and so they had the glory of that which they received from others: For there goeth a report, that Cadmus sailing thither in a Phœnician Ship, was the Inventor of that Art among the Greeks, when they were yet unexpert and rude. Some report, that Croesus the Albionian, or Livian the Theban, and Palamides the Greecian, did find out sixteen Characters at the time of the Trojan War; and that afterward Simonides added the rest. But in Italy the Etrurian learned them of Damaratus the Carinthian; and the Aborigine of Eubœa the Arcadian. So far Tacitus. That the Phœnicians were the first Inventors of Letters, I dare not affirm; and as backward am I to refer the glory heretofore to the Ægyptians; for certainly the Hebrews were herein skilled before either: yet that the Phœnicians were herein School-masters to the Greeks, I think I may with safety maintain, having Lucan in consent with Tacitus.

Phœnices primi (fame fiderunt) ansæ

Phœnicians first (if fame may credit, have)
Dar'd in rude Characters our words engrave.

Of this mind also is Isidore of Sevil, in the first Book of Originationes, who also addeth, that for that cause the Fronts of Books, and the Titles of Chapters were written in red Letters, as it is by some still in use. Hinc et quid & Phœnicio colore librorum capita describuntur, quia ab israël littere initium habuerunt, cap. 3. As for the less vulgar Letters, which the Latines call Cyphre, and whereof every exercised States-man hath peculiar to himself; they were first invented by Julius Cæsar, when he first began to think of the Roman Monarchy, and were used by him in his his Letters to his more private and tried Friends, that if by misfortune they should be intercepted, the contents of them should not be understood. Imas Ægyptus nris nostris et zaphodis. Ne ulla litterarum lectio cuius esset. Augustus, one of the greatest Politicians of the World, had another kind of obscure writing, for in his Letters of more frequency and importance, he always used zō derogari ad magis, to put the Letter immediately following in the order of the Alphabet, for that which in ordinary writing he should have used. As for Brachygraphy, or the Art of Writing by short Characters, so useful for the taking of a Speech or Sermon as it is spoken: I find in Dion, that Mæcenus, that great Favourite of Augustus Cæsar, and patron of Learning, did first invent them: ad celebratam scribendi, for the speedier dispatch of Writing; zō æser zō zaphodis zaphodis zaphodis zaphodis (they are the very words of my Author) æser zō zō zō. Isidor in the second Chapter of this Book above mentioned, ascribeth it to Aquila, the Libertus or Freed-man of his Mæcenus; and to Tortius Persianus, and Phalaris, who added to this Invention. Yet had all they their chief light in it from Tullius Tiro, a Freed-man of Cicero's, who had undertaken and compassed it in the Prepositions, but went no further. At the last it was perfected by Seneca, who brought this Art into order and method; the whole Volume of his contractions consisting of 5000 words. Deinde Seneca contrahit multum diglossæ et alia numero, opus efficit in quinque milia.

So eminent in Arts and Learning were the old Ægyptians, that from them Pythagoras and Democritus learnt their Philosophy; Lycurgus, Solon, and Plato, their forms of Government; Orpheus and Homer, their Poetical fictions of the Gods. Particularly here flourished 1. Arystarchus, the famous and learned Grammarian; 2. Herodian, a diligent Student and Searcher into curious Arts; 3. Ammonius, the Master of Plotinus; 4. Didymus, surnamed Calceutæ, for his indetergible Industry in several Sciences; 5. Mureton, an old Historian, of whom we have nothing but some fragments; 6. Appianus, an Historian of a later date, whose works are extant; 7. Didymus the Grammarian; 8. Cl. Ptolemaeus the Geographer; 9. Achilles Statius the Poet; 10. And before all, the profound Philosopher Mercurius, surnamed Trismegistus. And after their Conversion to the Faith of Christ, 1. Panteus, the first Reader of Divinity in the Schools of Alexandria; 2. Origen, and 3. Glemon Alexandrinus, both skilled in the Universality of Learnings; 4. Dionysius; 5. Athanasius, and 6. Cyril, all three Bishops of Alexandria, and the glories of their several times.

This notwithstanding, their Religion before the embracing of Christianity, was the worst of Gentilisms; these people not only worshipped the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven, Creatures of greatest Use and Glory; nor only sacrificing to Jupiter, Hercules, Apollo, and the rest of the Gods, (many of whom were Authors in their several times of some publick benefit to mankind) as did other Gentiles; but attributing Divine honours to Crocodiles, Snakes, Serpents, Garlick, Leeks, and Onions. For which, as worthily condemned by the Christian Fathers, so most deservedly exposed unto publick scorn, by the Pens of the Poets.

Porræ & cape nefas violare, & ledere morsus;
Felicem populi, quibus hæc nascitur in Hortis
Nemina! — Quis necesse quædam demens
Ægypti portenta colat, &c.

Which may be rendered to this purpose:

To bite an Onion or a Leek, is more Than deadly sin. The Numen they adore
Grows in their Gardens. And who dares not know What monstrous Shapes for Gods in Egypt are?

But the Gods most esteemed by them, and by all sorts of the Ægyptians the most adored, was Apis, a coal-black Ox, with a white star in his forehead, the Effigies of an Eagle on his back, and two hairs only in his tail. But it seemeth his Godship was not too much respected by strangers. For Cambyses when he conquered Egypt, ran him with his sword through the Thigh, and cauled all his Priests to be scourged. And Augustus being here, would not vouchsafe to see him, saying, Dei ad hæc hæc ægyptiæ ægyptiæ, that the Gods, and not the Oxen of Egypt were the object of his Devotions. A speech most truly worthy to brave an Emperour.

But it is time we should proceed to a survey of these Ægyptians, as they stand at the present, much differing from the ingenuity and abilities of their Predecessors; nothing but Ignorance and Barbarism to be found amongst them. For such as have observed the nature of the Modern Ægyptians, affirm them to have much degenerated from the worth of their Ancestors; prone to Innovations, devoted to Luxury, cowardly, cruel, addicted naturally to cavil, and to detract from whatsoever is good and eminent. In their dealing with other men, more obtrusive than faithful, of a wit much inclining to craftiness, and very eager on their Profit. Of person, of a mean stature, tawny of complexion, and spare of body, but active and quick of foot. Such as inhabit in the Cities, apply themselves to Merchandise, grow rich by trading, reasonably well habited, and not much differing from the Turks in dress and fashion. Those in the Country, who betake themselves to Husbandry, affirmed to be a savage and nasty people, cruelted over with Dirt, and stinking of smocks; fit company for none but those of their own condition. Nothing now left amongst them of the Arts of their Ancestors, but an affliction which they have unto Divination; to Fortune-telling great pretenders; by which, and some cheating tricks in which very well practised, great numbers of them wander from one place to another, and to get their livelihood; occasioning the Vagabonds and Stragglers of other Nations, who pretend unto the same false Arts, to assume their names. The whole body of the Inhabitants now an Hodder or Medley of many Nations, Moor, Arabians, Turks, the natural Egyptian making up the least part of the reckoning.

The Women of the same complexion with the men, but well formed and featured, did not they too much affect a seeming Corpulency; which if they cannot get in Flesh, they will have in Cloaths. Very fruitful in Child-bearing, and quick of dispatch when they are in labour: some of them having three or four children at a Birth; those that are born in the eighth month living to good Age and not in danger of death, as in other Countries. Such of them as dwell in Cities cover their faces with black Cyprosi bespotted with red; their arms and ankles garnished with bracelets and hoops of Gold, Silver, or some other Metal. Those in the Country for a Vail, use some dirty cloth, having holes only for their eyes, which little is too much to face and abstain from loathing. Both in the City and the Country, contrary to the custom in all places else, the Women use to make water standing, and the men crouching on their knees.

The Christian Faith was here first planted by S. Mark, whom all Antiquity maketh the first Bishop of Alexandria. His

His Successors, till the time of Heracles and Dionysius, chosen continually out of the Presbytery or Cathedral-Clergy; afterwards out of the Clergy at large. Their Jurisdiction settled by a Canon of the Council at Nice, over all the Churches in the whole Dioecesis of Egypt, (taking the word Dioecesis in the civil notion) containing Livya, Pentapolis, and Egypt specially so called; to which, though Epiphanius adds Thebais, Maritima and Ammonica, yet he adds nothing in effect; Thebais and Maritima being parts of Egypt, as Ammonica was of Livya. Afterwards the Asiopian or Abissine Churches became subject to this Patriarch also, and do acknowledge to this day some relation to him. By the coming in of the Saracens, and the subjugation of this Country, Christianity fell here into great decay; languishing so sensibly into those times, especially since the Conquest of it by the Turks: that whereas Borhardus in his time reckoned three hundred thousand Christians; in the last estimate which was made of them, they were found to be fifty thousand. This small remainder of them, commonly called Copti, either from the Greek word κοπτο Scindo, because they retained the use of Circumcision with their Christianity; or from Coptus, a chief Town in Egypt, in which many of them did reside; or finally by Abbreviation from Aegypti, corrupted from Aegypti, their own National name. They are all Jacobites in Sect, from whom they differ notwithstanding in some particulars; in some from all Christian Churches, in many from the Church of Rome. The points most proper to them, 1. Using Circumcision with their Baptism, but rather as a National than Religious custom; though in that sense also laid aside, as is said by some, by the persuasion of some Legates from the Pope of Rome, in a Synod held in Cairo, Anno 1583. 2ly. Conferring all sacred Orders under the Priesthood on Infants immediately after Baptism; their Parents, till they come to sixteen years of age, performing what they promised in their behalf, viz. Charity, fasting on Wednesday and Friday, and four Lenten of the year. 3ly. Reputing Baptism not to be of any efficacy, except ministered by the Priest, in the open Church, in what extremity soever. 4ly. And not baptizing any Children till the fortieth day, though they die in the interim. 5ly. Giving to Infants the Sacrament of the Eucharist, as soon as Christened. 6ly. Contracting Marriages even in the second degree of Consanguinity, without dispensation. 7ly. Observing not the Lords day, nor any of the Festivals, except only in Cities. 8ly. And in their Liturgies, reading the Gospel written by Nicodemus. The points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome. 1. Administering the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper under both kinds. 2ly. Administering in leavened bread. 3ly. Admitting neither Extreme Unction, nor the use of the Eucharist, to those that are sick. 4ly. Nor Purgatory, nor Prayer for the dead; 5ly. Nor using Elevation in the act of Administering; and 6ly. Reckoning the Roman Church for Heretical, and esteeming no better of the Latine, than they do of the Jews. In these Opinions they continue hitherto against all Opponents and persuasions. For though Baronius in the end of the sixth Tome of his Annals, hath registered an Ambassage from Marcus, the then Patriarch of Alexandria, to Pope Clement the 8. wherein he is said to have submitted himself and the Churches of Egypt to the Pope of Rome; yet upon further search made, it was found but a Cheat, devised to hold up the reputation of a sinking cause. The Patriarch of Alexandria still adhereth to his own Authority; though many of late, by the practice and solicitation of some baser Friars, have been drawn to be of the Religion of the Church of Rome; and to use her Liturgies.

Among the Rarities of this Country, some were the works of Nature, and some of industry and magnificence.

Of this last kind I reckon the Labyrinth, the Pyramids, and the Pharos; all of them admirable in their several kinds, the envy of the Ages past, and the astonishment of the present. Look we first on the Pyramids, many in number, three more celebrated, and one the principal of all; situate on the South of the City of Memphis, and on the Western banks of Nilus. This last, the chief of the Worlds seven wonders, square at the bottom, is supposed to take up eight Acres of ground. Every square 300 single Paces in length, ascended by 255 steps, each step above three foot high; and a breadth proportionable; growing by degrees narrower and narrower till we come to the top, and at the top consisting but of three Stones only, yet large enough for 60 men to stand upon. No Stone so little in the whole as to be drawn by any of our Carriages, yet brought thither from the Arabian Mountains. How brought, and by what Engine mounted, is an equal wonder. Built for the Sepulchre of Cheops, an Egyptian King (as were the rest for others of those mighty Princes) who employed in it day by day twenty years together, no fewer than 360000 men continually working on it. The charges which they put him to, in no other food than Garlick, Radishes, and Onions, being computed at a thousand and eight hundred Talents. The next to this in bulk and beauty, is said to be the work of a Daughter of Cheops, enabled (as Herodotus writeth) both to finish her Fathers undertaking, and raise her own unto the height, by the prostitution of her body, requiring but one stone towards the Work from each one of her Customers, though the Tale unlikely. Nor is it of a greater truth, though affirmed by Josaphus, and supported by many good Divines, that the Drudgery put upon the Israelites did contain these Pyramids: the Materials of these works being Stone, by their employment Bricks. But past all doubt, advanced by those confederate Princes upon good advice, and not for ostentation only of their power and glories. For by this means they did not only preserve their memory to succeeding Ages, but for the present kept the Subject from sloth and idleness; who being a people prone unto Innovations, were otherwise like enough to have fed that sin in the change of Government, if not thus prudently diverted.

As for the Labyrinth, it was built by Pfaminetus on the banks of the River Nilus, situate on the South of the Pyramids, and North of Asiut, or the City of Cusae. It contained within the compass of one continued Wall a thousand Houses, and twelve Royal Palaces, all covered with Marble; and had only one entrance, but innumerable turnings and returnings, sometimes one over another; and all in a manner invisible to such as were not acquainted with them: the building more under ground than above: the Marble stones laid with such Art, that neither Wood nor Cement was employed in any part of the Fabric; the Chambers so disposed, that the doors upon their opening, did give a report no less terrible than a crack of Thunder. The main entrance all of white Marble, adorned with stately Columns, and most curious of Scenery. The end at length being attained, a pair of Steps of 90 Steps conducted into a gallant Portico, supported with Pillars of Theban stone, which was the entrance into a spacious Hall, (the place of their general Conventions) all of polished Marble, set out with the Statues of their Gods. A work which afterwards was imitated by Dadalus, in the Cretan Labyrinths; though that fell as fast from the glories of this, as Minus was inferior unto Pfaminetus in Power and Riches.

Next unto this, I place the Isle and Tower of Pharos, the Island opposite unto Alexandria, once a mile distant from the Land, but joined to the Continent by Cleopatra on this occasion. The Rhodians, then Lords of the Sea,

Sea, used to exact some tribute or acknowledgment out of every Island within those Seas, and consequently out of this. Their Ambassadors sent unto Cleopatra to demand this Tribute, she detained with her seven days, under colour of celebrating some solemn Festivals; and in the mean time, by making huge dams and banks in the Sea, with incredible both charge and speed; united the Island to the shore; which finished, she sent the Rhodians away empty-handed, with this witty Jeer, telling them, That they were to take Toll of the Islands, and not of the Continent. A Work of great Rarity and Magnificence, both for the bigness of it, taking up seven furlongs of Ground, and for that cause called Heptastadium; and that incredible speed wherewith it was finished. As for the Watch-Tower, called in Greek and Latine Pharos, by the name of the Island; it was built by Ptolomy Philadelphus, for the benefit of Sailors, (the Seas upon that coast being very unsafe, and full of Flats) to guide them over the Bar of Alexandria. Deliberately ordered another of the Worlds seven Wonders: the other five being, 1. the Mausoleum, 2. the Temple of Ephefus, 3. the Walls of Babylon, 4. the Colossus of Rhodes, and 5. the Statue of Jupiter Olympius. This Watch-Tower, or Pharos was of wonderful height, ascended by degrees, and having many Lanthorns at the top, wherein Lights burned nightly, as a direction to such as sailed by Sea. The Materials were white Marble; the chief Architects, Sotratrus of Gnidos, who engraved on the Work this Inscription: Sotratrus of Gnidos, the Son of Dexiphanes, to the Gods Protectors, for the Safeguard of Sailors. This Inscription he covered with Plaster, and thereon engraved the Name and Title of the King, the Founder: to the end that the Kings Name being so wasted and washed away, his own, which was written in Marble, might be eternized to posterity as the Founder of it. Nigh unto this Pharos, Cesar pursuing Pompey into Egypt, and having discontented the King thereof, by demanding pay for his Soldiers, had his Navy which here lay at Anchor, assailed by Achilles, one of young Ptolomy Servants, Cesar himself being then in Alexandria. Hearing of the Skirmish, he hastened to the Pharos, meaning to succour his Navy in person; but the Egyptians making towards him on all sides, he was compelled to leap into the Sea, and swim for his life. And though (to avoid their Darts) he sometimes ducked, yet held he still his left hand above the water, and in it divers Books, which he carried fate unto his Ships, and animating his men, got the Victory. It is said that Egypt hath only two doors; the one by Land, which is the strong Tower of Pelegium, or Damiata; the other by water, which is this Pharos: Tota Egyptus maritimo accessu, Pharos pedestre vero, Pelusio, velut clausura maris existimatur, saith Opian.

Amongst the Rarities of Nature, we may reckon those strange Beasts and Fishes, proper almost unto this Country, i. e. the Crocodile, the Ichneumon, the Hippopotamus (or Sea-horse) the Bis, the Ape, and many several sorts of Serpents. To speak of which particularly were a Work more proper to a Natural History, than a Geographical. And yet the Crocodile, more proper unto Egypt than all the rest, cannot be parted with in silence: A Creature of a strange nature, hatched of an Egg no bigger than that of a Turkey, and increasing to the length of thirty foot; his tail as long as all the rest of his Body, with which he is accustomed to inchain his prey, and draw it into the River; his Feet armed with Claws, and his Back with impenetrable Scales; his Mouth so wide (of which he moveth only the upper Jaw) that he is able to swallow a Heifer; equally used to both Elements, but better fitted in the Water, than on the Land; Cowardly, though a Creature of prey, and such as usually flies from those which dare set upon him; and easily vanquished by the Dolphin, who swimming under the water woundeth him in the belly, where affailable only. Whether so easily destroyed by the Ichneumon (a kind of Water-Rat) skipping upon his mouth, and gnawing his way out again, as old Writers say, hath of late been questioned.

Of less dispute, but not less Rarity in Nature, are these that follow: 1. That in all this Country it never raineth; or if a Cloud do sometimes happen to dissolve upon them, it bringeth on their Bodies innumerable Sores, and strange Diseases. 2. The annual overflowing of the River Nilus, and the many memorable times which are said to follow on the same. Of which it is thus said by Lucan;

Terra suis contenta bonis, non indiga Mercis, Aut Jovis; in solo tanta est fiducia Nilo:

*The Earth content with its own Wealth, doth crave
No Foreign Mart, nor Jove himself; they have Their hope alone in Nilus fruitful Wave.*

This Nilus from the 15 day of June, swelleth above his Banks, for the space of 40 days; and in as many more, gathereth his waters again to their proper bounds. If it flow not to the height of fifteen Cubits, then the Earth is deficient in her abundance of increase, for want of moisture; and if the waters surmount the superficies of the Earth, more than seventeen Cubits, then like a drunken man, it cannot produce its natural operation, as having his stomach (as it were) overlaid and furcharged with too much Liquor: but if the Mean be granted, there is no Country which can brag of the like Fertility; the Corn being all housed before the 20th of May. During this Inundation, they keep their Beasts and Cattle on the tops of such little hills, which either the Providence of Nature, or the Industry of Man, hath prepared for them; where they abide till the decrease of the Waters; and on these Hills also stand most of their Towns and Villages, appearing in the time of the Flood like so many Islands; and holding a Commerce and continual Traffic by the intercourse of Boats and Shallops, by which they do transport their Marketable Commodities from one place to another. And if it chance at any time, that the River doth not thus overflow the Country, it is not only the fore-runner to a following dearth, but prognosticeth some ensuing mischief to the Prince and State: Confirmed by the testimony of good and credible Authors, who have told us that in the 10th and 11th years of Cleopatra, the River increased not at all; that it was noted as a Fore-teller of the Fall of those two Great, but Unfortunate Princes, Cleopatra and her Sweet-heart Antonius. A second Commodity which ariseth from the overflows of Nilus, is health, which it bringeth with it in most parts of the Country; the Plague, which oftentimes miserably rageth upon the first day of the Flood, abating instantly; inasmuch that whereas 500 may die of that Disease in the City of Cairo but the day before, there dieth not one of it on the day following. A third wonder in this River is, that keeping its waters united in a Body together, after it falleth into the Sea, it changeth the colour of the Mediterranean, further than any part of it can be seen from the shore. Add unto these, the many living Creatures which the flume thereof engendreth, on the withdrawing of the River to its natural Channel: whereof Onid thus;

Nilus, & antiquo sua flumina reddit altis;
Plurima Cultures versis Animalia glebis Inveniant.*

Which I English thus:

*So when the Seven-month Nile the fields forsakes,
And to his ancient Channel him betakes;
The Plague-men many living Creatures find,
By turning up the Mud that's left behind.*

Amongst which Creatures so engendered, are said to be such innumerable heaps of Frogs, that if Nature, or Divine Providence rather, did not furnish this Country with a proportionable number of Storks, by whom they are greedily devoured, the Plague of Frogs would come a second time upon them to their utter destruction.

On the Banks of this River also grew those fadgy Woods called Papyrus, of which Paper was made in former times, which Treckon amongst the Rarities of Egypt also, but a Rarity of Art and Nature mixed. They divided it into thin flakes, (into which it naturally parteth) then laying them on a Table, and moistening them with the glutinous waters of the River, they pressed them together, and after dried them in the Sun. By means of which invention, Books being easier to be transcribed and reserved than formerly, Ptolemy Philadelphus made his excellent Library at Alexandria; and understanding how Attalus King of Pergamus, by the benefit of this Egyptian Paper, arrived to carrying him in that kind of Magnificence, prohibited the export of it out of Egypt. Herupon Attalus invented the use of Parchments, made of the Skins of Calves and Sheep; from the materials called Membrane, and Pergamentum from the place where they were invented. The convenience whereof was the cause, that in short time the Egyptian Paper was worn out of use; in place whereof succeeded our Paper made of Rags; the Authors of which excellent Invention, our Progenitors have forgotten to commit to memory. Before the use of these Papers and Parchments were first made known, I observe three ways of Writing amongst the Ancients: 1. I hope I shall be pardoned this brief digression. 1. On the inward side of the Bark of a Tree, which is in Latine called Libri, and whence Books have the name of Libri. 2. On Tables framed out of the main body of a Tree, which being called Candex, gave the Latins occasion to call a Book Codex. 3. They used to cover their Tables over with Wax; and thereon to write what they listed to signify; from whence a Letter-carrier was named Tabulatorius. The Invention wherewith they wrote, was a sharp pointed Iron, which they called Stylus; a word now signifying (the Original derived from hence) the peculiar kind of Purpura which any man uses as Negligent Stylus, in Quintilian; and Exortatus Stylus, in Cicero. I should have also noted, that they used sometimes to write in Leaves; That the Sibyls Oracles being so written and scattered abroad, had the name of Sibyllæ Folia; and that from thence we have the phrase of a Leaf of Paper. But of this Argument enough.

Now to these Rarities of Nature, and Magnificent Industry, most of them near the River Nile, or relating to it, we are to add another far greater moment, and such as yields fecundity to be supernatural, which is that above five miles from the City of Cairo, there is a place, in which, on every Good Friday yearly, there appear the Heads, Legs, and Arms of Men rising out of the Ground, to a very great number: which if any man draw near unto them, or touch any of them, will shrink again into the Earth. Supposed by some to be an Imposture of some Water-Monks only to tickle them over-night in the Sands, and keeping them secret to themselves, obtain thereby the ferrying over of many thousands of people to thence the night. But Stephen Duplex, a sober and discerning man in the opinion of Gonsartius, who reports it from him, conceived otherwise of it: affirming soberly that he was an Eye-witness of the wonder, that he had touched divers of these rising Members; and that (as he was once so doing to the head of a Child) a man of Cairo cried out unto him Kali, Kali, ante materaledi; that is to say Hold, hold, you know not what you do. A strange Forewarning (I fit but of undoubted credit) of the Resurrection of the whole Body, presented yearly, in the Rising of these several parts.

Having thus done with the Rarities concerning Nilus and that great increase of wealth which accrued thereby to all the Country, in the improvement of the natural commodities of the Earth: let us next look on the Red-Sea, and the Riches which that brought unto this Kingdom, in the way of Trading. A Sea whereof we have spoken already, as to the reason of the name, the extent thereof, and the several Islands contained in it, and therefore shall not need to repeat it here. That which is proper to this Country, and to this alone, is the fame it hath for the miraculous passage of the Isopeltier through it as upon dry-land, and the drowning of Pharao's Concheries and all his people, at large commemorated in the Books of Holy Scriptures: as also for that through it the Spices of India and Arabia, were brought to Alexandria; and thence by the Venicians dispersed through all Europe, Africa, and Asia. I suppose I shall not do amiss to fit down Historically out of Galvano, a relation of the beginning continuance, and period of the Traffick through this Sea, by which all Europe formerly received so great Commodity. Know then (saith he) that Ptolemy Philadelphus, 277 years before the Incarnation, was the first that set on foot this Navigation: Colus (of old called Myos, Hormos) on the Sea-side being the ordinary Haven out of which they boyled Salt for India; and into which they returned, full fraught with their Commodities. From hence they were by Land conveyed to Coptus, and so down the Nile to Alexandria, by which Traffick the City grew exceeding Rich; inasmuch that the Custom-house there yielded Ptol. Aulites 7. Millia and an half of Gold yearly. The Romans being Lords of Egypt, enhanced the Customs to double that sum: so they fell into India every year (as Pliny witnesseth) 1200 Shipps, whose lading was worth 120000 Crownes; and there was made in return of every Crown 100. When the Vandals, Lombards, Goths, and Moors had torn in pieces the Roman Empire, all Commerce between Nations began to cease. At last providing the inconveniences, they began anew, conceiving the Indian Commodities partly by Land, partly by Water, unto Capha in Taurica Chersonesus, belonging to the Gomæ. Next Traiberon was made the Mar-Town, then Samarchand in Zagataie, where the Indian, Turkish, and Persian Merchants meet to barter Wares: the Turks conveying their Merchandise to Damascus, Barutti, and Alleppe; from whence the Venicians transported it to Venice, making that the common Emporium of Christendom. Once again, viz. Anno 1300. the Soldans of Egypt restored the Passage by the Red-Sea; which having continued more than 200 years, is now discontinued by the Portugals, Spaniards, English and Dutch, which bring them to their several homes by the backside of Africk: So that not only the Traffick of Alexandria is almost decayed, and the Riches of the Venicians much diminished; but the Drugs and Spices have lost much of their Virtue, as impaired by too much moisture in so long a Voyage. So much faith he, touching the cause and alteration of this Trading: to which I shall take leave to add, that for the better and more quick return of such Commodities as were usually brought into this Sea; some of the Kings of Egypt attempted formerly to cut a main Channel from it to the River Nilus, passable by Ships of greatest burthen; the marks of whose proud attempts are remaining still. Sesathris was the first who designed the work, having before with good success cut many Trenches from the River, and some Navigable into many places of the Country; by which unspeakable Murders were drained, the Country flourished, Trade made ease, and the People better furnished with more than in former times. During the great Persian Monarch, seconded the same Project; so did one of the Ptolomies; The like is said of a Capricious Ptolemy in these latter times. But they all gave it over on the great consideration; which was a fear, lest by letting in the Red-Sea they might drown the Country, and perhaps make a second Deluge in the parts of Greece and Asia Minor which lay nearest to them: that Sea being found to be much higher than the Mediterranean, and the flats of Egypt.

But here we are to understand, that all which hitherto hath been spoken concerning Egypt, relates to Egypt strictly, and specially so called; containing only so much of the Country of Egypt as lieth upon the Banks and Channels of the River Nilus; and not to all that tract of ground which lay betwixt the Red-Sea and the borders of Libya, which was reckoned in the compass of the Kingdom of Egypt, much less as comprehending Libya and Cyrene also, though now accounted Members of that Body; and anciently parts or Provinces of the Dioecsis of it. For Egypt, in the largest sense and acceptance of the word, may be, and generally is divided into these three parts, viz. 1. Egypt, in the general Nation, or the Kingdom of Egypt, extended on the Mediterranean from the borders of Idumea to the Roman Libya, or Marmarica, lying Westward of the mouth of Nilus, called Heracleotica; and on the borders of Aethiopia Superior from the said Red-Sea, to the Country of Libya Interior. 2. Libya or Marmarica, lying betwixt Egypt properly so called, and the Province of Cyrene or Pontopolis. And 3. Cyrene or Pontopolis, reaching from that Libya to the greater Syria; which is bordered with that part by the African Dioecsis, which is now called the Kingdom of Tunis. And in this first acceptance of it we shall now proceed to a Survey of the Mountains and chief Cities; which done, we shall describe the other in their proper places; and then unite them all in General Story.

As for the Mountains of this Country, there are very many: there were no living else for the people in the time of the overflowings of the River. The principal of these, 1. Those called Mount Libya, lying in a long Chain on the West of Nilus; 2. Alabysinus; 3. Phryphryus; 4. Troicus; 5. Basilianus on the East thereof. Betwixt these Hills the course of the River is so hemmed in on both sides, that at the upper part of the stream, where it first entereth into Egypt, the space between the Mountains is not above four miles broad; enlarging afterwards to eight, then about Cairo to thirty fives; then opening wider and wider, till we come to the breaches of the Delta, as the Country doth increase in breadth. On these and other of the Mountains and lesser Hills, stand most part of the Towns, the receptacles of the Country-people in the time of Flood, rising when least, to fifteen Cubits, or seven yards and an half.

Rivers of Note here are none but Nilus, nor indeed any one but that; that being sufficient of it felt to enrich this Country, which otherwise would be nothing but a Sandy Desert. The Head thereof not in the Mountains of the Mounts, as was once supposed, but in the Lake Zemire in the Aethiopia interior, passing from thence through the Higher Aethiopia, or Habesine Empire, till it falls at last into this Country; and running in one continual Channel (excepting where it brancheth into little Islands, as it sometimes doth) before its influx into the Sea, is divided into seven great streams, opening into the Sea with so many mouths. Namely, 1. Heracleotica; 2. Babitanica; 3. Schénitica; 4. Paniticum; 5. Mondianum; 6. Camiaticum; 7. Ptolemaicum. The first and last of these Currents

(which are the only two now left) being far distant from the other, and growing into one at the chief point of the Rivers division, make that part of Egypt which is called Delta, because of such as come to this Country out of Greece, Italy, or Antalis; it resembleth that Letter in the Greek Alphabet. Now because Nilus so runneth in its certain Channel, that the People have no other water to make use of for all necessities; there are many by-trenches and deep Ditches cut in convenient places (by the Care and Munificence of their Kings) to receive its Waters, and to communicate them to the people, who know almost no other drink then the Waters thereof; and indeed they need not: the Waters of this River being of such excellent both taste and virtue, that when Ptolemy Niger saw his Souldiers murmur for want of Wine; When (saith he) do you grumble for Wine, having the Water of Nile to drink?

But beside the Waters of this River, and the Trenches of it, the people are supplied with that Commodity by Lakes and artificial Channels, which serve for watering their Cattel, tempering of Mortar for their Buildings, and other such inferior uses; sometimes perhaps for drink for the poorer sort, who cannot be conveniently furnished with the waters of Nile. Amongst the Trenches, which were many, as before was said) those of most estimation were the Works of Ptolemy, and the Emperor Trajan, the first falling into that branch of the Nile, which maketh the Ile called Heracleotis: the other into the main body of it not far from Cairo. These two, by reason of the many fresh Springs which fall into them, have the name of Rivers in old Authors: and betwixt these was seated the Land of Goshen, extending from Nilus to the Red-Sea on the East and West. The chief of Note amongst the Lakes, were those called, 1. Mareotis, not far from Alexandria, by Pliny called Araratop, Maria, by Ptolemy; all which names are now lost, and changed into that of Lago di Antaeon, from a Town of that name near unto it. 2. Lacus supposed to be the same which in the Book of Maccabees is called Aphar, lib. 1. cap. 9. And 3. Moris, now called Bubaria, more memorable than the rest. In compass 3500 furlongs, 50 fathom deep, in the midst whereof were two Pyramides, 50 fathoms above the water, and as much beneath it: the Fifth of this Lake for one fix months in the year, is said to be worth twenty of their pounds a day to the Kings Exchequer; for the other six, each day a Talent. 4. The Lakes called Amariensis, which the Trench, or River called Ptolemaeus, doth discharge its waters, conveyed from thence into the Red-Sea.

The whole divided anciently into two parts onely. 1. That called Delta, betwixt the two extrem branches of the River Nilus, the form of which Letter it resembleth to him who standing on the Sea-shore, could take a view of it, as before was said. 2. That called Thebaïs from Thebes, the principal City of it, comprehending all the rest of the course of that River, but up on both sides with the Mountains spoken of before. But this Division leaving out all those parts heretofore, which lay on the East-side towards the Arabian Gulf, and on the West, as far as to the borders of Libya Marmarica; the Macedonians laying it all together, divided it into 18 Centrades, or Dioecis, by them called Nomi; increasing in the time of Ptolemy the Geographer, to 46; Orelinus out of divers Authors hath found 20 more. When conquered by the Romans, and made a Dioecsis of the Empire: it was divided into four Provinces, (not reckoning Marmarica and Cyrene into the account) that is to say, 1. Egyptiaca, specially so called, containing all the Delta, and the Dioecis or Nomus of Mareotis, bordering on Marmarica. 2. Aegyptiaca, so called from Angustin Cesar, on the East of the Delta, betwixt it and Arabia Petrea. 3. Aradaia, so called from the Emperor Arcadius, in whose time it was taken out of Thobais lying on both sides of the River, from the Delta to the City of Antinous. 4. Thobais, extending on both sides of the River from the borders of Libya Marmarica to the Red-Sea, (as the other doth) from Antinous unto Aethiopia; Divided otherwise by some into Superiorem, reaching from Aethiopia to the City of Antinous, Mediam, stretching thence to the point of the Delta; and Inferiorem, which comprehendeth all the rest. But at this time, that part heretofore which lieth on the South and East of Cairo is called Saud, or Salid; honoured heretofore with the dwelling of the ancient Pharaohs, because nearest unto Aethiopia, their most puissant Neighbour. 2. That betwixt Cairo, Rofetta, and Alexandria, hath the name of Erythra, wherein the Ptolomæan Princes did most reside; because most convenient for receiving Supplies of Men from the States of Greece. And finally, that from Cairo, to Tenfe and Damietta, is now called Maronna, in which the Turks and Mamelucks made the seat of their Empire; because most neighbouring to the Christians, whom they stood in fear of, as likeliest to invade them upon that side. In the whole Country there was reckoned in the time of Amasis the second, no fewer than 36000 Cities; but if the Towns and Villages be not reckon'd in, I should much doubt of the account. By Diodorus Siculus, it is said, that there were 3000 in his time: but Orellius on a diligent search, finds 200 only.

Those of most note in the Province of Aegyptus, 1. Pelufium, the most Eastern City of Egypt towards Idumæa, situate on the most Eastern Channel of Nile, called hence Peluficum; by Amnians to be the work of Peluseus the Father of Achilles, commanded by the Gods to purge himself in the Lake adjoining for the murder of his Brother Phocæus. Accounted for the chief door of Egypt towards the Land, as Pharos was to those who came thither by Sea; the Metropolis of the Province of Aegyptus, the birth place of Ptolemy the Geographer, and the Episcopall Seat of St. Ifidorus, furnished Pelufium, whole eloquent and pious Epistles are still extant. Out of the ruins heretofore (if not the same under another Title) Jarofo, 2. Damietta, memorable for the often Sieges laid unto it by the Christian Armies; for none more than that under John de Brenne, the Titulary King of Jerusalem, and the Princes of Europe, Anno 1220. During which (being of 10 months continuance) the Famine and the Pestilence to extremely rag'd, that the Town in a manner was depopled, before the Beliegers knew any thing of their condition: till in the end two venturous Soldiers, admiring the silence and solitude of so great a City, in a Barado scald the Walls; but found no man to make resistance. The next day the whole Army entered, where they found in every house, and every corner of the streets, whole heaps of dead bodies, none to give them buriall. A lamentable and ruefull spectacle! 3. Hera or Civitas Heronum, in the Ardian Hydnus; at the very bottom of the Gulf; remarkable for the first interview betwixt Isaac and Joseph after his coming into Egypt. 4. Heliopolis, or the City of the Sun, now called Beftames; in the Scriptures On, of which Putiphar the Father of Afenath (whom Pharaoh married unto Joseph) was Priest, or Prince, as is said, Gen. 41. 45. Given (as Josephus telleth us) for an habitation to the Sons of Isaac; by consequence one of the chief Cities of the Land Ramfès or Giften; and memorable in time succeeding for a publick Temple built for the Jews, with the consent of Ptolemy, surnamed Philadelphus, by Onias the High-Priest, then dispossest of his Authority and Office by the power of Antiochus a Temple much esteemed by the Hellenists, or Greeking Jews; and though Schismatical at the best in its first original; yet Schismatical and Idolatrous too, as was that of Mount Gebazinim. 5. Babutis, somewhat more North than Heliopolis, by some of the ancients called Avaris, by the Scriptures Pibefeth, another City of that tract; now better known by the name of Ziath: supposed to be the same which the Noëtitia calleth Caftra Judæorum; memorable in time of Paganism, for a famous Temple of Diana. 6. Asiut, on the shore of the Red-Sea, so called in honour of Asiut, Sister of Philadelphus and Wife to Lysimachus King of Thrace; afterwards called Cleopatras in honour of Queen Cleopatra; now better known by the name of Suet. Of great commerce and trading in the time of the Ptolomies: Now almost abandoned; and would be utterly deserted, were it not made the station of the Turkish Gallies, that command the Gulf; which being framed at Cairo of such Timber as is brought thither by Sea from the Woods of Cilicia, and sometimes from the shores of the Euxine Sea; are again taken in pieces, carried from Cairo unto this City on the backs of Camels, and here joynted together. Conceived to be the same which in former times was called Bast-Zephon (of which see Exod. 14. 9.) from the late incamping place of the Tribes of Israel, who from hence passed through the Red-Sea, upon dry Land. 7. Gibla Rubra, by the Greeks called Hiera Bolus, and sometimes Erythra Bolus also, more near the Latin; the redness of the soil giving name unto it: situate on the River or Trench of Tralan: more memorable for a misfortune that befel it than for any thing else; purposely burnt by Amoseph the fifth, upon this occasion. Being blind, he was assured by some of his Wizzards, that if he washed his eyes with the Urine of a Woman, which had never known any but her own Husband, he should be restored unto his sight. After a long search and many vain trials, he met with one whose water cured him: whom he took to wife; and causing all the rest whom he had made trial of, to be brought together to this Town, he set fire on the City and burnt both it and all the women there assembled with which Tale, if true, is little to honour of the Dames of Egypt.

Places of most note and observation in the Province of Egypt, strictly and specially called, are 1. Alexandria, situate Westward of the Delta, over again the Isle of Pharos and built upon a Promontory, thrusting it self into the Sea; with which on the one side, and the Lake Maronna on the other, it is exceeding well defended: the Work of Alexander the Great, and by him peopled with Greeks, immediately after his Conquest of Egypt. The Regal Seat of the Ptolomies, whilst Egypt did maintain the State of a Kingdom; and afterwards the Metropolis of it, when a Roman Diocesis. Adorned with many stately Buildings; of which most memorable the Serapim, (or Temple of their God Serapis) for sumptuous workmanship, and the magnificence of the Fabrick, inferior to none but the Roman Capitol; and next to that, the Library erected by Philadelphus, who had stored it with 700000 Volumes; unfortunately burnt in the War against Julius Cæsar. A City of great Trading, and infinite Riches; ut supra scilicet et alexandria the greatest Empery of the World, as is said by Strabo. Wanton with which, the Citizens so abound in all licentiousness both of life and speech, that they spared not the Emperour himself if he came in their way. But they paid dearly for their folly. For Cæsar could not so patiently of a Contumely as some wiser Princes, having felt the lashes of their tongues, when he was amongst them, assembled all the youth of the City, as if out of them he would have chosen some to attend his Person: and suddenly gave command to his Soldiers, to put them all to the Sword. A slaughter so great and universal, that the River Nile coloured with the blood of the slain, might not in this improperly at that time be called a Red-Sea. In this City, Anno 180. Pantemon read both Divinity and Philosophy to all such as would come to hear him; which as it is conceived to give the first hint to the instructing of

Univer-

Universities in the rest of Christendom; so from that first beginning the Schools of Alexandria grew to great and eminent; that Nazianzen calleth them Theriacas tractatus; scilicet theriacus, the Shop, or Work-house, as it were, of all kinds of Learnings. Much short of what it was even in point of Trading, especially since the diversion of the Spice Trade from the Bay of Arabia; and utterly divested of those beauties which once it had. Inhabited at the present by a mixture of Nations, Mooris, Jews, Turks, Greeks, and Christian Coptis; more for some little gain which they reap by Trafficking than any pleasure in the place. Now called Scandaria by the Turks, remarkable only for the house of the Patriarch (though he dwell for the most part in Cairo) and a Church in which St. Mark their first Bishop was said to be buried. 2. Camppe, situate East of Alexandria, and on the principal branch of the Nile, called Heracleoticum; so called from Camppe the Pilot of Montanus, who having suffered shipwreck upon this Coast, was there interred by his Master. A Town so branded in old times, for varieties of all kind of beastliness, and Luxury, that as Seneca very well observed, he that avoided the viciousness and debauchery of it, could not escape the infamy: the very place admitting matter for suspicion. 3. Rofetta, on the same branch of the River, and not far from Camppe, out of whose ruins it arose; built by a Slave of one of the Egyptian Caliphs; unwall'd, and destitute of all Fortifications, but plentifully accommodated with all sorts of Commodities, and well frequented by the Merchant. 4. Nieopolis, now called Mania, the Monument of some eminent Victory, and probably of the Conquest of Egypt by the Macedonians; the name being Greek, and the Town standing within 30 Furlongs of Alexandria. 5. Apbrodis and Apbrodisopolis, so called from Venus, who was here worshipp'd: situate betwixt the two middle branches of the Nile. 6. Sais, betwixt the same branches of the River also: whence that Nomus or Division had the name of Saïtes. It is now called Schut, or Siguiti. 7. Plimbis, on the Sea-side; and 8. Hierax, more within the Land: the chief Towns of the Region called Mæria.

In Arcadia called also Heptanomis, because it contained seven of the Nomi or Divisions, into which Egypt was distributed by the Macedonians, and the places of most note were and are, 1. Memphis, on the Western banks of Nile, not far from the sharp point of the Delta, where the River first beginning to divide it self; the Regal City of the old Egyptian Pharaohs; by one of which who removed the Seat-Royal from Thebes hither, it is said to be built, and called thus by the name of his Daughter. In compass, when it flourished about 20 miles; great, populous, and adorned with a world of Antiquities; amongst others with the Temples of Apis, Venus, and Serapis, bect with Sphinxes; now nothing left of the Ruins of it, but the Statues of some monstrous Resemblances, sufficient to shew what it hath been formerly. The Pyramides before described, stood not far from hence to which the Poet relateth, saying, Barbara Pyramidum sileat miracula Memphis.

Let barbarous Memphis brag no more
Of her Pyramides, as before.

2. Babylon, called for distinctions sake, Babylon Aegyptiorum, built on the other side of the River, and somewhat more unto the North: said to be founded by Cambyses the Persian Monarch, the first that made this Kingdom stoop to the yoke of a Foreiner; and by him peopled with some Babylonians or Chaldeans transplanted hither. Great, as appeareth by the ruins; amongst which, many of the Christian Temples and Monasteries do lie there in rubbish; the Cattle whereof served long after for the Garrison of the three Legions, appointed to defend this Country in the time of the Romans. This, thought by some to be the Babylon mentioned by Saint Peter, in his first Epistle Chap. ult. which the following words, and Mark my Saw, (Saint Mark being the first Bishop of the Alexandrians, and the Apostle of Egypt) may make somewhat probable, but the truth and reality hereof, I dispute not now. Out of the ruins of this City arose 3. Cairo, now, and for many Ages past, the chief of this Country: raised from the ashes of old Babylon by the Caliphs of Egypt, and by the Mamelucks made the Seat-Royal of their Kingdom. In compass not above eight miles; but full of Streets, the number of which said to be 18000, every one of them fortified with a Gate at each end; which being well barred, made every several street an impregnable Fortref. Found so by Schymus the first, when he conquered Egypt, who spent three days in forcing his way through it with his numerous Army. The private buildings very mean; the publick, especially the Mosques, beyond thought magnificent. Visited every seventh year with a dreadful Pestilence; yet still so populous, that it is conceived to be in good health, if there did not above a thousand in a day, or three hundred thousand within that year. Adorned with many delicate Orchards both within the City and without; full of variety of contentments, and neighboured by a pleasant Lake; but made more pleasant by the company which meet there in Boats, for their mutual solace and delights. Fortified at the South end with a stately Castle, the Palace of the Mameluck Sultans; situate on the top of a Mountain; overlooking the City, and a great part of the Country also. So large, that it seemeth a City of it self, immersed with high walls, divided into many partitions of several Courts, in times past the places of exercise; and entered by doors of Iron. Destroyed for the most part by Selimus, for fear of giving opportunity to some rebellion; or envying the Mamelucks the glory of having been the Masters of so brave a Mansion: that which is left, now serving for the habitation of the Turkish Bassas, who hath the Government of this Kingdom. 4. Metared, or Matarea, not far from Cairo; the soil whereof is said to be so rich and fertile, that the People are fain to cover it with Sand or Gravel, for moderating the extreme rankness of it. 5. Asiut, on the West-side of the Nile, and somewhat South of the famous Labyrinth before described; called also (to difference it from another of the same name on the shore of the Red-Sea) the City of Crocodiles, in regard of the divine honours there done that Monster. 6. Nilopolis, or Nili Civitas, in the Island called Heracleotis, made by the imbecumens of the River; most memorable for being the Episcopall Seat of Cheremonus, a right good Prelate; of whom see Eusebius in the 6. Book, and 34. Chapter of his Ecclesiastical History. 7. Troia, on the Eastern stream which makes that Island not much observable, but for giving name to the Moutes Tracis lying near unto it; out of which were digged the Stones which made the Pyramids. 8. Cinopolis in a little Island upon the water. 9. Hermopolis, or the City of Mercury; called also Hermopolis magna, to difference it from another of that name not far from Alexandria, to which they give the Adjunct of Parva. 10. Antinous, now Antin, founded by Adrian the Emperour, in honour of Antinous his especial Favourite; the most Southern City of this Province, on the banks of the Nile. 11. Dionysius, or the City of Bacchus, situate on the Southern end of the Lake of Mœris, in the Nomus or Division called Oasis parva. 12. Clyma, upon the shores of the Gulf, a Roman Garrison.

first suffered to live under them, as a Free-state, till the Conquest of Egypt; then reckoned as a part of that, and so accordingly described by Ptolemy: where Libya, Marmarica, and Ammonica, occur amongst the Nomi, or Districts of it. Afterwards made a distinct Province of that Dioecesis, and governed by a Lord-Præfident, under the Præfides Augustalis, or Suprem Commander for the Emperours.

3. CYRENE.

CYRENE is bounded on the East, with Marmarica; on the West, with Africa propria, or the Realm of Tunisi; and some part of the Mediterranean, and the Greater Syria; on the North, with the Mediterranean wholly; on the South, with Libya Inferiour, or the Deserts of Libya.

It took this name from Cyrene, the chief City of it, from whence sometimes also called Cyrenæica; by Pliny and some other Roman Writers it is called Pentapolis, from five chief Cities which were in it, viz. 1. Cyrene, 2. Ptolemais, 3. Arsinoë, 4. Darnis, 5. Berenice: by Ammianus for the same reason Libya Pentapolis, the name of Libya extending over many of these Roman Provinces. And finally, at the present, it passeth with that last described by the name of Barca, or Barka Marmarica; the whole extent whereof in length from the Greater Syria unto Egypt, is no less than 1300 miles, but the breadth not above 200.

The Country in the South parts desolate and barren, flied with few Towns, and not many Villages: the people living up and down in scattered houses, and at such a distance, as if it were in so many Islands. Desolate not of Springs and Rivers only, but of Rain-water too, the Clouds not very often dropping: if any fell, it was dried up presently by the Sands. But within fifteen miles of the Sea, indifferently fruitful and well inhabited.

The people in old times were said to have been utterly ignorant of buying and selling, of fraud and cheating, not knowing, or not caring for the Use of Money: content with little, not superfluous in their Cloths or Buildings; their houses for the most part (except only in their greater Cities) made of Oler-Twigs. Much altered in the first part of their Character, since the coming of the Arabians hither; now a Thieving Nation, given wholly to Robbery and Spoil. So lazy, that they will not Manure or Till their Land, but provide themselves with Corn from Sicily laying their Children to paw for it, till by their Thieving they can raise a sufficient sum to discharge the Debt.

One only River I find in it, but of fame enough to serve for many; by Ptolemy called Lathon, by Pliny Lebon, by the Poets Lebe. Swallowed by the Earth not far from its first original, it riseth up again about Berenice; fained therefore by the Poets to come from Hell, and to create forgetfulness in all them that drink of it: it being the condition of the dead to remember nothing. Thence the occasion of the fancy. Some Lakes I find also in it, whereof one occasioned by this River, not far from the Sea; another more within the Land (where indeed more necessary) near Palturus. With Mountains better fortified (though not much better for them) the principal whereof, the first called Heracleis Aræne, the Sands of Heracles, thwarting the Country East and West, 2. Bæolican, on the South of thofe: and 3. Volpe, a long ridge of Hills, bordering upon Africa Propria.

Cities of most note in it, 1. Apollonia, in the East parts near the Promontory called Zephyrium, in the Confines of Libya, or Marmarica. 2. Cyrene, in the West of that; once of such power, that it contended with Carthage for some preeminencies: Then the chief Lady of this Tract, which it gave this name to. The birth-place of Erato, the Mathematician, Callimachus the Poet, and of that Simon of Cyrene, whom the Jews compelled to carry our Saviour Crocs. 3. Ptolemais, betwixt Cyrene and Arsinoë; built or repaired by Ptolemy Philadelphus; the Episcopal City of Synefius, a learned and religious Bishop of the Primitive times, as appears by his Epistles extant. 4. Arsinoë, on the East-side of the River Lathon; so called in honour of Arsinoë, the sister of Philadelphus, and Wife of Magus, once King of this Country. 5. Berenice, on the Western Bank of the said River, so called from Berenice the Mother, or (another of the same nature) the Daughter of Magus: The furthest Town of all this Country, bordering on the Promontory called Boracum, and the Greater Syria. This last a Quick-sand very dangerous to Mariners, in compass 635 miles, and by them carefully avoided. 6. Palturus, more within the Land, but on the borders of Libya or Marmarica, South to Apollonia. 7. Aptungis, now Lungifari, by Ptolemy called Apuchi Fannum. 1. Heracleis Turris, the Tower of Heracles near the Greater Syria; erected in the honour of Heracles, his killing of the Dragon, and robbing the Orchards of the Hesperides of their golden Apples. Thofe Hesperides said to be Aglaë, Arcthusa, and Hesperethusa, the three Daughters of Atlas: their Orchard placed by Ptolemy betwixt this Tower and Palturus; by Pomponius, in the Atlantic Islands; by Virgil, in Mauritania Tingitana; by Pliny, both in Mauritania and this Cyrene; and possibly in all alike. 9. Zephyrus, 10. Acabhis in the mid-lands; all worn out of memory. 11. Fefan, of greatest name now, though scarce worth the naming.

The old Inhabitants of this Country, were the Abite on the East, the Bercite near the Greater Syria, the Mæcæne and Legænicæ near the Mountains of Heracles; all probably descended from Naphthum the Son of Mizraim, of whom there still remain some foot-steps in Apuchi Fannum, the Fane or Temple of Apuchus. This Apuchus, by some mistakenly called Antuchus, and by the Grecians said to be the Son of Cyrene, and the Brother of Arsinoë: who being sent out to seek their Fortunes, Arsinoë fell into the life named Caos; and Apuchus, or Antuchus, into Libya, both by them first planted. Nephthim, the Deity of this Country, by the Egyptians called Nephthim, seems to come from Naphthum; most highly worshipped by this People, because he first taught them the use of equus, equus, the Art of training Horses to the Coach or Chariot; in which the Cyrenæans after grew so expert, that they could drive their Chariots in a round, or circle, and always keep their Chariot-wheels in the self-same track. Of no great power, till Battus a noble Spartan, landing in this Country, had built the City of Cyrene; and founded it in so good a course of Life and Discipline, that in short time it came to have Dominion over the most part of this Country; and to contend with Carthage about their Territories. Warded on by Arsinoë King of Egypt, they faced with the Greeks for aid, and by their assistance overcame him. Long after which, falling at odds among themselves, they craved aid of Ptolemy the first of that Race, by whom they were finally subdued. Left by him at his death to Magus, a Son of his last Wife by a former Husband, whom he came again to the Crown of one of his Daughters; it came again to the Crown of Egypt, by the marriage of Berenice, the Daughter and Heir of Magus, with the Son of Ptolemy Philadelphus. Allocated from which Crown again, for the pretence of some of the younger Princes; and in the end given by one of the Ptolemies, the last King hereof, to the people of Rome. Reduced into the form of a Province by Augustus Cæsar, by whom united in one Government with the Isle of Crete: but but made a Province of it self by the following Emperours, never since separated from the fortune and affairs of Egypt, to which now we hasten.

That the Kingdom and Nation of Egypt was of great Antiquity, is not a matter to be doubted; the question in this point, betwixt them and the Scythian, being not easily decided. Whether it were so ancient, as the Egyptians say, may perhaps be controverted. By them it was affirmed, that they had the memory and story of 13000 years; and a succession of 330 Kings in the time of Amosis the second, who was contemporary with Cyrus. Which number of years, if understood of Solary years, measured by the course of the Sun, must not be allowed of; because it maketh them many thousand years older than the Creation: but if of Lunar, which is most agreeable unto the account of the Egyptians, who reckoned their years by months; it will amount unto no more than to 1000, or 1100 years, and so fall answerably to the times following after the Flood. But for their Kings, 330 in their reckonings, and those of 24 or 25 several Dynasties, the matter is not so soon made up. For either those Kings, must not be all Kings or supreme Lords of Egypt, as the Pharaohs were, but their several Regents or Vice-regents, armed with Regal power; those Dynasties not the successions of so many Regal Families, but of their Substitutes and Lieutenants, many of which might live successively under one Suprem: or else we must needs look on Egypt as distracted in those times, into several Kingdoms, amongst the Princes of those Dynasties before remembered; or finally, we must look for some of those Kings and Princes before the Flood. By either of these ways, the business may be well agreed. For if that most of them were but the names of several Regents, (as probable enough it is) there might be many such in the Reign of one King; according to the King's fancy, the merit of particular persons, to the necessities of State; Changes of great Officers, especially if grown too great, are not new nor strange. If they were all Kings, or Supreme Rulers, (as it is also probable) we find not any thing of moment to persuade the contrary, but that many of them lived and reigned in their several parts (as in other Countreys in those times) till the greater had devoured the less. Or if they were the names of such sovereign Princes, as had the sole command of Egypt before the Flood, (as some think they were) they might amount in all to a great number, and so many Dynasties; the illiquity of those times, the ambition of great persons, and consequently the short lives of the Kings being duly pondered. That Egypt, and most part of the World, was peopled before the Flood, hath been already proved in our General Preface: If peopled, then no question under some form of Government: the names of which Governours (call them Kings or Rulers, or what else you please) might be preserved in Egypt on Pillars of Brass or Stone; or otherwise transmitted by tradition unto Cham the Father of Misraim, by whom this Country was first planted after the Confusion of Babel. But that old stock of Kings and People being destroyed in the general Deluge, the Children of Misraim succeeded next in their desolate dwellings; yet so, that the posterity of Chus and Lebahim, two others of the Sons of Cham, had their shares therefrom. From the first of which descended the Inhabitants of those parts of Egypt, which lay along the shores of the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia: in which respect, not only one of the Nomi, or divisions bordering on the Isthmus, had the name of Arabia: but the people dwelling on those shores were called Arabes, divided into the Arabes Azariti, and Arabes Aditi. And from the other came that mixture of Nations, called Liby-Egyptii, or Libyans and Egyptians intermixt together, inhabiting in Misraica, and the Western parts. But though these people were derived from several Ancestors, they made one Nation in the total: subject to Misraim as their Chief, and after his decease, unto his Successors in the Kingdom of Egypt. Concerning whom we may observe, that in Cham, our greatest Antiquaries find the name of Jupiter Hammon: Misraim they guess to be Osiris, the great God of Egypt. To him succeeded Typhon, not by right of blood, but by Usurpation; who dissatisfied by Lebahim, the brother of Misraim (whom the Greeks call Hercules Ægyptius) the Kingdom was restored to Orus, the Son of Osiris. During the time of these few Princes, happened all those things which are recorded in the Scriptures concerning Egypt; from the first going down of Abraham in the time of Osiris, to the advancement of Joseph in the Reign of Orus: in which there passed the 15, 16, and 17. Dynasties of Regal Vice-Roys. Lieutenants only, as I take it, to those mighty Princes. The Kings themselves called generally by the name of Pharaohs, though they had all their proper and peculiar names: as afterwards their Successors here had the name of Ptolemies, and the Roman Emperours, that of Cæsar. Few of them famous in the stories of other Nations, or for renown for their Achievements and Exploits abroad, contenting themselves with the Revenues of their own Dominions, and spending the surplussage thereof in building Cities, draining the Marshes of the Nile, or other works of Ostentation and Magnificence. Only Sesiftris is of fame for his undertakings; though when he had cast up his account, he got nothing by them: of whom it is reported, that being a King of great wealth and puissance, he had brought under subjection all his neighbouring Princes, whom he compelled in turns to draw his Chariot. It hapned that one of these unfortunate Princes cast his eye many times on the Coach-wheel: and being by Sesiftris demanded the cause of his so doing, he replied; That the falling of that Spoke low, which but just before was the height in the wheel, put him in mind of the infallibility of Fortune. The King deeply weighing the Parable, would never after be so drawn in his Chariot. He was also the first that encountered the Sybarites in Battle; having already in conceit conquered them, before he led his Army against them. The Sybarites much marvelled, that a King of such great Revenues would wage war against a Nation so poor, with whom the fight would be doubtful, the Victory unpromisable; but to be vanquished a perpetual infamy and disgrace. For their parts they resolved to meet him as an Enemy, whose overthrow would enrich them. When the Armies came to join, the Egyptians were discomfited, and pursued even to their own doors by the Enemy. But the Sybarites could not enter the Country, because of the Fens, with whose passage they were unacquainted; and so they returned. Which said, without troubling our selves with their many Dynasties, we will lay down the Succession of their Kings, as well as we can; the disagreement of Historians and Chronologers, touching this Succession, being irreconcilable.

For in the 18th. of the Reign of this King, Egypt was again recovered by the valour of Oebus, the eighth Emperor of Persia. And when Alexander had overthrown Darius, he came, and without blows won this fertile kingdom; which yielded him him during his life the yearly value of 6000 Talents. After his death this Kingdom fell to the share of Ptolemies the Son of Lagus, from whom all the subsequent Kings of Egypt were called Ptolemies.

The Second DYNASTY, or the PTOLOMEAN Kings of Egypt.

A.M.

- 3461 1 Ptolemy, one of Alexander's Captains, reputed the Son of Lagus; but supposed to be the Son of Philip of Macedon, half-brother to Alexander. 40.
- 3681 2 Ptol. Philadelphus, who filled the Library of Alexandria with 700000 Volumes, and caused the 72 Interpreters to translate the Bible.
- 3717 3 Ptol. Evergetes the Son of Philadelphus, vanquished Seleucus Callinicus King of Syria, and probably had subdued the Kingdom, if not called back by Domestic diffusions. 26.
- 3743 4 Ptol. Philopater, a cruel, voluptuous and incontinent Prince; cruelly slew Cleomenes the last King of Sparta, who had fled to his Father for relief, in the time of his exile. 17.
- 3769 5 Ptol. Epiphanes, at the age of five years succeeded his Father; protected by the Romans against Antiochus the Great of Syria, who had an aim upon his Kingdom. 28.
- 3784 6 Ptol. Philometor, the Son of Epiphanes; by Cleopatra the Daughter of Antiochus; protected in his homage by the Romans also: caused himself to be Crowned King of Syria, but again relinquished it. 35.
- 3829 7 Ptol. Evergetes II. for his deformity called Physcon, the Brother of Ptol. Philometor, a wicked Prince, and one that spent the greatest part of his Reign in a cruel war against Cleopatra, his Wife and Sister. 29.
- 3858 8 Ptol. Lathargus reigned 16 years with Cleopatra his Mother, by whom dispossessed of his Estate for the space of ten years; after her death was sole Lord of Egypt. His Brother Alexander being taken by the Queen-mother as her Associate, in the time of his deprivation, and passing in the account of the Kings of Egypt.
- 3892 9 Ptol. Antates, the Son of Lathargus, surnamed also Dionysius, whose Brother being settled by him in the Isle of Cyprus, was most unjustly stripped of it by the power of the Romans: and he himself ousted of Egypt by his own Subjects, but restored by the aid and love of Pompey.
- 3922 10 Ptol. Dionysius, called also Junior, or the younger, together with Cleopatra his Wife and Sister, succeeded Antates in the Throne, which they held together by the space of three years. In the last of which, Pompey was barbarously slain on the shores of Egypt, by the command of Achillas the young Kings Governor; and the young King himself unfortunately slain in the Alexandrian

A.M.

- tumult against Julius Caesar.
- 3925 11 Cleopatra, the Wife and Sister of Dionysius, restored to the Crown of Egypt by the bounty of Caesar, of whom exceedingly beloved for her wit and beauty. After which she governed Egypt 19 years in her own sole right, with great pomp and splendor: when being imbarqued in the bed and fortunes of Marc Anthony, she killed her self not long after his fatal Overthrow at the Battle of Actium, that the might not be led in triumph through Rome.
- These Ptolemaean Princes of Egypt, were for the most part in wars with the Kings of Syria, in which they were by turns victorious, and vanquished; neither Prince having cause to boast of his bargain. After the death of Cleopatra, whose live and love with Marcus Antonius I will not now relate, this Country fell to the share of the Roman Emperours, and was by them highly prized, and warily looked into. The Governor hereof was but a Gentleman of Rome; no Senator being permitted to come into it; it being a maxim of State, not to suffer men of great Houses to come into that Country, whose revolt may endanger the whole Empire. Of this nature was Egypt. For besides the natural situation of the place, very defensible; and besides the abundance of Money with which it was stored; this Country alone furnished the City of Rome with Corn, for four Months yearly. Whence Jesephus being chosen Emperour by the Syrian Legions, and hearing of the defeat of his concurrent Vitellius, hastened hither: to this end only, that detaining the ordinary provision of Victuals, he might by famine compel the City of Rome to stand at his devotion: Ut nehom quoque extreme opis indigem fame urgetet, as the Historian hath observed. When made a Province of that Empire, it was counted as the Emperour's sole Peculiar: afterwards made (as well it might) an entire Diocesi of its self, subordinate to the Prefectus Pretorio Orientis. In the division of the Empire allotted to the Constantinopolitani, whose Government being thought to be insupportable by this wanton people, they called in the Saracens, by whom the Greek Garrisons were cast out, and the Country made subject to Hammar the third of the Caliphs. Afterwards weary of them also, they would have a Caliph of their own, revolting totally from the Caliph of Bagdat. So that from this time forwards we shall meet with two Caliphs at a time; the one residing at Cairo in Egypt, to whom the Saracens or Moslems of Spain and Africa did submit themselves: the other at Bagdat, who Lorded it over all the rest, at least as to the Supremacy Title, and some chief Prerogatives; though the main power was centred and disposed of among their Sultans.

The Fourth DYNASTY, or the Race of the TURKISH KINGS or CALIPHS of EGYPT.

- 1163 1 Afereddin, surnamed Shirachob, called Sarracon, by the Christian Writers; the first of the Turky which reigned in Egypt; of the Noble Family of Ainab.
- 1186 2 Zeli-bedin, called Saladin, by the Christian Writers; the Son (or as some say, the Nephew) of Sarracon, or Shirachob; confirmed in his Estate by the Caliph of Bagdat, under whose jurisdiction he reduced the Egyptian Schismatics. He obtained also the Kingdom of Damascus, conquered Mesopotamia and Palestine; and in the year 1190, regained the City of Hierusalem. A Prince who wanted nothing to commend him to succeeding Ages, nor to glorify him in the Kingdom of Heaven, but the saving knowledge of CHRIST JESUS.
- 1199 3 Elaziz, the second Son of Saladin, succeeded in the Realm of Egypt; which he exchanged afterwards with his Brother Eladul for the Kingdom of Damascus.
- 4 Eladul, or El-Phazel, by the Christian Writers called Melchid, succeeded upon this exchange in the Kingdom of Egypt; and overcame the Christians, without the loss of a man, at the siege of Cairo, by letting loose the Slaves of Nine, which drowned their Army, and forced them to covenant with him at his own pleasure.
- 1210 5 Elchamli.
- 1237 6 Melch Affalch, by the Christian Writers called Melchid, the Son of Elchamli, who overcame Louis the 9th. of France; and going with that King towards Damiat, was slain by the Soldiers of his Guard, called Mamaluck.

17 Etzar Ladin Illabi, the Son of Elphaiz, the last Caliph, or King of Egypt, of the race of Phatime: the Turky succeeding after his death in this opulent Kingdom. Concerning which we are to know, that Elphaiz, the Father of Etzar, being overpowered by Almericus King of Hierusalem, craved aid of Norradine the Turkish Sultan of Damascus; which he received under the conduct of Sarracon, or Shirachob, a right valiant and stout Commander: who taking his advantages, not only cleared the Country of Almericus, but got the whole Kingdom to himself, dashing out the brains of Elphaiz with his Horseman's Mace. And though Etzar his Son assumed for a while the Title of Caliph, yet the destruction of himself, and the whole Phatimian Family rooted out by Sarracon, soon put an end to that Claim, and left the Kingdom in the peaceable possession of the Turkish Sultans.

1242 7 Elmutan, the Son of Melch Affalch, succeeded for a time in his Fathers Throne. But the Mamaluck being resolved to obtain the Kingdom for themselves, enforced him to flee to a Tower of Wood, which they set on fire; the poor Prince, half burned, leaping into a River (which ran close by it) was there drowned, and the Mamaluck settled in the Kingdom, An. 1245.

These Mamaluck were the Off-spring of a People on the banks of the Euxine Sea, vulgarly called the Circassians: whom Melchid, either bought of their Parents, or (at the second hand) of the Tartars, then newly Masters of those Countreys, to supply the want of valor in the idle and effeminate people of Egypt, and out of them selected a choice Band of men, for the Guard of his Person. Knowing their strength, and finding their opportunity, they treacherously flew Melchid, his Lord and Master; appointing one Azzedin Iok, a Turcoman by Nation, and therefore by most Christian Writers called Tarqaimancu, (one of their own number) a man of great spirit and valour, to succeed in the Throne. Unwilling to receive the Supreme Authority into the hands of the Egyptians; and not permitting their own sons to enjoy the name and privilege of Mamaluck; they bought yearly certain numbers of Circassian Slaves, whom they committed to the keeping of the Egyptians, by them to be instructed in the Egyptian Language, and the Law of Mahomet. Being thus fitted for Employment, they were taught the Discipline of War, and by degrees advanced into the highest Offices of Power and Trust, as now the Janizaries are in the Turkish Empire: in choice and ordering of whom, as the Ottoman Turkey were preceded by those of Egypt, so it is possible enough that the Janizaries may make as great a Change in the Turkish Empire, as as the Mamaluck did in the Egyptians. So 'unfale a thing it is for a Prince to commit the sole guard of his person, or the defence of his Dominions, to the hands of such, whom not the fence of a natural Duty, but the hopes of Profit or Preferment may make useful to him. For thus we find, that Constantine, a King of the Britains, was murdered by his Guard of Pilgr: most of the Roman Emperours, by the hands of those whom they intrusted, either with the guard of their Persons, or the command of their Armies: And I think no man can be ignorant, how many times the Princes and Estates of Italy have been brought into the extremest dangers, by trusting too much to the honesty of mercenary Soldiers and Commanders. Take we for instance the proceedings of Giscope Pisenino, who with his Followers first took pay of Ferdinand the first of Naples, left him, to fight for his vowed Enemy, John Duke of Calabria, the Son of Rene Duke of Anjou; whom he also forsook in his greatest need. The like we find of Francisco Sforza, first entertained by the Duke of Milan, from whom he revolted to the Florentines, from them to the Venetians; and being again received into the Pay of the State of Milan, made use of their own Army to subdue that City. Nor can I speak better of the Switzers, or their dealing in this kind with the French Kings, the Sforza's Dukes of Milan, and with whom not, (to say the truth) that ever trusted or employed them.

Now as it is unsafe for a Prince to commit the custody of his Person, or the defence of his Estates to the Faith of Foreigners; so is it dangerous to him to call in such Aids, and to commit his Fortunes either wholly, or principally, unto their Fidelity. A moderate supply of Men, Money, or Munition, from a confederate King, is, I confess, in most cases convenient, in some necessary: as well to save their Natives from the Sword, as to try a Friend, and interest an Ally in the same cause. But to invite too great a number of Succours, as from Helpers may become Masters, and oppress the people whom they came to defend; is that Rock on which many Realms have suffered shipwreck, and which a good Pilot of the State should with all care avoid. For as in the fickleness of the body natural, it is hurtful to a man's Health and life to take more Physick, than it may (after the effect thereof be wrought) either digest, or put out again; so in the body Politick, it is a perilous matter to receive more succours, than what (after they have done the deed they were sent for) we may either with convenience reward and settle with us, or at liberty expel. All succours, this of Foreign supplies is most incurable; and Ne quid nimis, if in nothing else true, is in this case Oracle. There is no Kingdom (I am verily persuaded) under the Sun, which hath not been by this means conquered; no Common-wealth, which hath not been by this means ruined. To relate all examples, were infinite and tedious; to infer some, pleasing to the Readers and to illustrate the point, not unnecessary. To begin with former times, Philip of Macedon, called into Greece to assist the Thebans against the Phocians, brought all that Country, in a manner, under his command. The Romans, by aiding the Sicilians against the Carthaginians, possessed themselves of that flourishing Island; by assisting the Hedui against the Septani, mastered Gallia; by succouring Androgeus against Cassibelon, seized on Britain; by siding with the Ætolians against Perseus, united to their Empire all the Kingdom of Macedon; and by the same course what not? In after-ages, the Britains called in the Saxons, and were by them thrust out of all; the Irish called in the English, by whom they were, in process of time totally subdued; and the Indians called in the Mongul-Tartars, who now Lord it over them. These foreign Supplies are invited, or let into a Country, commonly in four cases. First, when some one man upon discontent, or desire of revenge, openeth them a way into a Country: upon which motives, Nasir invited the Lam-bards into Italy; and Count Julian brought the Moor into Spain; the one to be revenged on the Eunuchs Saphia, who had despitely reviled him; the other to revenge himself on King Roderick, who ravished his Daughter. Secondly, when a weaker Faction makes a way for them, to maintain their cause against a stronger. On which ground, the Duke of Burgundy being oppressed by the faction of Orleans, made way for Henry the fifth to pass into France; and the Leaguers drew the Spaniards in, to hold up their declining cause against Henry the 4th. Thirdly, when an ambitious Prince makes use of a foreign power, to usurp upon the rights of another man. And for that cause Ludovic, Sforza perwaded Charles the 8th. to undertake the Conquest of the Realm of Naples; that by the countenance of his Arms, he might appropriate to him the Dukedom of Milan. Fourthly, when a King overburdened by a foreign or domestic Force, which he is not able to resist, requires the help of a foreign Friend: in which case, Plus à medice qu'à malis mali, the Physick proves many times worse than the Disease. For thus the Kings of Naples of the house of Aragon, being in danger of the French, drew in the Aids of Ferdinand the Catholic, the Cousin-German once removed of the King then being; and the Caliphs of Egypt, not able to withstand the Forces of Almericus, craved aid of the Turky: by which means, both those Kingdoms were made a prey to their foreign friends, and by avoiding Scylla, fled into Charybdis. Nay, many times it so happeneth, that these foreign Succours join in design with those against whom they were called, and divide the conquered State between them. And so we find, that the Burgundians being called by Stilico into Gaul, to prevent the breaking of the Franks, or French, joined with them in a common League against the Romans, whom they dispossessed at last of all that Country. Only amongst so many examples to this purpose, we find the Low-Country-men to have prospered by these foreign aids; who by the assistance of the English, ransomed themselves from that yoke of bondage which was intended to be put upon them by the King of Spain. This I acknowledge to be true and look upon it as a great argument of the integrity and honesty of the English Nation; although it be as true withal, that the English never had such an Army there as to be able to subdue them. But give me such another instance, I will quit the cause: for the same Low-Country-men found it otherwise with the Duke of Anjou, Brother to Henry the 3d. of France, whom they created Duke of Brabant, and their Governor-General; permitting him to bring in as many of the French, as either his Authority, or their own moneys were able to raise: who was no sooner settled in that command, but he made it his chief business to seize upon their strongest Holds, and to be a more absolute Prince amongst them, than ever the Spaniards or Burgundians had been before. So that I think I may conclude, that these foreign Succours are the least to be trusted, and the least to be trusted, of any remedies in State. But it's now more than time to return to the Mamaluck; and in them to

The Fifth DYNASTY of the EGYPTIAN KINGS, or the Race of the MAMALUCKS.

- A. Ch.
1255 1 Tarquinius, who being promoted to the Kingdom, released King Lewis, whom Melchisedech his Predecessor had taken Prisoner, but precluded not half the conditions agreed upon.
- 2 Clothes (by some called Elmutabaz) taking advantage of the Miseries of the Turks, then distressed by the Tartars; seized on the greater part of Syria and Palestine.
- 1260 3 Baudouin perfected the begun Conquests of Clothes, and took from the Christians the strong City of Antioch; carrying on his Armies as far as Armenia, where he did much spoil.
- 4 Melchisedech, or Melchisedech, restored the power of the Mamluks in Syria and Palestine; where it had been much impaired by Edward the Son of Henry the 3d. of England; and Henry Duke of Morocco, &c.
- 1286 5 Elpis, or Alphix, recovered from the dissenting Christians the strong Cities of Tripoli, Beirut, Tyre, and Sidon; all which he raised to the ground, that they might not be any more servicable to the affairs of the Christians.
- 1291 6 Arabis, or Euthymus, by birth a German, released Henry Duke of Morocco; but he had been Prisoner 26 years. He rooted the Christians out of Syria, took Ptolemais the last Town they there held; and so raised it, that he made it fit to be ploughed.
- 7 Melchisedech, when he was Lieutenant to Arabis, was disinherited by Cassian, a great Prince of the Tartars, with the loss of 40000 Egyptians; but Cassian being departed, he recovered again Syria, and destroyed Hiersusalem; for which Service he was afterward made Sultan of Egypt.
- 8 Melchisedech, who I suppose to be that Sultan that governed Egypt when Tamurlane with unrelenting violence conquered it; but of this I am not certain: neither can I meet with any constant and continued War (which I dare rely on) of his Successors in this Kingdom, till I come to
- 9 Melchisedech, or Melchisedech, who in the year 1423, subdued the Isle of Cyprus, and made the Kings thereof to be from thenceforth Tributaries to the Mamluk Sultans.
- 1465 10 Cathartes, who much reformed the State of Egypt, and was a professed Enemy of Baizet 3d. the 8th. King of the Ottomans.
- 1498 11 Mahomet the Son of Cathartes, deposed by the Mamluks, for fear the Kingdom might by him be made hereditary; it being against their usual custom, that the Son should succeed his Father, in the name and privileges of a Mamluk.
- 1499 12 Camilus Chirifus, succeeded on the deposing of Mahomet.

- 13 Zanballat, who dethroned Camilus, and not long after was deposed by
- 1500 14 Tononbeius; outed of his Estate by the joint consent of the Mamluks, so to make way for Camilus Gaurus.
- 1501 15 Camilus II. surnamed Gaurus, reformed the disordered and factious Estate both of Court and Country; and for the space of 16 years governed very prosperously. But siding at the last with Hysmael the Persian Sophy, against Selimus the first of that name the 3d. Emperor, and tenth King of the Ottoman Family; he drew his Kingdom into a War, in which his Armies were overthrown, and himself slain in battle.
- 1517 16 Tononbeius II. succeeded Camilus Gaurus, both in his Kingdom and misfortunes: vanquished in his first year by the said Selimus the first, An. 1517. Who having conquered this rich Kingdom, was used to say, That he had gotten a Farm to feed his Gnomans, or young Soldiers. So Egypt became a Province of the Turkish Empire, as it still continueth.

What the Revenues of it were in the time of the Pharaohs, I am not able to affirm. Great they must be, beyond the proportion of belief; for else they could never have been Masters of sufficient Treasure to finish those vast Structures which they undertook. Twelve thousand and five hundred Talents they amounted annually unto, in the time of the Ptolemies; which of our Money makes the sum of two Millions, and 347750 pounds. Which Sum Augustus Caesar (appropriating this Province to himself) is said to have doubled: but whether he had it all in Money, or part hereof in Money, and the rest in Corn, I determine not. Certain it is, that there was yearly shipped hence for Rome, in the time of that Emperor, Two hundred thousand Measures of Wheat, every Measure weighing Twenty hundred pound weight; which cometh to Seven Millions, and an hundred forty thousand of our English Bushels; sold by him, or distributed gratis amongst the Poor, as he saw occasion. So that there might be very well some abatement in Money, considering that the Corn amounted to so great a Sum. Nor were they much less, if ought at all, when the Mamluks ruled in this Country. For Camilus Gaurus, at his coming to the Throne, gave no less than Ten Millions of Ducats; at one clap, amongst his Soldiers. But the Turks at this day, partly through their Tyrannical Government, and partly through the discontinuance of the usual Traffick through the Red Sea, receive no more than Three Millions of Crowns; one of which is hoarded in his own Coffers; the second is appropriated unto his Vicegerent Dahab; for support of this Charge, the third is distributed amongst his Garrison-Soldiers; and such of them as by Sea guard his own Million to Constantinople; for by Land dareth not venture it, for fear of the Florentines, who with a few Ships Lordeth it in the Mediterranean.

And so much for Egypt.

Of

OF B A R B A R Y.

BARBARY, is bounded on the East, with Cyrenaeica; on the West, with the Atlantic Ocean; on the North, with the Mediterranean, the Straits of Gibraltar, and some part of the Atlantic also; on the South, with Mount Atlas, by which separated from Lilya inferior, or the Deserts of Lilya.

It containeth in it the whole Districts of Africa, and part of the Districts of Spain: subject in former times to the Commonwealth of Carthage, and the great Kings of Mauritania, and Nomidia. When conquered by the Romans, they gave to that part of it, which they won from the Carthaginians, the name of Africa, calling that Province by the name of the whole Peninsula, and afterwards extended it over all the rest of the Country, on the North of Atlas. Which name it held till the subjugation of it by the Saracens, by whom called B A R B A R Y: either from Barbar, signifying, in their Language an uncertain murmur, such as the speech of the Africans seemed to them to be; or from the word Bar, signifying a Desert, which doubled, made up first Barbar, and after Barbary.

It situate under the third and fourth Climates: so that the longest Summers days in the parts most South, amount to thirteen hours three quarters, increased in the north Northern parts to fourteen hours and a quarter. In length extended from the Atlantic Ocean to the greater Syria, for the space of 1500 miles; in breadth from Mount Atlas to the Mediterranean, where narrowest, 100 miles; but towards the Straits, where the broadest, almost three hundred.

The Country, in such parts as lie nearest to the Mediterranean, is full of Hills covered with Woods, and stored with plenty of Wild-beasts; provided reasonably well of most sorts of Fruits, but unfit for Wheat, inasmuch that most of the Inhabitants live of Barley-bread. Berwix which and Mount Atlas is a Champain Country, watered with many pleasant Rivers issuing from that Mountain, and liberally furnished with Cherries, Figs, Pears, Plums, Apples of all kinds; abundance of Oyl, Honey, Sugar; some Mines of Gold, and that for purity and fineness no where to be bettered. Here are also betides, large Herds of Cattle, some Elephants, Lyons, Dragons, Leopards, and others of the like savage nature, and of Acres great multitudes; Horfes good store, of excellent both strength and beauty. But taking it in the best parts, it is falshly extremely poor of that infinite fertility, which is ascribed to it by the Writers of older times. For besides the miracle of five hundred Ears of Corn growing on the stalk, (whereof more anon) Pliny reporteth, that not far from the City of Tapeis, in the way to Leptis, a man might fetch a great Date-tree overshadowing an Olive, under the Olive a Fig-tree, under that a Pomegranate, under that a Vine, and under all, Pease, Wheat, and Herbs, all growing and flourishing at one time. It is affirmed also by the same Author, that the Vine beareth twice a year, that some fruits or other are gathered in it at all times of the year; and that a piece of ground of four cubits square, was usually rented out at so many Denarii: by which account, (as the learned Budens doth compute it) an Acre of that ground might be worth yearly, 12800 of the Roman Sesterii, which make 320 Crowns. An infinite and unparalleled increase of the Fruits of the Earth, if the Author were not out in his valuation.

The people are of a dusky colour, but inclining to blackness: much of the same nature with the Arabians, by whose numerous Families formerly they were overspread, but the Africans of the two the better: active of body, well skilled in Horsemanship, but impatient of labour, covetous of honour, inconstant, crafty, and unfaithful: studious in matters of their Law, and in some of the Liberal Sciences, especially Philosophy and the Musick, of which in many parts of the Mahometan Countries they are admitted to be Readers. They are also said to be fitly of gate, exceeding distrustful, in their hate implacable, and jealous of their Women beyond all compare. The Women of a comely body, and well featured, beautiful in blackness, of delicate soft skins, and in their habit and apparel beyond measure sumptuous: so drest, to make themselves more amiable in the eyes of their Husbands; for otherwise not permitted to stir abroad, and seldom to see any body but those of their own houses.

The Language spoken at the present in most of the Mauritane Towns, except those of Effse and Morocco, is the Arabick Tongue. In those two Kingdoms, and most part of the Country-Villages, the Punic, or old African, the ancient languages of the Country: the Punic spoken in all places where anciently the Carthaginians were of any power; the African (whichever it was) in the parts of Mauritania, not subject to them. Of the Latine there is no remainder, which though it was the language of the Roman Colonies, yet never could it spread so far as to extinguish or suppress the old natural Tongues: and in the Coloniae themselves so much degenerated in a short time, so barbarously and imperfectly spoken; that a Sister of the Emperor Severus, who lived in Leptis, a Roman Colony, coming to Rome to see her Brother, spoke it so incongruously that the Emperor was ashamed to hear it. And though the Sermons of St. Augustine, an African Bishop, were preached in Latin, because preached in Hippo his Episcopal See, which was then a Colony of the Romans; yet he confesseth, that he was sometimes fain to use such words as were not Latine, to be the better understood of his Congregation.

The Christian Faith was first planted in that part hereof which was called Africa Propria, by Ephantus, one of the 70 Disciples; by Dionysius in his Synopsis, affirmed to be the first Bishop of Carthage: In Mauritania, by S. Simmi the Apostle, surnamed Zelotes. Metaphrastes addeth, that S. Simon Peter preached here also, when by the Decree of Claudianus Caesar he was forced from Rome; and and at his going hence, left Crescent his Disciple to promote the work. But by whomsoever planted first, it found good increase, and was so propagated in short time over all this Country, that in the year 250, or before, there were in it above 90 Bishops; for so many were assembled in the Synod of Lafium; and in the year 398, when the faction of the Dionysii was of greatest power, we find no fewer than 214 Catholic Bishops met together in the Council of Carthage. Which as it is an argument of the great increase of Christianity in those parts of Africa; so it shews also, that the Church was in ill condition; so overpowered by the violence of that mighty faction, who had at least 70 Bishops of their own Opinion; that the Orthodox party was necessitated to increase the number of Bishops for fear of being over-balanced by the contrary side, if ever the difference should come to be examined in a public Meeting. These Bishops ranked into six Classes, according to the number of the African Provinces: the Bishops of each Province subject to their own Metropolitan, who in this Dioecesis (contrary to the usage of all other Churches) had the name of Primate; but all of them subordinate to the Primate of Carthage, originally invested with Patriarchal Jurisdiction over all these parts. Latius Julia est nostra Provincia; habet enim Numidiam, & Mauritaniam sibi coherentem, are S. Cyprian's words. Which shew, that Leo Africanus was a better Geographer, than an Historian or Divine. He would not else have told us in such positive terms, that these of Barbary remained in their old Idolatry, till 250 years before Mahomet's birth; at what time they received the Gospel, and not before. But the good man mistook the reviving of the Orthodox Faith, in the time of Justinian, after it had been long suppressed by the Andals of the Arian faction (who at one time banished hence 300 Catholic Bishops) for the first planting of the Gospel: otherwise not to be excused. But after this Review, it held not long, when suppressed by the Saracens, and so suppressed, that except it be in some few Towns possessed by the King of Spain, and the Crown of Portugal, there is no tract of Christianity to be discerned in all this Country; Mahometism being elsewhere universally embraced among them.

Amongst the men of most note for Souldiery, which have been born in this Country, we may reckon 1. Amilcar the Carthaginian, and his three Sons: 2. Annibal, 3. Asdrubal, and 4. Mago; men hardly to be paralleled in any Ages: 5. Maffius, King of the Numidians, one of their Contemporaries; and in the following times, 6. Septimius Severus, the Roman Emperor. Amongst those addicted to the Muses, those of most note, 1. Terenus, 2. Apuleius. But for Divines, no Region in the world afforded men of more civilities, nor better deserving of the Church: 1. Tertullian, 2. Cyprian, 3. Julius Africanus, 4. Arnobius, 5. Lactantius, 6. Vitorinus after 7. Optatus Milevitanus, 8. Victor, 9. Vulgentius, 10. Primasius. And above all, the most learned and divine S. Augustine, a man of such admirable abilities, and indefatigable industry, so constant a Defender of all Orthodox Doctrines against the Heretical of those times, that he deservedly got the name of Milani Hereticorum.

Principal Mountains of this Country besides Mount Atlas, (of which hereafter by it self) 1. Phœnx, 2. Hepzadaphus, and 3. Atlas minor in Mauritania Tingitana; 4. Cinabab, 5. Gans, 6. Maderubadus, and 7. those called Gariphi, in Casariensis; 8. Thamber, 9. Mompfrian, 10. Ufalatus, and 11. Zachabari, in Africa Propria. Of which, and others, we may speak more, if occasion be, in our description of the Provinces, in which they are. And for the Rivers of most note, though none of any long course in so narrow a Country, we have in Tingitana, 1. Sala, falling into the Atlantic, out of Atlas minor; 2. another of the same name, and the same exit also, but far more to the North, towards the Strait of Gibraltar; 3. Melchab, mollified by Sahit the Historian into Milchaba, and by him placed betwixt the Numidian and the Moor; 4. Malva, the boundary at this day betwixt the Kingdoms of Pesse and Algiers; 5. Phibath, of more fame than any, of which more anon: in Casariensis, 6. Nafabath, 7. Sifaria, and Sorbeth: in Africa Propria, or the Kingdom of Tunis, 8. Rubicatus, which issuing out of Mount Thamber, falleth into the Mediterranean near Hippo Regius; 9. Triton, which issuing out of the Hill called Ufaleus, and making the great Fcnn called Tritonia Palus, endeth its course also in the Mediterranean; and finally, 10. Bagradas, the greatest in all this tract, which rising out of Mount Atlas, first runneth towards the East, and then receiving from the Hill called Mompfrian the addition of another Stream, passeth directly Northward to the City of Utica, and there endeth its course.

Having thus laid together the chief Metes and Landmarks, I should now proceed to the description of the several Provinces hereof, as in other places. But because each part almost hath had for these later times its particular History, and that it is divided at the present into several Governments, and under the command of several Princes: I will here lay down so much of the Story of it as concerns the whole, before such division; and afterwards pursue the History and Geography of the several parts. And for the whole we are to know, that this Country was first peopled by Phœn the third Son of Cham: who leaving his Brother Mizraim well settled in the Land of Egypt, passed towards the West; and leaving Lebani his Nephew betwixt him and Mizraim, possessed himself of all the rest from the greater Syria to the Ocean. Remainers of whose name we find in the River Phœn, (by Plutarch called Phibath, with but little difference, save that it favoureth more of the African roughness) near which Josaphus findeth a Region called the Country of Phœn, a Nation called the Phœnians: descended herein by S. Hieron, who speaking of this Regio Phœnensis in Mauritania, where the River Phibath is placed by Plutarch voucheth in general terms the testimony of old Writers, both Greek and Latine. So that of this there is no question to be made. Such Nations as descended of this Plantation, shall be hereafter spoke of in their several Provinces. Governed at first by the Chiefs of their several Families; but in the end, reduced under the Command of the Kings of Mauritania and Numidia, and the State of Carthage. The two last, Natives of this Country, of the Race of Phœn; the last descended also of the Seed of Cham, their common Parent, by the line of Canaan: who on the Conquest of this Country by the Children of Israel, transported to seek new Dwellings, and having force of Ships to transcend themselves and their Families; settled in the maritime parts of Mauritania, and Africa, properly so called. For, that the people of those parts, though lost into other Names and Families, were anciently of a Canaanitic or Phœnician Race, may be made apparent, 1. By the remains of their Language, the Phœnic or Phœnician, and old Hebrew Tongue, differing only in the Dialect and Pronunciation. Secondly by the name Pani, or Phœni, little differing from that of the Phœnic. 3ly, By this testimony of S. Augustine, who telleth us in the Comment on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, begun but reinforced by him: Interrogati Ruffici nostri quid sint, respondunt, Punici Chanani; that is to say, That when any of the Inhabitants of this Country (he himself was one) were asked what they were, they answered, Canaanites. 4ly, We find in Herodotus, how Cambyses had totally conquered Egypt, intending a War against the Carthaginians, who were then a State (it seemeth) of some power: But the Phœnicians, being the only Sea-faring men Cambyses then had, absolutely denied to be employed in that Service; they being sprung from the same Tree that the Carthaginians were. 5ly, We read in Procopius, (out of which it is cited by Eusebius Scholasticus) how on two Marble-Pillars, situate high unto Lingia, or Tanger, there was in the Phœnician Language and Character engraved, Nos fugimus a facie Jothuah predonis, filii Nave; that is to say, We flee from the face of that Robber Jothuah, the Son of Nave. The feeling of this people there, a great incitement questionless unto Dido to come thither also: who feared as much danger from her Brother Pygmalion King of Tyre, whose hands had been imbrued in the blood of her Husband; as as the others did from the Sword of Jothuah. Gathering together all her Treasures, which were very great, accompanied with her Brother Barea, and her Sister Anna, the fair fall for Africk; and landing in the Bay, where after stood the City of Carthage, she obtained leave to build a Fort of no greater bigness than the could compass round with an Oxen hide. This the beginning of that City; hence the name of Byssa, which at first it had. First founded in, or about the year of the World 3070, which was about 144 years after the building of Salomon's Temple; 143 years before the building of Rome, and about 290 years from the destruction of Troy. By which account (I note this only by the way) it is impossible that Dido, or Elisa (for by both these names we find her called) should ever see the face of Æneas, unless it were in picture, or imagination; and therefore as impossible the should either fall in love with him, or be got with Child by him, or finally kill her self on her being forsaken. All which being delivered by Virgil in his excellent Poem, did for long time obtain a general belief with most sorts of men. Hercutito consenteth Aufonius, who honouring the Statue of his abused Princess with an Epigram of 18 Verses, among others, gives us these four.

*Invida cur me simulasti Musæ Maronem,
Fingeret ut nostræ damna pudicitie?
Vos namque Historici (Lectores) credite de me,
Quam qui furta domo, concubitusque cautos.*

Why didst thou stir up Virgil, envious Muse,
Falsely my name and honour to abuse?
Oh me! let Historics be heard, not those,
Who to the World Joves thefts and lusts expose.

Credible it is, Æneas being driven on the Coast of Africk, was by some Prince there courteously entertained, as a man whose fame had been his Harbinger: but why the fiery should be kindled on Dido, I see not. Perhaps the unfortunate death of this Queen, who laid violent hands on her self, gave occasion to the Poet to say, that it was for the love of Æneas: Whereas it was indeed to avoid the lust and fury of Larbas, a potent King of the Gentils, a powerful Nation neighbouring those parts of Africa in which Carthage stood, who violently desired to have his pleasure on her.

But to proceed; This City thus founded in a place commodious for Trade and Merchandise, in short time grew exceeding wealthy. And having wealth enough to hire Merenary Souldiers (of which the needy Mauritanians, and Numidians, did afford good store) they conquered all the Sea Coasts from Cyrene to the Straits of Hercules (now called the Straits of Gibraltar): and so much also towards the South, as was worth the conquering; within which space possessed of 300 Cities. Grown to such height, that all the African Kings and Princes, and amongst them the Kings of Numidia and Mauritania were at their devotion: They began to cast their eyes on Scilly, a wealthy Island, lying near unto their Coasts; which questionless they had possessed, if the Romans, envious of their greatness, and fearing their Neighbourhood, had not took upon them the defence of the Mamentines, and under that pretence got some footing in it. The end of this War, after many brave exploits on both sides, was the driving the Carthaginians out of Scilly, their abandoning all the Islands betwixt them and Italy, and the payment of 32000 Talents, amounting to about two Millions of Crowns. And such end had the first Punic War, managed for the most part in Scilly. During which time, and the first War there managed by the Carthaginians, Africk it self was twice invaded; first, by Agathocles Tyrant of Syracusa, (or so commonly called) and afterwards by Regulus a Roman General, but with no other great success than the spoil of the Country. The second followed not long after, but the Scene was altered; begun in Spain, prosecuted in Italy, and ended in Africk. Begun by Annibal the Son of Amilcar, descended from Barea the Brother of Dido or Elisa; who having conquered a great part of Spain, and thereby both increased his reputation and experience, conducted his victorious Army through Gaul, and over the Alpes, into Italy it self; defeated the Armies of the Romans, and drew some of their Confils: So prosperous in the Battle of Canne, where the whole strength of Rome was broken, that had he followed his good fortune, and made use of his Victory, he might within four or five days after have dined in the Capitol. Having for 18 years together held them work in Italy, he was called home to defend Africk from the Forces of Scipio; who having driven the Carthaginians out of Spain, had very prudently translated the War to Carthage. The issue was, that on the 10th of the battle of Nadagara, the Carthaginians were necessitated to submit themselves to the will of the Conqueror; that is to say, to deliver up all their Elephants, together with all their Ships and Gallies excepting ten; to make no War without leave of the Romans, to pay for the Charges of the War 10000 Talents; and such other extremities. So ended the second Punic War, A. U. C. 602. And the third followed not long after, not any way occasioned by those of Carthage, but out of the inveterate hatred of the People of Rome, who would not think themselves safe whilst that City stood; and therefore sent another Scipio to lay siege unto it. By whom, after a long and stout resistance, it was at last taken and destroyed. The Treasure which was found in it, notwithstanding their former losses, and the low estate it was reduced to, besides what was consumed by fire, and referred by the Souldiers, amounting to 470000 pound weight of silver, which cometh to a Million, four hundred and ten thousand pounds of our English Money.

Such end had Carthage, and therewith all the rest of the States of Africa, who though in hatred to the Carthaginians they had armed against her, and aided the Romans in these Wars; yet they soon found their own Fortunes buried in the self-same Grave. Subverted one after another, as occasion was, they became all subject unto Rome; their Kingdoms and Estates turned to Roman Provinces. Of these were reckoned seven in all, that is to say, 1. Africa Propria, called also Zangitana, and Proconsularis, 2. Byzacena, 3. Tripolitana, 4. Numidia, 5. Mauritania Casariensis, 6. Stifensis, and 7. Tingitana. Of which the last (I know not why) was laid to the Dioecesis of Spain, called therefore Hispānia Transfretana, Spain on the other side of the Sea, by some elder Writers: the other fix made up the Dioecesis of Africk, subordinate to the Præfidiū Prætorio for Italy, who had here his Picarius, or Lieutenant. In this condition it continued, till subdued by the Vandals, a German Nation, inhabiting beyond the Elb, on the Coast of the Baltick; where now lie the Dukedoms of Mecklenburg and Pomerania. Their memory still retained there in the title of those Princes, who call themselves Duces Vandalorum; and in the Confederacy of the Hanse-towns, called by some Latine Writers, Civitates Vandalice. A Nation of great power, and numbers, (the Burgundians being only a part of the) one of the five into which Pliny doth divide the Germans. In the 11th year of the Empire of Acadius and Honorius, they were invited into Gaul, by the treacherous practices of Stilico, Lieutenant of the Western Empire; and after an abode of three years, passed into Spain, together with the Suevi, and Alani, their Associates. But after 18 years, the Goths made that place too hot for them also. So that they could not but willingly accept the offer of Bonifacius, the Emperor Vicegerent in Africa: who summing up to see his Office bestowed on Caesarius, an unworthy man, and his enemy, betrayed the Country to these Vandals, in the last year of the life and reign of Gundericus, an Avian in Religion, as were the rest of the Nation, to which induced by their Neighbourhood and acquaintance with the Goths: Which Hæresie as they brought with them into Africk, driving thence all the Orthodox Christians, so they continued in it till their extinction.

The Vandal Kings of AFRICA.

- A.C.
412 1. Gundericus, who first invaded Gaul, Spain, and Africk, 16.
428 2. Geisericus, who at the request of Eudoxia, the Widow of Valentinian, invaded Italy, and sacked the City of Rome, the Spoil whereof for fourteen days he gave to his Soldiers: but at the request of Eudoxia, whom he afterwards married, he did not burn it. This Eudoxia was Wife to the Western Emperor Valentinian; who having a mind to a Lady of Rome, the Wife of one Maximian, he cunningly slipped the Ring of Maximian off his finger, and by that token sent for the Lady to the Court, and when she was come, ravished her. To revenge this disgrace, Maximian slew Valentinian, made himself Emperor and forced Eudoxia to be his Wife. But the storming a Match so unequal to her high Birth, and having some inclining of her Husband's death, sent for Geisericus into Italy. This Geisericus conquered Carthage, and Hippone, and reigned 48 years.
476 3. Honorius Son of Geisericus. 7.
484 4. Gundebundus, Son to Genzo, the Brother of Honorius, 15.
499 5. Transimundus, Brother to Gundebundus. 24.
523 6. Hildericus, the Son of Honorius, deposed by 530 7. Gimir, the Son of Genzo, one of the Descendants of Geisericus; overcome by Belisarius a worthy and politic Leader, whom the Emperor Justinian employed in that Service.

And thus ended the Kingdom of the Vandals, (having continued in Spain and Africa 146 years) by the valour of Belisarius. Who after this good Service, was employed by Justinian against the Goths, then reigning in Italy; against whom he proceeded very fortunately: but being, as I know not what envy, called to Constantinople, his eyes were put out, and he was forced to beg his Bread at the Gate of the Temple of S. Sophia. A bad reward for so good a Servant. But to go on, Justinian having regained Africk, to honour his new Conquest, exempted it from the command of the Prætorio-Præfidiū of Italy, to which formerly subject; and increasing the number of the African Provinces by the addition of the Isle of Sardinia, made it a Præfecture of it self: appointing his Præfidiū

Prætorio Africa to reside in Carthage, as the chief City of his Charge; which he then also raised to a Consular Province, having in former times been Præconsular only. But long it held not in this state: For in the year 647, the Romans were finally expelled by Huchba famous Leader, whom Ofmen, the third Caliph of the Saracens, had designed to this Service. Africk, from that time forwards, reckoned amongst the Provinces of the Saracenic or Mahometan Empire. But in the end, the Authority of the Caliphs growing less and less, and every one of their Sultans or Provincial Officers, getting what he could for himself; this Country was distracted in many Kingdoms and Principalities, but all at last reduced to four of most confederation: that is to say, the Kingdoms of 1. Tunis, 2. Tremesin or Algiers, 3. Fesse, and 4. Mureca. To the Geography and History whereof we do now proceed; adding hereto in the fifth place, the Isles of Barbary.

1. TUNIS.

The Kingdom of TUNIS (in Latine called Regnum Tunitanum) hath on the East, Cyrene on the West, the Kingdom of Algiers, or Tremesin; on the North, the Mediterranean; on the South, Mount Atlas. So called from Timis, the chief City of it; extended all along the Coast of the Mediterranean for the space of 800 miles or thereabout, but the breadth not answerable.

The Country towards the East, barren and destitute of water; but in the Western parts, sufficiently plentiful of Corn and other Fruits, and generally well fit with Trees. The People more patient of labour than the rest of Barbary, and for that cause perhaps more healthy: but questionable of so good constitution, that they live commonly to great age, unless a violent death prevent them; and are not much afraid of Sickness, or much troubled with it.

It contains in it the two whole Provinces of Africa Propria (or Africa Minor, as some call it) and the Nu-midia of the Romans; called since Nu-midia Antiqua, to difference it from the present Nu-midia, lying on the other side of Mount Atlas. The principal Mountains of which Countries, besides those spoken of already, were, 1. Audax, 2. Bazania, 3. Cinnat, 4. Dier, or the Hills of Jupiter, 5. Gilius, by some named Gigion, and 6. those called Thazibi. Rivers of most esteem with them, though not much with others, besides those mentioned before before. 1. Amphage, now called Calla, and by some Sat Gomar, which divideth this Kingdom from that of Tremesin; 2. Carada; 3. Cyniphus, issuing from the Hills called Zuchabarus, and falling into the Sea, not far from Tripolis. Besides which, there were some great Lakes: the chief whereof, 1. Hipponeis, near Mount Cinnat; 2. The Lake of Pallars, or that called Palus Tritonis, where Minerva was said to have shewed her self the Inventress of Spinning and of Oyl, and for that much worshipped by this people; 3. Sylura, another great Lake; but not so famous as the former, because not honoured by a Goddess.

The whole divided by the Romans into these four parts, viz. 1. Africa especially so called, lying on the Sea, from the River Amphage to the lesser Syrtis; 2. Tripolitana, from the lesser Syrtis to the greater; 3. Nu-midia, lying on the West of Zengitana, or Africa Propria; And 4. Byzacenae, so called from Byzacium, or Byzacina, a chief City of it: the Territory whereof so extremely fruitful, that 400 Ears of Corn were sent to Rome in the time of Augustus, and 360 in the time of Domitian Nero, growing on one stalk. But this division being long since worn out of memory, it is divided at the present into the Provinces of 1. Ezzab, 2. Tripolis, 3. Tunis, 4. Constantina, 5. Bugia.

1. EZZAB, is that part of this Kingdom which lieth next to Cyrene: A small Region, and not very fruitful; yet the Inhabitants hereof are conceived to be rich, (the richer, in regard they are free from Tributes;) their wealth not rising from the Commodities of their own Country, which affordeth them little else besides Dates and Olives; but from such Merchandise which they buy of the Venetians, and sell to the Nu-midians. The richest, those of Mesrata, (a little Province of this Tract) which lieth near the Sea. Towns it hath some, but none of note: the chief of which, 1. Mesrata, 2. Sibeca, both upon the Sea; of which the first gives name unto that little Province spoken of before. Of more note in former times was Phileni Villa, situate on the greater Syrtis, near the Promontory then called Hippi, but now Cabo de Surta; memorable for the adjoining Altars called Phileni Ara, erected by the Carthaginians upon this occasion. Some Controversies being grown betwixt those of Carthage and Cyrene, about their Bounds; it was agreed, that two men at a set hour should be sent out of each City towards the other; and where they met, there to be fixed the Meer-stone of their several Territories. The Phileni, two Brothers nominated for Carthage, were so quick of foot, that they had gotten a good way into the Country of the Cyrenenses before they were met; wherewith the Cyrenenses, much enraged, put to them this choice, either to go back again, or to die in the place. This last accepted by the Phileni, who preferred the common good of their Country before their own, for preservation of whose name and honour to succeeding Ages, the grateful Carthaginians did erect these Altars.

2. West of the Province of Ezzab, lieth that of TRIPOLIS, which together with Ezzab, made that Province which the Romans called Tripolitana. Not much more fruitful than the other, except in Barley, but more commodiously seated in regard of the Sea, which is here more safe for Navigation: the former lying wholly on the greater Syrtis. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Lepis Magna, so called, to distinguish it from another, but of less note, and therefore called Lepis Parva, situate in the (now) Province of Tunis. A Town of so great wealth and Trade, that it was worth a Talent daily to the Car- thaginians. 2. Euphranta, called also Pyrgos Euphranta, from some strong Tower in it on the Western bank of the greater Syrtis. 3. Cinterna, on the Eastern side of the River Cyniphus. 4. Gabis, the utmost City of this Province Westward; the fame which Pliny calls Tacapa, situate at the fall of the River Triton into the lesser Syrtis. 5. Sabratia; and 6. Hena; not else observable, but that together with Lepis Magna they made up that one City, which the Romans called from thence Tripolis. 7. Tripolis, founded by the Romans, and by them peopled with Colonies from those three Cities before mentioned. A City of great Name and Riches, till destroyed by the Saracens. By whom rebuilt, adorned with many fair Temples, Colleges, and Hospitals; and flourishing in much Wealth and Lustre, it became a Kingdom of it self, but subject to the King of Tunis, till taken by the Gensse with a Fleet of 20 Sail, and by them sold to the King of Fesse. Recovered not long after by the King of Tunis, it came once more to have a King of its own; till by the valour of Peter of Navarre, it was conquered for Ferdinand the Catholic, the first Monarch of Spain: whose Nephew Charles the 5th, conferred it on the Knights of St. John of Hierusalem, then expelled from Rhodes: whom the Turks under Sinan Baja General of Selmus the Second, dispossessed by force, An. 1551. Since that the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg, for these African Provinces; and made an usual retreat for Pirates, who infect these Seas, and do much mischief to the Coasts of Sicily, Italy, and others of the Christian Countries.

3. The Province of TUNIS, lying Westward to that of Tripolis, taketh up so much of this Kingdom, as anciently contained the Province of Byzacena; and so much of the Roman Africa, as lieth on the East of the River called Guadilbarbar, the Hipponeis Lacus of the ancient Writers. The Country anciently so fruitful, that it yielded usually an increase of an hundred and fifty fold: For proof of which, besides the testimony of approved Authors, the wonderful if not prodigious Ears of Corn, which before we heard of, may serve sufficiently. Now indigent, and so unprovided of all Grain for the use of their Families, that they are fain to furnish themselves of other places: the people not daring to mature or sow their Land, for fear of the Arabians, who ever and anon fall into these parts, and spoil what they meet with.

Places of most note in it, in the elder times, 1. Adrumetum, or Adrumis, now called Machometta, once a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Byzacena; by consequence, in the times of Christianity, and Archbishops See: walled and repaired by the Emperor Justinian, and by his Command called Justiniana. 2. Zama, the incamping place of Annibal, before his battle with Scipio. 3. Nadagara, memorable for the great battle betwixt the two renowned Generals of Rome and Carthage; not parallel'd since their own times, nor in those before them. In which the great Controversie between those Cities being to be tried, the fortune of the day fell unto the Romans: For though Annibal shewed his singular judgment in ordering his Soldiers, as Scipio could not but acknowledge; yet being far the weaker in Horse, and by an Order of the Senate of Carthage, constrained to fight in a place of disadvantage, he could do no marvels: The Romans, with the loss of no more than 1500 of their own men, killing 20000 of the Carthaginians in the Fight and Chase. 4. Salona, the first place took by Scipio, after the landing of his Army. 5. Utica, a Tyrian Colony, beautified with an Haven capable of the greatest Ships; much spoke of in the Wars of Carthage, and and memorable for the death of Cato (hence surnamed Uticensis) who here slew himself, for fear of falling into the hands of Cæsar. It is now called Biserta. 6. Byzacium, seated in a liberal and fruitful soil, as was shown before; whence the Province had the name of Byzacena. 7. Rafiquum, made by Cæsar the seat of his War in Africa, against the Sons and Faction of Pompey; as memorable in the times succeeding, for being the Episcopal See of St. Fulgentius. 8. Thyrus, remarkable for the Tragedy of the Gardiari: Of which the Father in this City was saluted Emperor by the Soldiers, in hatred to Maximianus their Emperor, whose Procurator they had slain in a tumult: but his party being discomfited by Capellianus, whom Maximianus sent against him, and his Son killed in the defeat; but upon the hearing of the News, he here hanged himself. 9. Hippagreta, on a great Lake betwixt Carthage and Utica; one of the Towns which held out longest for the Mercenaries, in their desperate Rebellion against the Carthaginians; by which the Estate of that great City was in danger of ruin at the end of the first Punic War. 10. Carthage, once the Lady and Mistress of Africa, situate in the bottom of a safe and capacious Bay, the entrances whereof were very strongly fortified both by Art and Nature, environed with the Sea, except upon one side only, where joynted unto the Land by a narrow Isthmus, about two miles and an half in breadth, in compass 24 miles, but measuring by the outward Wall, it was 45. For without the Wall of the City it self there were three Walls more, betwixt each of which there were three or four Streets, with Vaults under ground of 30 foot deep; wherein they had place for 300 Elephants and all their Fodder, with Stables over them for 4000 Horses, and all their Provender, and Lodging in those out-dreets for the Riders of the said Horses, and for 20000 Foot besides, which never came within the City to annoy or pester it. On the South-side stood the Castle called Byza, which took up two miles and an half in compass: First built by Dido, on that ground which she obtained of the Libyans, when she got leave to buy only so much Land of them, as she could compass round about with an Oxes Hide. In that, the sumptuous Temple of their ancient Deities, Juno, Apollon, Æsculapius, Belus. On the West side a standing Pool made of the Sea-water, let into it by a narrow a passage, that there was but 70 foot open for the Sea to enter: On which they had a flatly Arsenal, with their Ships and Gallies riding by it. Of the Foundation and Affairs of this mighty City we have spoke already. The Government of it first by Kings, those absolute enough at first, afterwards limited by the Senats; and finally made merely titular by the power of the people: a which unproporcionable mixture is much condemned by Aristotle, in the 2. of his Politics. Their Territories, before the second Punic War, when they were at the greatest, extended on the Sea-coasts of the Mediterranean, from the Greater Syria to the Streights, and unto the River Iberus, for the space of 2000 miles in length: in their Revenue, answerable, and readily brought in, by reason of their infinite Trading. Which made the Roman People think themselves unsafe, whilst this City stood. Relolved on the destruction of it, they sent against it Lu. Marcius, and M. Manlius, their two Consuls, with a puissant Army; to whom the Carthaginians willingly delivered up their Arms and Shipping, contracting only for the preservation of the City it self, which was faithfully promised. But when they had withal given up the Sons of their Principal men, to be sent to Rome for Pledges of their future Loyalty; they were told, that a City confined not in Walls, but in Laws and Government. These, with the Corporation, should remain as formerly; the Town to be removed ten miles further off, where there was no Sea to thrive and grow rich upon. Enraged herewith, it was resolved to abide the utmost: but they wanted necessities for resistance. That want supplied for want of Iron to make Arms with Gold and Silver; the Houses pulled down to furnish them with Timber to build a Navy; the noble Ladies cutting off the Hair of their Heads, to make Ropes and Cordage, 25000 Women came to defend the Walls. But the fatal moment being come, a second Scipio is sent thither to dispatch the Work; by whom at last the Town was taken; and for 17 days together consumed with fire: The Queen and multitudes of the People burning themselves in the Temple of Æsculapius, because they would not fall into the hands of the Romans, reedified by Julius Cæsar, and made a Colony, it recovered some part of her former lustre; but so, that her chief glory was rather to be sought for in her ancient, than her present Fortunes. Populi Romani Colonia, olim Imperii ejus pertinax emula, & prætorum excidio rerum, quam esse prætorum clarior, was her Character in the times of Pompeius Mela. But in the last estate, accounted for the Metropolis of the Diocesis of Africa, the Residence of the Vicarius or Lieutenant-General, and the See of the chief Primate of the African Churches; who had 164 Bishops under him in that one Province wherein Carthage stood. Destroyed in the succeeding time by the Vandals, and after that by the Saracens; it revived again, and had the reputation of a City of no mean importance, till the year 1270; at what time being forced by the French, under Lewis the 9th. and thereupon deserted by its old Inhabitants, it began to languish, and was at last reduced to nothing but a few scattered Houses, not above five and twenty Shops, one Temple; all the rest a ruine. So truly said the ancient Poet:

Sic patet exemplis Oppida posse mori.

Thus by Examples do we see,
That Towns may die as well as we.

Of chief note at the present, 1. Tunis, supposed to be the Themisa, or Thimisa of Ptolemy; of small account till the last destruction of Carthage, by whose fall it rose. Situate not far from the Ruines of that famous City, in compass above five miles, and in that compass said to contain 10000 households. Of great Traffick, and well frequented by the Merchants of foreign Nations; chiefly from Genna and Venice. Remarkable in the Story of the Holy Wars, for the Sieges and Successes of two of our English Princes; that, namely, of King Edward the Fifth, in his Fathers time; and that of Henry the Fourth, then but Earl of Darby: by both which (though the last reserved only under the Command of the French) the City was compelled to a Compulsion. Lewis the 9th. commonly called St. Lewis, dying at the first Siege of it. 2. Goleta, a strong Fort, built for defence of the Haven of Tunis, in a demy-Island, divided from the main Land by two narrow passages, but so that it commands them both. Taken, but not without extreme difficulty by Charles the 5th. An. 1535. together with the Turkish Navy riding in the Lake bay by it; but again recovered by Charles the 5th. 40 years after, An. 1574. 3. Cairuan, built by Huchas who first conquered Africa for the Saracens, in a sandy plain, about 100 miles from Tunis, and 36 from any Defart, about the Sea, to secure himself from any invasion, which the commodiousness of the Sea might bring upon him. Adorned by the first Founder of it, with an admirable Temple raised on Pillars of Marble: who placed also in it a College of Priests, and made it the chief Residence of his Posterity for the space of 170 years, who reigned here under the great Caliphs, as the Sultans of Africa. Destroyed by the Arabians, in the 424 year of their Hegira, but regained from them by the King of Morocco, and still of such esteem amongst these Mohometans, that their chief men are brought hither to be buried from all parts of the Country, hoping by the Prayers of those Priests to find a shorter way to Heaven, than in other places.

4. More Westward yet lies the Province named CONSTANTINA, so called from Constantine the chief City of it. Extended from the Lake Hippagreta, now named Gualdibarbar, to Constantine a Mountain bordering on Bagia, which I conceive to be the same with Mont Arctus in Ptolomy. The soil hereof said to be very rich and fruitful both for Corn and Cattel, yielding abundance of Fruits, and great store of Butter. Rabricatus, by Orfius called Ordath, now Ludg, the chief River of it.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1. Tabraca, on the East; and 2. Hippo Regius, on the Western bank of Rabricatus: both Roman Colonies, but this last most famous, in being the Episcopal See of renowned St. Augustine. 3. Bona, the birth-place of that Father, built by the Romans about a hundred miles from the Sea; but situate in a large Plain, containing 40 miles in length, 25 in breadth: so Rich and Fertile, that the Town flourisheth to this day; adorned with a sumptuous Mosque, and never without the Company of Merchants coming from Genna, Tunis, and the Isle of Zerby, for their Fruits and Butter. 4. Thuburnica, another Colony of the Romans. 5. Sicca Veneria, another Town of the same nature; by Solinus called Veneria only, and by Pliny, Sicca. 6. Culena, another of the Roman Colonies, by the Moors now called Cucutina, but Constantine by the Latines, and most Nations else, now the chief City of this Province, situate near a Mountain of the same name, near the edge of Bagia. An ancient City, but containing still 8000 Families, many sumptuous Buildings; amongst which they exchange for Dates, or Slaves, who are here good Merchandise. The City for the most part fenced about with high craggy Rocks; and where those want, with strong walls, of a great height, and most exquisite workmanship, declaring the antiquity of it. A further Argument whereof may be a fair Triumphal Arch not far from the City, and some Hot Baths, after the manner of the Romans.

5. Most Westward lieth the Province of BUGIA, extended from Mount Constantine to the River Amphaga, now called Cholo, or Sef-Gennar: which with so much of Constantine, as lieth on the West side of Rabricatus, made up that Province which the Romans called by the name of Numidia. The length hereof 150 miles on the Mediterranean, the breadth not above half so much. Narrower than Mauritania, as is said by Pliny; Sed ditior & magis culta, but the richer of the two, and the better peopled. The Country of a far soil, plentiful both in Fruits and Corn, but most fit for Pasturage, to which the people were so addicted, that many of them cared not for building Houses, (instead whereof they used the Hold of a Ship with the Keel turned upwards) but removed from the place to another, as their Pastures failed them. From thence called Nomades by the Grecians, and rē rē rē, signifying to feed or graze. The people of good metal, swift of Foot, and well skilled in Horsemanship; but better in the Onset, and to give a Charge, than in standing to it; such as the wild Arabians are now said to be.

Chief Towns hereof (besides Thuburnica, Culena, Bona, Hippo, spoken of before, belonging to Numidia, though not to Bagia) 1. Bagia, built by the Romans on the side of a lofty Mountain looking into the Sea; by some conceived to have been the Thuburnica of Ptolemy, now the chief City of this Province; adorned with many sumptuous Mosques, some Monasteries and Colleges for Students in the Law of Mabomet, and many fair Hospitals for relief of the Poor; fenced also with a strong Castle. Secured by the strength whereof, and growing rich by the fruitfulness of the situation, the Citizens began to grow proud and wanton, working much mischief to the Spaniards by their Gallies, which they had at Sea; till taught more modesty by Peter of Navarre a Spanish Captain, An. 1508. by whom the Town was taken, and the people plundered. 2. Cholo, upon the Sea-side, the Cholops Magna (as I take it) of Ptolemy; reported for a wealthy City. 3. Nicaus, seated towards Mount Atlas in a pleasant and delightful Country: which though interperched with many Hills, yet being those Hills are clothed with Woods, yield them good store of Goats and Horses, and feed the Vallies with fresh Springs, which do issue from them; they rather add than detract any thing from the pleasures of it. 4. Madama, by some called Madurus, the birth-place of Apuleius. 5. Tundramm, another of the Roman Colonies. 6. Cirta, or Cirta Julia, the Metropolis of Numidia, when a Roman Province, and formerly the Seat-Royal of Syphax King of the Masfessi, within whose Country it was reckoned in former times, though afterwards laid into this Province. Situate near the mouth of the River Amphaga, and memorable for the Tragedy of Sophonisba, the Daughter of Adribalus of Carthage; a Lady of most exquisite beauty, and yet carried more Charms in her Tongue than in her Eyes. Employed first unto Masfissa King of the Numidians, but after, upon the Reason of State, married unto Syphax, who being took Prisoner by his Rival, and brought to Cirta, the Lady upon hopes of liberty and honour both, bestowed her self on her first Lover: but Scipio fearing lest that marriage might withdraw Masfissa from the Roman party, caused the Lady to be seized on; which Masfissa not being otherwise able to prevent or remedy, sent her a Cup of Poyson, which she drank, and died.

Of these Numidians there is much mention in the Stories of Rome and Carthage; employed by this last City in all their Wars, both in Spain, Italy, and Sicily. Siding at last with Scipio against that State, they did good Service to the Romans in the weakening and destruction of that City, whose fall they did not long survive: first conquered in the War of Jugurth; after the death of Juba, made a Roman Province. Their Kings, as far as I can trace the succession of them, follow in this Order.

The Kings of the NUMIDIANS.

1. Gala, the Father of Masfiniffa.
2. Defalers, the Brother of Gala; according to the Law of the Country, which gave the Crown unto the Brother, not the Son of the former King, (like the Law of Tamir in Ireland) succeeded Gala.
3. N. N. a Son of Defalers, in the absence of Masfiniffa, then serving under the Carthaginians in the Wars of Spain, possessed himself of the Throne: slain not long after by a Rebel.
4. Masfiniffa, Son of Gala, recovered the Kingdom of his Father; but again ousted by Syphax and the Carthaginians, betwixt whom and Masfiniffa, touching Sophoniba, there was deadly feud. Aided by Scipio and the Romans, with whom associated against Carthage, he not only recovered his own Kingdom, but was gratified with the greatest part of that which belonged to Syphax. A professed Enemy to Carthage, (the final ruine whereof he lived to see) till the time of his death, being then ninety years of Age.
5. Miciffa, the Son of Masfiniffa, of whom nothing memorable.
6. Jugurth, the Son of Masfiniffa, one of the brethren of Miciffa, having wickedly made away the two Sons of Miciffa, usurped the Kingdom, and manifestly withstood the Romans, whose attempts sometimes by force, sometimes by subtilty but chiefly by money and bribes, he overthrew and made frustrate: Et fuit in Jugurtha (saith Florus) quod post Annibalem timeretur. At last being broken by Metellus, vanquished by Marius, and by Boecbus delivered into the hands of Sylla, he was by Marius led in Triumph to Rome. In this Triumph was carried 3700 pound weight in Gold; in Silver-wedges, 5775 pounds weight; and in ready Coin, 28900 Crowns: it being the custom of the Romans in their Triumphs, to have carried before them all the Riches and Money, which they had brought out of the conquered Countries, to put into the common Treasury.
7. Hiempsal, Son of Boecbus King of Mauritania, gratified for his Fathers treachery in betraying Jugurth, with the Kingdom of Numidia; Relieved Marius in his exile.
8. Hiarbar, another of the Maurian faction, preferred to the Numidian Crown, but vanquished and deprived by Pompey, at that time one of Sylla's Captains.
9. Hiempsal II. preferred by Pompey to this Kingdom.
10. Juba, the Son of Hiempsal the second, who siding with Pompey against Cæsar in the Civil Wars, gave a great Overthrow to Curio, one of Cæsar's Lieutenants; Curio himself slain, his whole Army routed, such as were taken Prisoners murdered in cold Blood. But being discomfited by Cæsar, after Pompey's death, Numidia was made a Province of the Roman Empire.

Thusby the Fall of Carthage, and the death of Juba, came the whole Provinces of Africa Propria, and Numidia (containing the now Kingdom of Tunis) into the power of the Romans. Of which, the Nations of most note were the Nigritani, on the Eastern parts of the Mediterranean; the Machini, near the lesser Syrtis; the Lybia-

Phanices, and Medini, bordering upon Carthage; the Jonii, Navarre, and Certeis, taking up all the Sea-coasts of Numidia. Such as inhabited more Southwards on the back of these, not so much considerable: None of them to be said upon, but the Liby-Phanices, a mixt people of the old Libyans, and new Phanicians, as the Liby-Egyptians were of the said Libyans and the neighbouring Egyptians. The memory of all of them fo defaced by the violent inundation of the Arabians, that there is scarce any tract, or footsteps of them in all the Country. When conquered by the Saracens, they were at first subject to the Caliph, or Sultan of Cairo: after the Spoil whereof by the Arabians, subdued by Abdul Mumen King of Morocco, and by him added to that Kingdom. In the distractions of that State, made a peculiar Kingdom by some one of the Relicts of the Stock of the Almohades, who took unto himself the Title of King of Tunis, that City being his chief Seat. By him transmitted unto his Posterity, till the days of our Grand-Fathers: when Muleffer, one of the youngest Sons of Sultan Mahomet, having first murdered Maimon his eldest Brother, and put out the eyes of twenty of the reftaured Sovereignty. Rofetta, the only one of those Princes who escaped this Massacre, upheld a while by the Arabians, and by them deserted, was feign to put himself into the hands of Barbarossa, King of Algiers, and Admiral of the Turkish Navy; by whom he was carried to Constantinople, and so presented to Solymann, who under colour of retaining him to the Throne of his Fathers, conquered that Kingdom for himself: ousted thereof not long after by Charles the Fifth, appearing in favour of Muleffer, An. 1535. But the Tyrant did not long enjoy his ill-gotten Sovereignty, when his eyes were also put out by his own Son Amyda, and he committed to close Prison: Nor did Amyda enjoy it long, dispossessed by Abdamelech his Fathers brother. To Abdamelech Mahomet his Son succeeded; who being a Child, and his Affairs ill governed by his Tutors, and other Ministers of State, gave opportunity to Amyda to regain the Kingdom. During which broils the Turks again recovered footing, possessed themselves of a great part of the Country, and forced Amyda into exile, who flying to Don John of Austria, then newly victorious at Lepanto, invited him to the Conquest of Tunis, but he got little by the bargain; for Don John having subdued the Kingdom, conferred the same on Mahomet the Brother of Amyda, and carried Amyda in bonds to the Isle of Sicily, where he after died. Nor did Mahomet enjoy it long; for the next year the Turks besieged and took the City of Tunis, with the strong Fort of Gazetta, with all the other Ports and Holds of that Kingdom, made ever since a Province of the Turkish Empire: the poor King being carried prisoner to Constantinople at the end of the War, which was in the year 1574. and the last of Scimmes the Second.

2. TREMESEN, or ALGIERS.

THE Kingdom of TREMESEN is bounded on the East with the River Amsaga, (now called Major) by which parted from the Kingdom of Tunis; on the West with the Kingdom of Fesse and Morocco, from which separated by the River of Mahaba, or Malva. So called from Tremesin, or Telensin, the chief City of it. Called also the Kingdom of Algiers, from the City so named, sometimes the Seat-Royal of their Kings.

In

In the flourish of the Roman Empire, it had the name of Mauritania Cæsariensis; Mauritania, because of the Kingdom of Juba King of Mauritania, of which more anon; Cæsariensis, from Cæsarea the chief City of it, as that fo called in honour of Augustus Cæsar, on whom the King hereof depended. More anciently the Kingdom of the Masfylli, one of the most powerful Nations in all this tract, over whom reigned Syphax before-mentioned, called therefore by Sirado Masfyllia, with good propriety; and corruptly, Masfylla.

The Kingdom extended in length from East to West, for the space of 80 miles, but of breadth not answerable; is generally of the same nature (as to the Soil and Air) with the rest of Barbary: sufficiently fruitful towards the Sea, more barren and uncomfortable in Southern parts. But meanly peopled, by reason of the continual spoils made by the Arabians, who possess the Desarts; and the Cities of it much wasted by continual Wars. Nor have the People any peculiar Character, but what belongeth to others of these Africans also.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Gazgaya, inconveniently seated, as paying their accustomed Tributes to the King of Tremesin, their natural Prince; and contribution to the Arabians, who are here so numerous and powerful, that the Kings themselves of this small Kingdom were fain to buy their peace of them at exorbitant rates. 2. Tigrid, sometimes famous, and abounding with men of Learning; now almost forsaken, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of these Arabians. 3. Tobertit, inhabited for the most part by Weavers. 4. Bresch, the Inhabitants whereof use to paint black Crofs on their Cheek, and another on the Palm of their hands: the reason of which Custom they are ignorant of, but some conceive it to be a remembrance of their Christianity. 5. Ned-Roman, built, as the people do pretend, by the ancient Romans, as an Egyptine, or Abridgment of that mighty City, so which it is said to have some resemblance; and that imported by the name, which signifieth in their Language, Like to Rome, Perhaps the same which Ptolomy calleth Novum Oppidum, or the New-Town, then a Roman Colony. 6. Batha, once a great City, since decayed by Wars. 7. Oran, a noted Haven on the Mediterranean, said to contain no fewer than 10000 Families. Powerful at Sea, and much infesting with their Gallies the Coasts of Spain; till taken from Ferdinand the Catholic by Peter of Navarre, An. 1502. since which time peopled and possessed by the Spaniards: In vain besieged by the said Turks, An. 1562. Maliskouer, a fair and spacious Haven on the same Sea-coast, and taken by the said Peter of Navarre about the same time. 9. Hersagel, in former times of much esteem amongst the *Moor*s; but being destroyed by the King, or Sultan of Cairo, he bequeathed its greatness unto Tremesin, which after grew into renown. 10. Tremesin, once adorned with many beautiful Mosques, and five sumptuous Colleges, curiously wrought with Mosaic work. So populous, that there were reckoned in 16000 Families; and so well fortified, that it held out seven years against Jupha the great King of Fesse: not taken that, though they were very much weakened by Abulhasen, or Allobacen his Son and Successor, under a siege of 20 Months. By those, and the succeeding Troubles it hath undergone, exceedingly impaired both in strength and beauty. More ancient, 11. Siga, an African City, and a Roman Colony; the retiring place of Syphax and Boecbus, sometimes Kings of this Country. 12. Afsona, another Colony of the Romans. 13. Jol, the Seat-Royal of King Boecbus, after such time as this Country was conferred upon him by the Romans, on the taking of Jugurth: called afterwards Cæsarea, in honour of Augustus Cæsar, whose Fœdutaris the Kings hereof were then accounted; or as some say, in honour of Claudius Cæsar; by whom made a Colony: the Metropolis of it also when a Roman Province, which from hence was called Cæsariensis. Situate in, or near the place where Oran now stands, which seemeth to have risen out of the ruins of it. 14. Salde, a Roman Colony also, of whose ruins rose Algiers. 15. Algiers, by the Arabians called Geezin, now the chief City of this Kingdom, situate near the Sea, in the form of a Triangle, with an Haven, to it is neither great, nor safe from the North-winds, which do much annoy it. The buildings very beautiful; is the publick Baths, Bathes, and Mosques, exceeding sumptuous; every Trade having a several place, or Street by it self. But that which is the greatest grace of it, is the situation of the Houses standing in even streets one above another, upon the rising of a steep Hill; so that the Windows of one Street, or row of housing do all along over-look the tops of the other next beneath, which yieldeth to the Sea a most pleasant Prospect. A City not so large, as strong; and not so strong, as famous. Famous for being the receptacle and retreating place of the Turkish Pirates who dominion fo infinitely over the Mediterranean, to the great damage of the Merchants of all Nations that frequent those Seas. Famous also for the Shipwreck which Charles the Fifth here suffered who besieged this Town, lost in the Haven of it at one Tempest, besides an infinite number of Karvals and small Boats, divers strong Gallies, 140 Ships, a great many excellent pieces of Ordnance; such a number of gallant Horfes, that in Spain the race of Horfes for Service had like to have been lost for ever; and above half his Men. It long enjoyed the benefit of proprietary Princes, (but Mohamers, or Tributaries to the Kings of Tremesin), till such time as Selimes and Mahomet, falling out, made the first, and that an irreparable Breach in the Government. So Selimes, to strengthen his side, implored the aid of Hairacuss Babaroffa, a noble Pirate; who taking his best advantage, slew the disjointed Brethren, and settled himself in the Kingdom: which he had scarce made warm, when he left it to Hairadine Babaroffa's Brother, An. 1514. This Hairadine drove the Spaniards out of Begia, and was so renowned for Martial prowess, that Solymann the Magnificent made him Lord High-Admiral of his Fleet: Which Office, when to the prejudice of Christendom he had fortunately and for long time undergone, he died lamented, and made the Turk the Heir of his Kingdom; the Kingdom of Tremesin being made subject to the Turk, much about that time. 16. Tetian, and 17. Sargel, situate Westward of Algiers; Towns of Trade and Pyrracy.

The old Inhabitants of this Kingdom, when a Roman Province, were the Herpidiani, Taladuffi, Thaluffi, Machibii, Maccerebi, Clutine, and others of as little note; the most predominant Nation being the Masfylli, over whom (and in that over all the rest) reigned Syphax, spoken of before, unfortunately famous for his tragical love to Sophoniba: For whose sake, siding with the Carthaginians against the Romans, he was vanquished and sent Prisoner to Rome. His Kingdom given to Masfiniffa King of the Numidians, continued in his Line till the death of Jugurth, and then bestowed upon the Kings of Mauritania; part of whose Kingdom it was reckoned in the following times, till made a Province of the Empire by the Emperor Claudius. Won from the Romans by the Vandal, and then by the Saracens; it followed the fortunes of these last, while they stood and flourished: But growing into many distractions, and every Sultan, or Provincial Government shifting for himself, it became a Kingdom, under the title and title of the Kingdom of Tremesin. The Majesty of it much impaired by Abulhasen, or Allobacen King of Fesse, who brought it not long after an Abolition.

Com-

Command. Recovering after some short time its former liberty, it became a Kingdom once again, and to continue till the time of Abubeken: who incurring the hatred of his People, because by his supine neglect the Spaniards had furnished and taken Oran and Majalquivir, their two best Havens, made an easy passage for his Brother Abuizen into the Regal Diadem. Abuizen scarce well settled lost it to Hairaidin Barbardaz, An. 1515, and he to Charles the Fifth, by whom Abubeken was restored, becoming Huniger and Tributary to the Crown of Spain. But his Successor Abdalla, weary of the Spanish Scrivitude, put himself under the protection of Solyman the Magnificent, as a Prince of his own Religion; to whom at his decease, he left the possession of his Kingdom also: ever since subject to the Turky: whose Beglerbeg or Supreme Officer for these African Provinces, reside for the most part in Algiers, and hath 4000 Timariots under his Command.

3. FESSE, and MOROCCO.

These Kingdoms I have joyned in title, because united for the most part in the story and affairs thereof, and of late times making but one entire Estate under the Xeriff of Morocco: and therefore handled both together in the point of History, though of a different consideration in the way of Geography.

They contain in them the whole Country of Mauritania, truly and properly so called; divided anciently into Tingiana and Stifenfis; Cesariensis being naturally a Numidian Region, the Meslyli and the rest of the Inhabitants of it, of Numidian breed; not laid to Mauritania, nor accounted any part thereof, till the death of Jugurth; when given to Boecbus King herof, in regard of his Treason, for betraying that unhappy Prince into the hands of the Romans.

It took this name from the Mauri, the Inhabitants of it, whom that name was first given; the word Tania, signifying a Nation, being added to it; as in Britania, Lusitania, Aquitania, and perhaps some others; and the name of Mauri given them ante rem Mauri which signifies amongst other things obscure or black, by reason of the darkness of their Complexion. Accounted in their times an hardy, but a bloody people; careless of life, fearless of death; implacable if once offended, their thirst of Revenge not to be quenched but by Blood. Mauri sunt genus hominum sùpbe natura cedis acidissimum, nihilque non facile audens, & desperatis smiles, contemptu, viris & periculorum. A Character given of them in Herodian time, and it holds good still: notwithstanding the intermixture of Goths and Saracens incorporated into the same Nation with them, and passing by the same name in the Writers of the middle time. Post hæc Mauri totum Hispaniam & Provinciam Burgundiam, &c. Dominio suo municipiant, as my Author hath it; where by Moor we are to understand the Saracens, which came out of Africa.

Chief Mountains of this Country, 1. Atlas Minor, so called, to difference it from the greater Mountain, but from which it is seven degrees more North, but shootech, as that doth, with a Point or Promontory into the main Atlantic Ocean, on the South of Salta. 2. Dindus extended also into Cesariensis. 3. Diur, 4. Phœnix, of which little memorable. Rivers of most note, 1. Sala. 2. Salar. 3. Zilia. 4. Phub. 5. Diur. 6. Cufa, all falling into the Atlantic: The last the same, as I conjecture, which our Modern Writers call Omair-bili. And for the rest, we must find amongst them, 1. Sifemel, 2. Tosiff, 3. Niffir, the names of the chief Rivers, as at this time called.

The old Inhabitants herof in the time of the Romans, were the Metagonis near the Straits, giving name unto Metagonis an adjoining Promontory, the Sweosii, Verice, Nediberes, Vacuatæ, Polii; and on the East-side the Maurisii: These last participating of that common name, in which all united. Called by the Latines, Mauri; by the Greeks, Maurisii: The Etymology as before. Their descent originally from Phut, the Son of Cham: whose memory preferred here in the River Phut. To that, the coming of the Cananites, of the fame extraction, served but as an Accessory. From those two Mountains sprang the whole Nation of the Mauri, Governed by Kings: the most considerable of which, when first known to the Romans, was that Boecbus, who betrayed Jugurth his Friend and Son-in-law, into the hands of the Romans: gratified for that Treachery with the Country of the Meslyli, (reckoned for part of Mauritania from that time forwards) as Hempfal one of his Sons was, not long after, with the Kingdom of Numidia. The whole cities of Boecbus, Syphax, and Meslyli, united by this means in the person of Juba, one of his Posterity, the most potent Prince of all these parts: who falling in the African War against Julius Cesar, Numidia was forthwith made a Province of the Roman Empire; Crispus Salsutius being made the first Governour of it. But Mauritania, extending at that time from the Ocean to the River Angusgar, he gave to Boecbus and Bogud, two of his Confederates, but defended of the old Regal Family, Bogud unluckily taking part with Mark Antony against Angusgar, was by Boecbus, who declared for the other side, dispossessed of his part; (that which now makes the Kingdom of Fesse) in which confirmed for his good Service, by the conquering Emperor Juba, the Son of the former Juba, grown famous for his eminent learning, was of Pitron made a Prince: invited after the death of Boecbus in all the Dominions of his Father, except Numidia: and by the bounty of Angusgar, a great Patron of Learning, advanced to the Marriage of Selene, Daughter of Antony and Cleopatra. After whose death, and the death of Pholomy their Son, murdered by Caligula, Mauritania was by Claudius added to the Patrimony of the Roman Empire: divided into two Provinces, viz. Cesariensis, betwixt the two Rivers Maha and Ansage, now the Kingdom of Tromes; and Tingiana, from the River Maha to the Western Ocean. This last divided into Tingiana and Stifenfis, (the River now called Omair-bili being the boundary betwixt them) by the Emperor Constantine who leaving Stifenfis to the Dioecsis of Africk, laid Tingiana (why, I know not) unto that of Spain. Gained from the Romans by the Goths, after by the Saracens, they became Members of those Empires: in the declining of the last divided into the two Kingdoms of Fesse and Morocco, to the Description and History whereof, we now proceed.

3. MOROCCO.

The Kingdom of MOROCCO hath on the East, the River Maha, by which parted from Tromes; on the West, the Atlantic Ocean; on the South, Mount Atlas; and on the North, the Kingdom of Fesse: so called from Morocco, the chief City of it; in former times known by the name of Mauritania Stifenfis, from Sinip, in those times the principal City, as Procopius telleth us.

The Country said to be fruitful of all things necessary to life, pleasing to the sight, and sweet to smell: particularly, well stored with Grain and Pulse, plentiful of Oyl, Honey, and Sugar, liberally furnished with Dates, Grapes, Figs, Apples, Pears, and all sorts of Fruits; exceedingly exceedingly well stocked with Cattel, but with Goats especially; whose skins afford a very excellent kind of Leather, and of their fleece materials for the finest Chambers, which are here made in most of their Cities. The whole Country divided commonly into these seven parts, viz. 1. Guzzula. 2. Sus. 3. Morocco specially so called. 4. Hæa. 5. Hæfona. 6. Ducella, and 7. Tedley.

1. GUZZULA, the most Southern Province of this Kingdom, hath on the East, some part of Tromes; on the West, Sus or Sufa, from which parted by a ridge of Mountains called Ida; on the South, Mount Atlas; and on the North, part of the Territory of Morocco, and the rest of Sufa. The Country rich in Mines of Brasse, Iron and other Metals, of which are made many Uzoffs for domestic uses, exported hence into other places.

The People Barbarous and rude, not easily acknowledging subjection to the Kings of Morocco, and at continual Wars amongst themselves, except only for two monthes in the year: which being the time of their publick Marts, and then much visited with Strangers from other Countreys, they lay aside their private quarrels, and cheerfully entertain Rich Merchants as repair unto them. Walled Towns here are not any, but some very great Villages: the chief whereof, 1. Guzzula, on the Northern bank of the River Sus, whence the name of the Province. 2. Targissa, not far off, but on the other side of the water, towards the foot of Mount Atlas. 3. Tedza, inclining towards the borders of Morocco. Of these nothing memorable.

2. West of Guzzula, lieth the Province of SUS or SUSA, so called from the River Sus, (with which well watered) or giving name to it. Rich in Gold-Mines, the cause of continual Wars amongst the people: well stored with Sugar-Canes, which the inhabitants know neither how to boil nor purifie; and on the Sea-shores, furnished with great plenty of Amber, bought by the Portugals of the people at an easy rate. Chief Towns herof, 1. Cape D'Agur, on a Promontory so called; a place of such importance to the Portugals, that the taking of it by Mahomet then King of Sus (after of Morocco also) made them quit all the Forts which they had in this Country. 2. Targass, a rich and wealthy Town; the greatest in the Province, and situate in a large Plain near the foot of Mount Atlas. 3. Togit, situate in a spacious Plain also, but on the Banks of the River Sus: divided into three parts, each a mile from the other: which joyned together, make the exact figure of a Triangle. 4. Missa or Massa, seated at the influx of the said River on the Promontory called Cape Gilon's three Towns in one; not much the better for the Sea, and but ill befriended by the Land, as seated in a barren and unpleasing foyl; remarkable for a fair Temple, the Beams and Rafter of which are made of the bones of Whales, which usually are left dead on the shore. 5. Taradant, a large Town, built by the Africans, before the conquest of this Country by the Goths or Saracens: the Residence of the Vice-Roy for the Kings of Fesse, when the Lords of this Kingdom; but more enriched of late by the Merchants of France and England, who have here a Staple for their Sugars. By this Commerce, the people made more civil than in other parts of this Province: the whole number of them thought to amount to 3000 Families. 6. Tedza, more within the Land, bigger than Taradant, but less wealthy: the chief Ornament of it being a fair Mahometan Temple, liberally furnished with Picids and Readers of that Law, at the common charge. Not far from hence the Hill Anchisa, where it snoweth at all seasons of the year, and yet the people go extrem thin in the sharpest Winter. Nothing else memorable of this Province, but that a little before the Xeriff made himself King of Morocco, it had the title of a Kingdom; and gave the title of King to Mahomet the second Xeriff, made King of Taradant, or Sus, before he disposed his Brother of the Crown of Morocco.

3. Northward of Sus, lieth the Province of MOROCCO, specially so called, the most fruitful and best peopled part of Barbary; not much unlike to Lombardy in wealth and pleasures; the very Hills thereof as fruitful as the Vallies in other places. To which fertility of the foyl, the Rivers, 1. Teniff, and 2. Affinnad, give no small advantage; though much defaced by frequent incursions of the Portugals, who have extremely spoiled this Country. Places of most observation in it, 1. Delgumaba, built upon a very high Mountain, and environed with many other Hills; at the foot whereof the Fountain of Affinnad. 2. Elgimaba, a small, but ancient Town, on the River Siffava. 3. Tesfat, a small Town upon Affinnad. 4. Imizimzi, situate on a Rock, spacious and seated near the entrance of a narrow way leading into Guzzula. 5. Tenezze, an old Town but very well fortified. 6. Agnet, upon the River Teniff, all ruined except the Fort, and some scattered houses: formerly second unto none but Morocco (from which distant 24 miles) the Hills and Vallies about it adorned with pleasant Gardens, fruitful Vineyards, a fair River, and Fields so fertile, that they yield a fifty-fold increase. 7. Sefina, where they have snow at all times of the year. 8. Tennidula, an Heretical Town, differing in opinion from the rest of the Mahometan Sects; and so well-grounded in their Tenets, that they challenge all their Opposites to a Disputation. 9. Hanera, very full of Jews. 10. Morocco, the principal of this Province, and of all the Kingdom, situate in or near the place where once stood the Bezanum Hemerum of Ptolemy. Once reckoned amongst the greatest Cities of the World, at what time it was said to contain 100000 Families; since so defaced and wasted by the depredations of the Arabs, and the removal of the Sea-Royal to Fesse, when that Kingdom was in the Affordant, that it is hardly a third part so great as formerly. The Founder of it Joseph, surnamed Telidene, the second King of the House of the Almoravides; but much enlarged and beautified by Abdul-Munim, one of his successors. The principal Buildings in it, are the Church and the Castle: the Church or Mosque, one of the greatest in the World, adorned with many sumptuous Pillars brought out of Spain, when the Moor had the possession of that Country; and beautified with a lately Steeple, in compass at the bottom an hundred yards, and of 60 feet height, that the Hills of Asazi (one of the branches of the lesser Atlas) being 130 miles distant, may be thence easily discerned: the Cathedral very large and strong, on a Tower whereof stands three Globes made of pure Gold, weighing 130000 Barbary Ducats: which divers Kings have gone about to take down, and convert into money, but all deflected in regard of some cross accident or other which befell them in it; inasmuch that the common people think them to be guarded with Spirits.

4. North of Morocco, on the further side of Teniff and Affinnad, is the Province of HÆA: rough, Mountainous, and Woody, yet watered with many pleasant Rills, and would be plentiful enough in all commodities, if the Industry of the people were not wanting to it. A sort of people little better than merely barbarous, without all Artifice, either Ingenious or Mechanick; except some Chirurgians, whom they keep to circumcise their Children; and some few Teachers of their Law, which can hardly read. Their Food a Pap, made of Barley-meal, which in stead of Spoons, they claw with their Fingers; the Ground they eat on, serving for Table, Stools and Napkins.

Napkins. At endless feud with one another, yet to kind to Strangers, that in one of their chief Towns, called Tedest, the Gentlemen used to call lots who should entertain them. A Town of good estate in former time, situate in a large plain on the River Tessit; but in the year 1514, almost wholly abandoned, upon a rumor, that the Arabians had a purpose to sell it to the Portugals, 2. Tecadeth, seated on a good Port, and once very well traded, here being in it at that time 1000 Families, some Hospitals, and a beautiful Mosque; in the year 1514, destroyed by the Portugals, 3. Toneti, a Sea-Town in the hands of the Portugals, 4. Elmoriden, a strong piece, as the name importeth, the word signifying the Disciples Fort, so called, because a certain Heretic in the Law of Mahomet (whereof this Kingdom yields good plenty) retired hither with his Disciples; fortified it, and defended it against the King of Morocco, 5. Iguilinguigul, seated on the top of all, and fortified by the Country-people (or old African Moors) against the Arabians. 6. Tefalme, beautified with a pretty Haven, but not capable of any great shipping. 7. Tegisset, a den of Thieves and Cut-Throats. 8. Tefisset, as courteous and civil, as the other barbarous; At the Gates whereof a Guard is set for entertainment of Strangers; whom if they have no acquaintance there, they are to provide of Accommodation in some Gentlemen's house, where it costs them nothing but thanks, and some kind acknowledgment.

5. Northwards of Hoz, stands the Province of DUCALA, bounded on the West, with the main Atlantic; and on the North, with the River Ommirabili, by which parted from the Kingdom of Fesse. Of three days journey long, about two in breadth; thrusting into the Ocean with a craggy Promontory, which some of the Ancients called Uligian, others the Promontory of the Sun, but by the Christians of Europe called the Cape of Cantins by the Moors, Gebelrhude. Populous enough, the quality of the men considered, ignorant both of Letters and all good manners; Yet not so populous as it hath been in former times, much of the Country being abandoned for fear of the Portugals, who have taken all their best Towns on the Sea-coasts, and destroyed the rest. Amongst these, 1. Azafi, at the foot of the Hills so called; surprised by the Portugals, under colour of making a Store-house for their Merchandise. 2. Azame, seated at the mouth of the River Ommirabili, the furthest Town of this Kingdom towards that of Fesse; the people whereof were extremely addicted unto Sodomy, till subdued by the Portugueses, 3. Elmadina, once the Metropolis of this Province; but now for fear of those Invaders, in a manner desolated. 4. Conte, of the foundation of the Gober, 5. Tie, built by the old African Moors, but possessed by the Portugals, 6. Subiti, 7. Tuercoff, 8. Conpua, 9. Terga, 10. Calduban; all sacked and ruined by the Portugals, who they took Azamor (the Key of this Province) which was in the year 1513. At which time it is said, that Mahomet King of Fesse passing through this Province with an Army, to repress these insolencies, at every Allar (whereof there are many in the Roads) Inceaded, and said unto this effect: Lord, thou knowest that the cause of my coming into this wild place, is only to free this people of Ducales from the rebellious and wicked Arabians, and their cruel Enemies the Christians, which purpose, if they shall not approve of, my Followers will fulfil upon my Person, but not upon my Followers; who deserve it not. With greater piety than could be looked for from a blind Mahometan.

6. Eastward of Ducalis, along the banks of Ommirabili, lieth the Province of HASCORA, a fruitful Country, intermixt of rich Fields and pleasant Gardens; furnished with most sorts of choicest fruits; and amongst others, Grapes of such extraordinary greatness, that they are said to be as big as a Pullets Egg. Good store of Honey it hath also, and some Mines of Iron: Inhabited by a more civil people than any of the rest, and consequently more deservful to rich a soyl. Places of most importance in it, 1. Ezo, an old town, situate on a lofty Mountain. 2. Elvina, of a later erection. 3. Almadina, conquered for the King of Fesse by a Merchant, whose Paragon the Prince or Governour hereof had taken from him: Situate in a pleasant, but little valley, but begirt with Hills, and well inhabited by Gentlemen, Merchants, and Artificers, 4. Togodist, on the top of an Hill, environed with four others of equal height.

7. More East, betwixt Hascora and the River Malva, is the Province of TEDLES, bounded on the East with the Kingdom of Tremeson; and on the North, with that of Fesse, from which last parted by the River Servi which on the North-east border it meets with Ommirabili. The whole Province in form Triangular, of no great either length or breadth, but sufficiently fruitful and well inhabited for the bigness. Some Towns it hath, and those not meanly populous for so small a Province; the chief whereof. 1. Tefza, built by the old African Moors, and beautified with many Mahometan Mosques; the Walls of which made of a kind of Marble, which they here call Tefza, whence the name of the Town. 2. Efza, seated on the River Ommirabili, where it receiveth that of Deyme; which rising out of Atlas Minor, and passing by Tefza last mentioned, doth here lose its name. 3. Chybitte, renowned for the stout resistance, which it, hath made from time to time against those of Fesse, 4. Ebit, abounding in all sorts of Victual.

These Provinces make up the Kingdom of Morocco; infested miserably while it remained subject to the Kings of Fesse, by the Portugals on the one side, and the wild Arabians on the other. Concerning which last people we are to know, that when the Saracens conquered Africk, they contented themselves with the Command, and left unto the Natives the possession of it, forbidding the Arabians (with whose course of life they were well acquainted) to pass over Nilus. Elcain, the last of the Successors of Hucha in the Kingdom of Cairoan, having subdued the rest of Africk, and added it unto his Estate, passed forwards into Egypt, which he had conquered also, assuming to himself the title of Caliph: But in his absence, the Lieutenant, whom he left in Africk rebelled against him; and acknowledging the Caliph of Bagdet for his lawful Lord, received of him for his good Service, the Kingdom of Africk. Elcain, thus disposed of Africk, despairing to recover his lost Estate, and yet not willing that it should be useful unto his enemies, licensed the Arabians for a Ducat a man, to pass over the Nile with their Tents and Families. On which agreement, almost half the Tribes of Arabia Deserta, and many of Arabia Felix, went into Africk; where they sacked Tripolis, Cairoan, and the rest of the principal Cities; tyrannizing over all Barbary, till restrained at last by Joseph the Founder of Morocco, (of whom more hereafter.) Since which time, though they lost their unlimited Empire, yet they still swarm like Locusts over all the Country, and neither apply themselves to Tillage, or building Houses, or any civil course of life; nor fillge those to live in quiet, who would otherwise mature and improve the Country. The rest of the Story of these Kingdoms we shall have anon, when we have taken Survey of the Kingdom of Fesse.

4. FESSE.

The Kingdom of FESSE is bounded on the South, with the Realm of Morocco; on the North, with part of the Atlantic and Mediterranean; on the East, with Malva, parting it from the Kingdom of Tremeson; and on the West, with the Atlantic wholly.

It takes this name from Fesse, the chief City of it. Known to the ancients by the name of Mauritania Tingitana, so called from the City of Tingis (now Tanger) then of greatest note. Called also Hispania Transfretana, Spain on the other side of the Sea, because a part of that Ducois; and by some (Pliny, amongst others) Bagudiana, from Bagud one of the Kings hereof, to whom given by Cesar; by others Amphelus, from its abundance of Vines, The Inhabitants of it, by the Spaniards, now called Alarbes.

The Country of good temperature in regard of the Air, if not in some places of the coldest; but very unequally disposed of in respect of the Earth; here being in it many Deserts and large Forests, not well inhabited; but intermixt with many rich and delightful Fields. So that taking the climate in the gross, it may be said to be a rich and flourishing Country, hardly inferior unto any. The particularities of which are to be considered in the Characters of the several Provinces, into which it now stands divided, that is to say, 1. Tomesina, 2. Fesse, specially so called, 3. Elchane, or Chane, 4. Garet, 5. Algaza, 6. Ergisse, and 7. Habat.

1. TEMESINA hath on the South, the River Ommirabili; on the West, the Ocean; extended in length from West to East 80 miles, and in breadth 70. A Champaign Country, very level; and once so populous, that it contained 40 Cities, and 300 Castles; most of them mined by the Wars, and the wild Arabians, the greater destroyer of the two. The principal of those remaining, 1. Togger, near the River Ommirabili, once of greater note, but now inhabited only by poor people, and a few Smiths compelled to live there for the making of Iron Instruments to manure the Land. 2. Thagia, on the course of the said River; much visited by those of Fesse, for the Sepulchre of an holy Prophet, who was there interred; the Fessans going thither in Pilgrimage with such numbers of Men, Women, and Children, that their Tents seem sufficient to lodge an Army. 3. Adendum, more towards the Sea, but on a small River called Gairla; well walled, and fenced on one side by a Lake or Pool. 4. Amse, on the shore of the Atlantic, once of great Trade, and well frequented, both by the English and the Portugals, by which last destroyed. 5. Manfur, destroyed in like manner by the wild Arabians, 6. Nachaida, situate in so fertile and rich a soyl, that the Inhabitants would have given a Camels burden of Corn for a pair of Shoes. Nothing now left of it but one Stemple, and a piece of the Wall. 7. Rabur, or Rabur, built by Manfur, or Almanfur, King of Morocco, near the mouth of the River Burwig, and by him made one of the best peopled Towns in Africk; built after the model of Morocco, but now so wasted that there are not in it above 500 Families; most of the ground within the Walls being turned into Meadows, Vineyards, and Gardens. 8. Fanzara on the River Saba, the Saba of Pliny, falling not far off into the other. 9. Mahomra, in the same tract also, once possessed by the Spaniards; near which the Portugals received a great defeat by the King of Fesse, for want of good intelligence betwixt them and the Capitains. 10. Saba, the Saba of Pliny, by the Inhabitants called Zale, or ordinary Mars by mistaking, Cale; at the mouth of the River Rabur, which the ancient Writers called Saba, as they named the Town. Beautified by King Almanfur (who is here interred) with a stately Palace, a goodly Hospital, a fair Temple, and a Hall of Marble, cut in Mosack works; intended for the burial-place of his Posterity. A Town much traded formerly by the Christian Merchants of England, Flanders, Gena, and the Gulf of Venice. Took by the Spaniards, An. 1287. and within ten days lost again; a sort of late times made a nest of Pirates, as dangerous to those which failed in the Ocean, as the Pirate of Algiers to the Mediterranean. Whose insolencies the King of Morocco not able to suppress for want of shipping, desired the aid of his Majesty Charles, King of Great Britain; by whom the Town being blocked up by Sea, and belleged to the Landward by the King of Morocco, it was at last compelled to yield; the works thereof dismantled, the Pirate executed, and 300 Christian Captives sent unto his Majesty, to be by him restored to their former liberty; to the great honour of his Majesty, and the English Nation, An. 1632.

As for the Fortunes of this Province, they have been somewhat different from the rest of this Kingdom: trained by a famous Prophet to revolt from the King of Fesse and Morocco, whose estate they very much endangered; sending an Army of 50000 men to the Gates of Morocco. But being discomfited by Joseph, surnamed Telephus, he followed them into their own Country, which he waited with great cruelty for ten months together; consuming above a Million of them, and leaving the Province to the mercy of Wolves and Lions. Repeated afterwards by Almanfur with Arabian Colonies: Given about fifty years after that, by the Princes of the Marine Family to more civil Inhabitants; by whom the Arabians were expelled, and the Province consequently reduced into some good order.

2. Westward of Tomesina lieth the Province of FESSE, properly and specially so called. Extended in length from the River Burwig to the River Unad, for the space of 100 miles. A very fruitful Province, well stored with Cattel, and exceeding populous; the Villages hereof as big as the better sort of Towns in other places; but contrary to the custom of other Countries, better inhabited on the Hills than among the Vallies; the people making choice of the Mountains for their habitation, as places of Defence and Safety, but husbanding the Vallies which lie nearest to them. Places of most consideration in it, 1. Macameda, on the River Unad, in a goodly Plain, but in a manner all ruined, except the Wall. 2. Gualiti, memorable for the Sepulchre of Idris, the first Founder of Fesse. 3. Potira Eassa, where they have some Lions so tame, that they will gather up bones in the Streets like Dogs, without hurting any body. 4. Agla, where they have brought their Lions to so strange a cowardice, that they will run away at the voice of a Child; whence a Brachadobis is called proverbially a Lion of Agla. 5. Pharao, by reason of the name, thought by the vulgar to be founded by some King of Egypt; but the Latine Inscriptions therein found, declare it to have been some work of the ancient Romans. 6. Magritte, of more antiquity than note. 7. Fesse, the Metropolis of this Province, and the chief of the Kingdom, supposed to be the Volubilis of Pliny, but much enlarged and beautified by some new Accellions. Situate for the most part upon little Hills, and watered by a pleasant and gentle River (derived by Aguedalis and conduits into all parts of the City) which they now call the River of Fesse, conceived by some learned men to be that which was anciently called Philo, from Phin the first Planter of the African Nation. A City so beautiful and well seated, as if Nature and Art had paid the Wantons, and brought this forth as the fruit of their Dalliance. The Founder, or enlarger of it, one of the Race of the false Prophet Mahomet, his name Idris, who built on the East-side of the River that on the West-side, being the Work of one of his Sons: both for increasing, that at last they were joined together. To the left the Sabars being added, have made a third. The whole called Fesse, from Fez, an Arabic word signifying Gold; whereof great quantity was found, when they digged the Foundations. Divided into three parts by the River, all of which contain 28000 households, and 700 Mosques, or Saracenic Temples: the chief of which is Came, or Carman, being a mile and a half in compass. It hath 32 Gates, great and high; the Roof 150 yards long, and 80 broad: round about, divers Forts, containing 40 yards in length, and 30 in breadth; under which, the publick fire-houses of the Town. About the Walls are Pulpits of divers forts, wherein the Masters of their Law read unto the people such things as they think to pertain to their Salvation. The Revenue herof is 200 Ducats a day of the old Rents; for so it was, An. 1526, when Leo first wrote. The Merchants have here a Court, or Exchange, inclosed with a strong Wall, with 12 Gates, and 15 Streets. There is also a Colledge called Amardoe, a most curious and delicate Building. It hath three Cloysters of admirable beauty, supported with eight square Pillars of divers colours; the Roof curiously carved, and the Arches of Mosque work, of Gold and Azure. The Gates of Bricks, fair wrought: and the doors of the private Chambers of inlaid work. This Colledge did cost the Founder, King Abubekir, or Abu Henen 380000 Crowns. Here are finally laid to be in it many Hospitals, little inferior to the Colleges in building and beauty, all very liberally endowed; and about an hundred Hou Bahs well built, with four Halls to each, and certain Galleries without, where they put off their Cloaths when they go to bathe themselves: and besides these 200 Inns, built three stories high, each of them having 120 Chambers in it, with Galleries before all the doors for their Guests to walk in.

3. Eastward of the Territory of Fesse, lieth the Province of CHAUS, extended in length from the River Gingir, or Gingirum, by which parted from Tremfin and Fesse, to the borders of Tremfin, for the space of 190 miles, and 170 miles in breadth. So that it is thought to contain one third part of the whole Kingdom: but meanly populous for the bigness, the Country being poor and barren, and the Inhabitants here and warlike; more given to prosecute their quarrels, than to Trade, or Tillage. Chief Towns herof, 1. Hum Lisan, a Town built in the more Mountainous parts of the Country, by the old Africans. Famous for the Temple of an Idol here worshipped to which at certain times men and women resorted in the night; where, after their devotions ended, and the Candles put out, every man lay with the woman he first touched: the exact platform of the Family of Loe, if all be true which is told us of them; and anciently, but falsely, charged on the Primitive Christians. 2. Tezze, adorned with three Colleges, many Baths and Hospitals, and some beautiful Temples; one of them larger, though not fairer than that of Fesse; in both Towns men of the same Trade have a Street by themselves, for greatness, wealth, and numbers of people, eclipsed the third City of this Kingdom. 3. Dubda, an ancient Town, but not much observable. 4. Turret, seated on the top of an Hill, in the midst of an Plain, but compassed about with Defarts. 5. Boni Jiffen, neighboured by Iron Mines, in which their greatest bravery and wealth consisteth: the women here wearing Iron-Rings for Ornaments to their Ears and Fingers. 6. Tezeigni, subject to the Arabians. 7. Adagria, the most Eastern Town of all the Region's situate in a Painisfeld made by the confluence of Mulfo and Melua. In this Country is the head of the River Sabur, which rising out of a great Lake in the Woods of the Mountain Seligne, and receiving many lesser waters, with a large and Navigable stream falleth into the Ocean.

4. Northwards of Cham lieth the Region called G A R E T, extended thence as far as the Mediterranean; and reaching East and West, from the River Melua, where it bordereth on Tremfin, to that of Necber, wherewith toucheth on Erif and Afsara. The length herof 25 Leagues, the breadth but twenty. The soil in most places dry and desert, like the Sands of Nomidia: especially all along the banks of the Melua; near unto which from the Mediterranean to Cham, it is wholly Desart and uncultivated, not well inhabited in the most fruitful parts of it, being full of Mountains; the worse for the ill neighbourhood of the Spaniards, possessed of 1. Chesista, and 2. Medla, two chief Towns herof. 3. Pemond de Veler, by some called Vile de Gomer, situate on the shore of the Mediterranean, betwixt two high Mountains; built by the Africans or Goths; but now in the possession of the Spaniards also. 4. Jaffaria, situate on the Sea also, founded by the Mahometans of the Marine Family. 5. Tezezza, standing on an Hill, to which there is but one passage only.

5. Westward of Gavri lieth ASCARA, a stretch from thence unto the Ocean: Shut up on the South-East-side with the great Mountains Zalaga, Zaron, and Gomara, out of which last runneth the River Lacur, called Lix by Pulug. The Air herof very temperate, and the soil as fertile; supplying with the over-plus of its Commodities the Mountainous parts of Fesse, and the Defarts of Gara. Once full of Towns, till ruined and destroyed by the wars, A Monument whereof, 1. Gimbia, built by the ancient Africans, of which remains nothing but the Ditches. 2. Lancabe, in Latine Lariffe, the Lix of Pulug, situate at the mouth of the Lix or Lacur, and furnished with a good Port, but of difficult entrance; garriſoned when possessed by the Moor with 200 light Horse, and 200 Harchibuffers; but better fortified than before, since possessed by the Spaniards, into whose hands it was put by Muley-Sheik King of Morocco and Fesse, when won by Muley-Sidan his younger Brother, in the beginning of the Civil Wars betwixt them. 3. Caslar Elcahar, given by Al-munfir to a poor Fishers, who had entertained him unknown, one night in his Cottage, when he lost his Company in hunting; Adorned with many Temples, one Colledge of Students, and a stately Hospital.

6. On the North of Afana is the Province of EL-HABAT, or HABAT, coasting along the Atlantic Ocean to the mouth of the Streits, in length 100 miles, about 80 in breadth. The Country very plentiful of all manner of necessaries, and very well peopled; the Mountains which are here of a great height, being well inhabited. In former times replenished with many Cities, and both of the Foundation of the Goths, Romans, and old both of the African Moor, now much diminished by the Wars. Those of most note, 1. Azaggan, the Inhabitants whereof by an ancient privilege granted by the King of Fesse, were of licence to drink wine, though prohibited by the Law of Mahomet. Situate on a Mountain near the River Gauza, about 35 Leagues from Fesse, and garriſoned with 400 Horse for fear of the Portugals, who sometimes make their excursions thither. 2. Bafra, once a walled Town, and the walls still standing, but very little or no Town in them. 3. Hamm, sometimes well peopled, but now little inhabited, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of the Portugals, who command that Coast. 4. Barreanda, in a manner deserted for the same reason. 5. Alcazar Gur, taken it from another of this name, called Alcazar Gur, taken together with Arzilla and Tangier by Alfonso the fifth of Portugal, Anno 1470. Nigh to which Town the three Kings, Kings, Schizism of Portugal, Mahomet and Abdelmelech, Competitors for this Kingdom were slain in a day. There was also slain at the same time, the great English Rebel Smolghy, who fled out of Ireland to Rome, Anno 1570. Where he was lovingly entertained by the Pope then being, as a good Son of the Church; by whom appointed for the Conquest of Ireland, and for that end furnished with 800 Soldiers paid by the King of Spain; and by his Holiness created Marquis of Leinster, Earl of Wexford and Caterlogh, Viscount Murrough, and Baron of Rofs. Thus furnished, he began his Journey towards Ireland, Anno 1578. but hearing of these Wars, and desirous to make a party in them, he lost all his honour with his life. 6. Arzilla a Sea-Town, 70 miles distant from the Streits, now possessed by the Portugals. 7. Tanger, a great Town, and very ancient, distant from the Streits about 30 miles, belonging to the Portugals also. In former times it was called Tingis, a Colony of the Canaanites, and by them built at their first coming thither, when they fled from the Sword of Jehobab, testified by the two Pillars erected near this City, which before we spoke of and from that name caused all this part of Mauritania to be called Tingiana. Made afterwards a Colony by the Emperor Claudius, who named it Traducta Julia; but the old name prevailed, and out-lived the new. Near to this Town, it is said, that Heracles overcame Anteus, a monstrous Giant of 64 Cubits high, as his Legend telleth us. And not far off was an high Mountain called Abyla, opposite to which in the Coast of Spain, was another called Calpe, on which the said Heracles placed his so famous Pillars. 8. Septa, or Sema, situate on, or near that Mountain, unfortunately memorable for giving the title of an Earl to Julian, who first brought the Saracens into Spain; beautified in the following times with many Temples, Colleges, and Learned men: taken by the Portugals with the help of the English, An. 1415, and now in the possession of the King of Spain. The only Town of all the Elitates of Portugal, which in the late revolt of that Kingdom doth remain unto him. 9. Julia Constantia, so called, and made a Roman Colony by Augustus Caesar. 10. Laxur, a Roman Colony of the plantation of Claudius, in old times said to have been the Court or Palace of the Giant Anteus. Not far from whence (that Anteus might not dwell alone) the old Geographers have placed the habitation of Geryon, as proper a Gentleman as himself, in a small Island of the Streits, called Erythia, and by some Erythia.

7. Eastward of Habat is the Province of ERRIF, extended from the mouth of the Streits, where it joineth to Habat, as far as to the River Necber, (supposed to be the Melchab of the Ancient Writers) by which parted from Gara: A Mountainous and cold Country in respect of the rest of Barbary, full of Woods and Forests; but plentiful enough of Vines, Figs, and Olives; and not without some herds of Goats, though otherwise not well stored with Cattel. In length 140 miles, in breadth 40 only; inhabited by a race of valiant men, but excessive Drunkards. The Towns herof not many, though full of Villages. The chief of which, 1. Mazagon, near unto the Streits; a very strong Town, and of great importance, but possessed by the Portugals; in vain besieged by Abdalla the first, with an Army of 200000 men, An. 1562. 2. Mezennem, seated on a Mountain. 3. Boni Terfa, of like situation, once beautified with a goodly Colledge for the Professors of the Mahometan Law, who here publicly taught it, as in an University; the Inhabitants whereof were in that regard freed from all exactions. Destroyed together with the Library of it, by some wicked Tyrant, An. 1509, the books therein being valued at 4000 Ducats. 4. Torga, 5. Togassa, 6. Gebbe; of which little memorable.

Thus having looked over the particular Provinces of these two Kingdoms, we must next look upon them also in the general story, from the time of the Saracenic conquest; first let us into this Country by the Tradition of Julian, and for a while subject to the great Caliph, or Successor of Mahomet: afterwards to the King, or Caliph, of Cairwan, who extended his Empire to the Ocean. But that Kingdom being overthrown by the coming in of the Arabians, these Provinces with the rest were afflicted by them till the rising of the Kingdom of Fez; began in the person of Idris, of the blood of Mahomet, by Hali, and his Daughter Fatima, commonly called the Family of Alawez; who persecuted by the opposite Faction, fled into Mauritania; where he grew into such reputation, that in short time he got both Swords into his hands. Dying about the 185 year of the Hijra, he left his power unto his Son, of the same name with his Father, the first Founder of Fesse. Opposite whereunto on the other side of the water, one of his Sons (but his name I had not) built another City, which in time grew into emulation with it; and railing by that means a faction in the house of Idris, which occasioned the subversion of the Kingdom of Fesse, after it had continued in the Family of the Alawez, for the space of 270 years. The estate herof first weakened by Abu Tefin, or Tefifin, of the house of the Almoravides, or Lauinner, and so weakened, that he thereby gave an opportunity to Jeseph Aben Tefin, or Telephine, his Son and Successor, then famous for bridling the Arabians, and founding the City of Morocco, to suppress that Family: Who killing the Princes of that Line, and 30000 of their Subjects, brake down the Walls which parted the two Cities from one another, united them by Bridges, and so made them one. Drawn into Spain by the diffusion of the Saracens there amongst themselves, he added all which they held in that Kingdom unto his Dominions, held by his Successors, as long as they were able to hold Morocco: the Catalogue of which Princes, called the House or Family of the Almoravides, with that of the Race of the Almohades is this which followeth,

The Kings, or Miramomolims of MOROCCO.

A.C.

1. Tefin, Tefifin, or Telephine, the first of the Almoravides that reigned in Africa.
2. Jeseph, surnamed Telephine, the Son of Tefin, founded Morocco, subdued the Kingdom of Fesse, and added the Elit of the Moor in Spain unto his Dominions, An. 1091.
3. Hali, the Son of Jeseph.
4. Abu-Hali, the Son of Hali, supposed to be the Publisher of the works now extant in the name of Avicenna, compiled at his command by some of the most learned Arabian Doctors: vanquished and slain by

5. Abdelmun, or Abdel-Munem, the first of the Almohades of obscure Parentage, but raised to great power by the practices of Almohade, a juggling Prophet of those times, that he overthrew the King, and obtained the Kingdom of Almoravides both in Spain, and Africa, An. 1150. to which he also added the Realm of Tunis and Cairwan.

6. Jo-

6. Joseph II. or Aben Joseph, the Son of Abdelmon.
7. Jacob, or Aben-Jacob, surnamed Almanfor, a puffed and prudent Prince, of whom much before: Son of Joseph II.
8. Mahomet, surnamed Ensafor, or the Green, the Brother of Almanfor. Discomited by the Christians of Spain, at the Battle of Sierra Morena, An. 1214. lost his Dominions, there being slain in this Battle 200000 of the Moors, as some Writers say; who add; that the Spaniards for two days together burnt no other Fowl but the Pikes, Lances, and Arrows of their slaughtered Enemies, yet could not consume the one half of them.
9. Caid Arrax, Nephew of Mahomet Ensafor, by his Son Baxaf: slain at the Siege of Tremezzin, a Castle of Tremesin, which was held against him.
10. Almoracda, a Kinsman of Caid Arrax, ousted of his Estate, and slain by Badebus, of the same house of the Almoracides.
11. Badebus, the last of the house of the Almoracides, settled in his estate by the aid and valour of Jacob Aben-Joseph the new King of Fesse:

but dealing faithlessly and ungratefully with him, he was warred on by the said Jacob Ben-Joseph, vanquished and slain in battle; the sovereignty by that means translated unto those of the Marine Family, An. 1270. or thereabouts.

But before I proceed further with this Marine Family, I must again look back upon Mahomet Ensafor, whom I conceive (the computation of the time being so agreeable) to be the Admiral Mormelius mentioned by Matthew Paris, to whom our King John, An. 1214. is said to have sent such a degenerate and unchristian Embassy, which strange name of Admiral Mormelius, was by that good Writer unhappily flumbled at instead of Miramonim (which also is corrupted from Amir Elmunim, that is to say, Princeps Fideium: An Attribute which the great Kings of the Saracen-Moors did much affect, and retained it long time amongst them. The Story this, King John being overlaid by his Baron Wars, and the invasions of the French, sent Embassadors to this great Prince (then ruling over a great part of Spain and Barbary) for aid against them offering to hold his Kingdom of him; and to receive withall the Law of Mahomet. The Moor exceedingly offended at it, told the Embassadors, that he had lately read the Book of Paul's Epistles which he liked so well, that he was hence to choose a Religion, he would have embraced Christianity before any other: But every man (saith he) ought to die in his own Religion; the greatest thing which he disliked in that Apostle, being (as he said) the changing of the Faith in which he was born. This said, he called unto him Robert of London Clerk, one of the Embassadors (a man ill choise for such an Errand, if the tale be true,) of whom he demanded the Form of the English Government, the situation and wealth of the Country, the manners of the People, the life and person of the King: in which being satisfied, he grew into such a dislike of that King, that ever after he abhorred the mention of him. This is the substance of the story in Matthew Paris: But you must know he was a Monk, to which brood of men King John was held for a mortal Enemy, and therefore this Relation not to pass for Gospel.

But whatsoever opinion King John might have of the power of the King to whom 'tis possible enough he might send for aid, certain it is, that he was grown so low in his Reputation, after the loss of that great Barrel in Sierra Morena, that not only the Spanish Moors withdrew their Obedience from him (as a Prince unable to support them, but those of Affrick did revolt also from the Crown of Morocco) extremely weakened by that blow) after his decease, For Gonsalves Aben Zein of the house of Abdallah, seized upon Tremesin, in the time of Caid Arrax his Successor: as Bucar Aben Merin of the noble Marine Family (descended from a Christian stock) did the like at Fez. Settled in his estate by the vanquishment of Almoracda the Miramonim, he left it to Hajia his Son, under the Governance and protection of a Brother of his called Jacob Ben-Joseph. But the young Prince dying shortly after, left his new Kingdom to his Uncle: who aiding Badebus, (before mentioned) dispossessed Almoracda of the Realm of Morocco: and afterwards having just cause of quarrel against this Badebus, invaded his dominions, overcame and slew him; and once again transferred the Imperial Seat from Morocco to Fez. In him began the Empire of the Marine Family, who held their Residence in Fez, as the first Seat of their Power; Morocco being governed by an under-King, the rest of the Provinces of that Kingdom Causued unto several States, the Sea-coasts in some tract of time being gained by the Portugals. And in his Line (but with great confusions) the Royal Dignity remained till the year 1500, and somewhat after. Three only were of note in the course of business, that is to say, 1. Jacob Ben-Joseph, the Advancer of the Marine Family to the Realm of Morocco; the Establisher thereof in that of Fesse; and of great power and influence in the affairs of the Moors in Spain, where he held Algaraz and Tariff, Towns of great importance: slain treacherously by one of his familiar Friends, at the siege of Tremesin. 2. Aben-Joseph the second, a younger Son of the first Joseph (the issue of Bucal his elder Brother being quite extinct) succeeded after Aben-Joseph, the sixth of the Marine Family in the Throne of his Fathers and had added thereto the Realm of Tremesin, if not diverted by the revolt of Abdallah his eldest Son, continually in Arms against him. 3. Albasen, the Son of this Aben-Joseph, and the eighth of the Marine Family, who after a siege of 30 months took the City of Tremesin, and with that the Kingdom. But not so fortunate in his Wars against the Christian Kings of Spain against whom he led an Army of 40000 Foot, and 70000 Horse, with all other necessaries: but vanquished by the two Kings of Castile and Portugal, with far lesser Forces; (their Army consisting but of 25000 Foot, and 14000 Horse) at the River of Saladnot far from Tariff, An. 1340. Deported soon after his return by his Son Albasen, who lost all which his Father and the first of the Aben-Josephs had gained in Spain; their Empire after this declining even Affrick it felt: the Kingdom of Tremesin, and the greatest part of the now Kingdom of Tunis, withdrawing themselves from their obedience in the East parts of Barbary, as the Portugals prevailed upon them in the West. The Kingdom of the Marine thus approaching near its fatal Period, it fortune about the year 1508, that Mahomet Ben-Amet, a Native of Daza, in the farther Nimidia or Biledulgerid, pretending a Descent from their Prophet Mahomet, caused himself to be called Xeriff, the name by which the Kindred and Successors of that Impostor use to call themselves; and being a poor Hermit only (with which Mumtchouky and the high opinion of their Sanctity, this people have from time to time been extremely fooled) plotted to make his Sons the chief Princes of Mauritania. To this end he sent them in Pilgrimage to Mecch, whence they returned with such an opinion of Sanctity, that Mahomet King of Fesse, made Amet the second of them Governor of the famous famous Collage of Amadorach; the youngest called Mahomet, Tutor to his Children; the eldest named Abdel, staying at home with his Father, to expect the issue of the War undertaken by the other two against the Portugals. In those days the Portugals, grievously infested the Provinces of the Realm of Morocco; to repress whose incursions, Mahomet and Amet obtained Commission, though much opposed therein by Muley the Kings Brother, who told him how unsafe to trust to an armed hypocriticalising him; that if they once came unto any power (which under colour of Religion they might quickly raise) it would not be easy to suppress them. But this good counsel was rejected, and the War went forward. Furnished with an Army, they discomfited Lopes Barriga, Commander of the Portugal Forces under King Emanuel, compell that King to abandon all his footing there; they subdued Ducala, Sus, and Hea, three Provinces of the Realm of Morocco; enter that City, payson the tributary King, and salute Amet King thereof by the name of the Xeriff of Morocco, investing Mahomet the other Brother in the Kingdom of Sus. In the career of their Successes died the King of Fesse; and Amet his Successor, an improvident young Prince, confirms his Quondam-Tutors in their new Elites, conditioned they should hold of him as the Lord in chief, and pay him the accustomed Tributes.

The Xeriffs of MOROCCO.

- A.C. 1. Amet denied both Tribute and Superiority to the King of Fez, whom he overthrew in a fer Field; and was after vanquished and dispossessed of his Kingdom, (upon some quarrel breaking out) by his Brother Mahomet.
- 1544 2. Mahomet King of Sus, having got the Kingdom of Morocco, united Fesse unto it also by the vanquishment of Amur the King thereof; slain after all his Victories by the Turks of his Guard.
- 1557 3. Abdalla, the Son of Mahomet.
- 1572 4. Abdalla II. Son of the former, had twelve Brothers, of which he slew ten, Hamet being spared by reason of his supple simplicity, and Abdelmelech escaping to the Turks.
5. Mahomet II. Son of Abdalla the Second, expelled by Abdelmelech and the Turks, fled to Sebastian King of Portugal, who together with the two Competitors were slain in one day at the battle of Alcazar Guet, Anno 1578.
- 1578 6. Hamet II. the Brother of Abdalla the 2d. who added parts of Libya and Nimidia to the Realm of Morocco, not absolutely subdued before.
- 1603 7. Muley Sheek, the eldest Son of Hamet, opposed in his succession by Boferes and Sidan, his two younger Brethren, in which war he died; as did also Boferes his Brother. From whom Abdalla, the Son of Muley Sheek had regained Morocco.
- 1607 8. Sidan the third Son of Hamet, immediately on the death of his Father, caused himself to be proclaimed King of Fez (where he was with his Father when he died) and having won

Morocco from Abdalla, the Son of Muley Sheek, became Master of that Kingdom also. Stripped afterwards of Fesse and Morocco both, by the opposite Factions, distressed by Hamet Ben Abdalla a Religious Hermit, who hoped to get all for himself; and aided by Side Hean one of like hypocrisy, who seemed to aim but at a Limb of that great Estate, by whose assistance he was once more possessed of Morocco. These tumults on the Land being pacified in long tract of time, and the Country brought to some degree of peace and quietness, (though never absolutely reduced under his Command, as in former times;) a Rabble of Pirates nest themselves in Salla, a Port-Town of the Realm of Fesse: creating thence great mischief to him both by Sea and Land; and not to him only, but to all the Merchants of other Countreys, whose business led them towards those Seas. Unable to suppress them for want of Shipping, he craved Aid of King Charles of England: by whose assistance he became Master of the Port, destroyed the Pyrats, and sent Three hundred Christian Captives for a present to his Sacred Majesty, An. 1632. Nor staid he here; but aiming at the general good of Trade, and Mankind, he sent a Letter to his Majesty to lend him the like Aid against those of Algiers, who did as much infect the Mediterranean, as the Pirates of Salla did the Ocean. The tenor of which Letter, as favouring of more piety than could be possibly expected from a Mahometan, and much conducing to the honour of his Sacred Majesty, I have here subjoyned.

The Letter of the King of MOROCCO to the King of ENGLAND.

When these our Letters shall be so happy as to come to your Majesties sight, I wish the Spirit of the righteous God may so direct your mind, that you may joyfully embrace the Message I send; presenting to you the means of exalting the Majesty of God, and your own Power amongst men. The Royal power allotted to us makes us common Servants to our Creator; then, of those People whom we govern: So that observing the duties we owe to God, we deliver Blessings to the World, in providing for the Publick good of our States, we magnify the honour of God, like the Celestial Bodies, which though they have much reversion, yet serve only to the Benefit of the World. It is the excellency of our Office, to be Instruments, whereby happiness is delivered unto the Nations. Pardon me Sir, This is not to infringe, (for I know I speak to one of a more clear and quick sight than myself) but I speak, this, because God hath pleased to grant me a happy Victory over some part of those rebellious Pyrats, that have so long mangled the peaceful Trade of Europe; and hath presented further occasion to root out the Generation of those who have been so pernicious to the good of our Nations: I mean, since it hath pleased God to be so auspicious, to our beginnings in the Conquest of Salla, that we might join and proceed in hope of like success in the war against Tunis, Algier, and other places (Dens and Receptracles for the inhumane Villanies of those who abhor Law and Government.) Herein whilst we interrupt the corruption of malignant Spirits of the World, we shall glorify the great God, and perform a Duty that will shine as glorious as the Sun and Moon, which all the Earth may see and reverence. A work that shall ascend as sweet as the perfume of the most precious Odours, in the Nostils of the Lord. A work grateful and happy to man. A work whose memory shall be revered so long, as there shall be any that delight to bear the Alliance of Honour and magnanimous Spirit; that shall last as long as there be any remaining amongst men that love and honour the piety and virtue of Noble minds. This Alliance I here willingly present to you, whose piety and virtue equal the greatness of your power, that we, who are Servants to the Great and mighty GOD, may be in hand triumph in the glory which this Alliance presents unto us. Now because the Islands which you govern, have been ever famous for the unconquered strength of their Shipping, I have sent this my trusty Servant and Ambassador, to know whether in your Princely wisdom you shall think fit to assist me with such Forces by Sea, as shall be answerable to those I provide by Land: which if you please to grant, I doubt not but the Lord of Hosts will protect and assist those that fight in so glorious a Cause. Now ought you to think this strange, that I, who much reverence the Peace and concord of Nations, should exhort to a War. Your great Prophet CHRIST JESUS was the Lion of the Tribe of JUDAH, as well as the Lord and Giver of Peace: which may signify unto you, that he which is a lover and maintainer of Peace, must always appear with the terror of his Sword, and wading through Seas of blood, must arrive to Tranquillity. This made JAMES your Father, of glorious memory, so happily renowned amongst all Nations.

It was the most noble fame of your Princely virtues, which refunds to the utmost corners of the Earth, that persuaded me to invite you to partake of that blessing, wherein I boast myself most happy. I wish God may heap the Riches of his Blessing on you, increase your happiness with your days, and hereafter perpetuate the greatness of your Name in Ages.

Such was the Letter of that King; whose motion in all probability might have took effect, had not the Troubles, which not long after brake out in Scotland, put off the design. And therefore laying by the thoughts of his future purposes, let us take a view of the Revenues and Forces of this mighty Empire; before the late distractions made it less considerable. And first for the Revenues of it, the Xeriff are the absolute Lords of the whole Estate, and of his Subjects Goods and Bodies. The tenth and first Fruits of all sorts of Fruits, Corn and Cattel, he demands of course; though many times contented in the name of the first fruits, with one in twenty. The fifth part of a Ducat he receiveth for every Acre of Land throughout his Dominions; the other four parts for every Fire, and as much for every Head, whether Male or Female, which is above fifteen years of age. In Merchandise he receiveth of every Native two in the hundred, of an Alien ten; and hath a large Impost also upon every Mill. When any of his greater officers or Judges die, he is sole Heir of all their Goods; and yet advanceth great sums by the sale of those Offices. And in the levying of such Taxes as are extraordinary, he useth to demand more than he means to take; that the People finding him content to abate somewhat of his Due, may think themselves to be fairly dealt with.

As for their Forces, it is evident in matter of Fact; that Abdulla the first, at the liege of Mazagan, a Town held by the Portuguese, An. 1562, had no less than 200000 men; and that Abdel-Melech at the Battal of Alazar Guez, against King Sebastian, had 40000 Horse, and 80000 Foot, besides Voluntaries, and wild Arabians; it being supposed that he might have raised 30000 Horse more (notwithstanding the strong part which was made against him) had he thought it necessary. It is said also that Abdulla kept in constant pay 60000 Horse of which 15000 were quartered in the Realm of Sw, 25000 in Morocco, and the other 20000 in the Kingdom of Fesse; out of which he called 5000 of the best and ablest for the guard of his person, well mounted, and as richly furnished. Besides these he hath bodies of Horse in continual readiness, maintained according to the manner of the Turkish Timariots; and by Pensions given amongst the Chiefs of the Arabians, who live like Outlaws in the Mountains, and up and down in the Skirts of this Country, is furnished at his need with Supplies from them. Well stored with Ammunition also, there being 45 Quintals of Gunpowder laid up monthly in his famous Arsenal at Morocco; and yet not able to stay long (not above 3 months) upon any action, in regard that all his Souldiers live on his daily allowance; which maketh them, when his Provisions are consumed, to dissolve and scatter.

The

THE ISLES OF BARBARY.

THE ISLES OF BARBARY, which make up the fifth and last part thereof, are situate near the African shores of the Mediterranean, assigned by Ptolemy to the Province of Africa Propria. In number sixteen: 1. Hydrus, 2. Calabre, 3. Dracoutis, now called Chelli, 4. Aegynus, by Strabo called Aegynus, and now Guetta, 5. Larnesia, now Mellium, 6. Lapedusa, now Lampedusa, 7. Mesyrus, 8. Pontis, 9. Gaia; all of little note. 10. Insula Glauconis, with a City of the same name in it, now called Goza, and subject to the Knights of Malta. 11. Aethusa, by some called Aegusa, and consequently mistaken for Aegator, which lieth near Sicily. Of more note are the five that follow: Viz.

1. COSTRA, now called Pantalaria, equally distant from Africa and the Isle of Sicily, 60 miles from each. In length about thirty miles, and in breadth not above ten: Mountainous for the most part, and a full of black kind of Stone; the soil not very proper for Corn, and void of Rivers; but plentiful of Figs, Melons, and Cotton-Wool; well stored with Kine and Oxen, but without Horses. The people poor; by Religion Christians, and subject to the King of Spain: very good Swimmers of both Sexes, and in their speech and habit coming near the Moors. It hath a Town in it of the same name with the Island, situate on the Sea-side in the Northern part of it; defended with a very strong Castle.

2. CERCINA, now with little difference called Carthana, situate near the Coast of Africa, at the entrance (as it were) of the lesser Syrtis: in length twenty five miles, in breadth half as much, but in some places not above five. Exceeding fruitful in old times, able to furnish (as they did) the wants of Caesar and his Army, when he warred in Africa; Magni frumenti numero Cercine inventa, navem onerariam, quorum ibi satis magna copia, complet, atque in castra ad Caesarem mittit, are the words of the History. It hath a Town of the same name. Of no great note in way of Story, but for an handsome piece of Wit here shewed by Amibal; who flying from Carthage, met here some Merchants of that City, who had there come shipping in the Haven; and standing in some doubt, left by their discovery of his flight, he might be pursued, pretended a Sacrifice to Hercules the Tyrian Deity, to which he invited all the Sailors, and borrowed all their Sails to set up a Tent for their Entertainment; which having got into his hands, and leaving them asleep, he made on for Africa; secure enough not to be pursued, until out of danger.

3. LOTOPHAGITIS, now called Zerby, and by some Gerbe, is situate in the bottom of the Bay of Tripolis, divided from the Main Land by a narrow Ford. The Island full of Bogs and Marishes, without other Water, and in the midst of it somewhat hilly; indifferently fruitful, yielding Dates, Olives, Barley, Mill, and the like Commodities; inhabited by 30000 men, dwelling in low Cottages, and but simply apparelled: at had in it anciently two Cities, 1. Monix, which sometimes gave name unto the Island, called Monix by some elder Writers. 2. Gerrapolis, both now destroyed: insinuated whereof there is now one of more note than the rest, called by the same name with the Island and fortified with a very strong Castle. Subject unto the Turks, but governed by a poor King of its own. Both Fort and Island taken by the Christian Fleet, in the year 1559, for the King of Spain, to whom Caravanus the King thereof did submit himself conditioning to pay the yearly Tribute of 6000 Crowns, one Camel, four Ostriches, four Sparrow-Hawks, and four Faulcons. But the Christians were scarce warm in their new possession, when besieged in the Castle by Piali Bassa, to whom after some extremities the were fain to yield: these perishing in this unfortunate Action, by Sword, Famine, and Sicknes, 15000 Christians.

4. GAULOS, or GAUDUS, by the inhabitants called Gaudica, is distant about five miles from the Isle of Malta; to the Knights whereof it doth belong: given to them by the bounty of Charles the Fifth. The Island 30 miles in compass, well watered, and very fruitful. So great an Enemy to Serpents, and all venomous Creatures, that they neither breed here, nor will live here, brought from other places. The People Christians, but they speak the same Language with the neighbouring Saracens. The chief Town is of the same name with the Island, beautified with a capacious Haven, lying betwixt the West and South, and strongly fortified. Cruelly pillaged by the Turks in the year 1551, who carried hence 3000 Souls into endless Thraldom.

5. MALTA, the chief of the African Islands, lieth betwixt Tripolis in Barbary, and the Isle of Sicily; distant from this last about 60 miles, and from the other 180. In circuit about 60 miles, in length 20, and in breadth 12. Situate in the beginning of the fourth Climate, and eighth Parallel; so that the longest day in Summer is but 14 hours.

Anciently it was called Melite, and by that name occurred not only in Ptolemy and other Writers, but also in the Book of the Acts, in the Story of St. Paul's Shipwreck; this being the place where he and all his company were cast on Lands in memory whereof was built a little Chapel in the place of his Landing. So called most probably, ante Melitensem, from the abundance of Honey which it yielded in former times; Cicero charging it on Verres, that he came home loaded with 400 measures of Honey, and store of Melitensian Raiments; Jam non quero unde 400 amphoras melis habueris, unde tantum Melitensium Vestium, faith that famous Orator. The joyning of which two together, declare that he had robbed the same place for both; this Island being a near Neighbour of Sicily, which Verres governed then as Pretor. Nor is it strange, that an Island of the Coast of Africa, and using for the most part the Phœnician or Punic Language, should borrow its Appellation from the Greek; many of that Nation coming hither from the Isle of Sicily, and inhabiting here; and the whole Island sometimes subject to the power of Sicilian Greeks, though for the most part under the command of the State of Carthage.

It is situate wholly on a Rock, being not above three foot deep in earth; by consequence of no great fertility, the want of which is supplied with the plenties of Sicily. Yet have they here no small store of Pomegranates, Citrons, Oranges, Melons, and other excellent Fruits, both for taste and colour. They have also great abundance of Cotton-Wool (Gossypium the Latins call it) which they sow as we our Corn; the growth and ordering of which Wool, hath been shewn already, when we were in Syria. For the commodity of this Wool, and the Cloth made of it, the Romans had this Island in great esteem, thinking themselves happy when they gained it from the Carthaginians.

The natural Inhabitants of it are said to be churlish and uncivil; of the African Language and complexion, but followers of the Church of Rome, the Religion whereof these Knights are sworn to defend. The Women fair, but hating company, and going covered. The whole number of both Sexes, supposed to be 20000, possessed of 90 Villages, and four Cities. Places of note. 1. Malta, so called by the name of the Island, in the middle of which it is situated; built on an hill, but counted of no great importance, the strength and safety of the Island lying in the defence of the Shores and Havens. 2. St. Hermes, a strong Castle at the point of a long Languet, or tongue of Rock, thrusting out betwixt the two best Havens, both which it notably defendeth. Took by the Turks, Anno 1565, but at no cheaper rate than 2000 shot of Cannon, and the loss of 10000 of their men. 3. Valetta, situate on the same Languet, not far from the Castle of S. Hermes, (or rather lying close unto it) extended the whole breadth of the said Languet, from the one Sea to the other; and so commanding both the Havens. Built since the departure of the Turks unpregibly fortified, and called thus by the name of Valetta the Great Master, who so gallantly repulsed their Fury. In this Town the Great Master hath his Palace, and the Knights their several Alberges or Seminaries; all very fair and handsome Buildings. 4. Borgo, a little Town or City on another Languet, lying in the Eastern Haven; at the extremity of which Promontory in a demy Island stands the strong Castle of S. St. Angelo, built on a Rock, opposite to Valetta, on the other side of the Haven, and found impregnable by the Turks; who in vain besieged it. 6. Isola, a small City, and better deserving the name of a Town, situate in another Promontory on the South of the other, defended on the West-side by a strong Platform, at the point of the Foreland; and on the East-side, by the impregnable Castle of S. Michael; in vain assailed by the Turks, who on their ill success at the Siege hereto, gave over the Enterprize, and failed home.

The People of this Island originally were a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, but intermixt in tract of time with some Greek Plantations, coming hither out of Sicily, as before was said. For the most part dependant on the Fortunes of Carthage, afterwards of Rome, till subdued by the Saracens: by the Spaniards taken from the Moor; and by Charles the Fifth given to the Knights of Rhodes, not long before expelled thence by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1522. These Knights are in number 1000; of whom 500 are always to be resident in the Island. The other 500 are dispersed through Christendom, at their several Seminaries in France, Spain, Italy, and Germany; and at any Summons, are to make their personal appearance. These Seminaries (Alberges they call them) are in number seven, viz. one of France in general, one of Avignon, one of Provence, one of Castille, one of Aragon, one of Italy, and one of Germany over every one of which, they have a Grand Prior, who in the Country where he liveth, is of great reputation. An eighth Seminary they had in England, till the suppression of it by Henry the Eighth; yet they have some one or other, to whom they give the title of Grand Prior of England. Concerning the original and riches of these Knights, we have spoken when we were in Palestine now a word or two only of their places, and the Election of their Great Master. None are admitted into the Order, but such as can bring a Testimony of their Gentry for six Descents: and when the Cereemonies of their admission (which are many) are performed, they swear to defend the Church of Rome, to obey their Superiors, to live upon the Revenues of their Order only, and withal, to live chastly. Of these there be 16 of great Authority, (Counsellors of State we may fitly call them) called the Great Crosses; out of whom the Officers of their order, as the Marshal, the Admiral, the Chancellor, &c. are chosen: and who, together with the Master, punish such as are convict of any Crime. 1. By degrading him. 2. By strangling him. And 3. By throwing him into the Sea. Now when the Great Master is dead, they suffer no Vessel to go out of this Island till another be Elected, lest the Pope should intrude on their Election; which is performed in this manner: The several Seminaries nominate two Knights and two also are nominated for the Engliff: these 16 from amongst themselves choose eight; these eight choose a Knight, a Priest, and a Friar-cervant; and they three, out of the 16 Great Crosses, elect the Great Master. The Great Master being thus chosen, is titled (though but a Friar) The most Illustrious and most Reverend Prince, The Lord Friar N. N. Great Master of the Hospital of S. John of Jerusalem, Prince of Malta, Gaulles, and Goza. Far different I assure you, from that of the first Masters of this Order, who called themselves only Servants to the poor Servitors of the Hospital of Jerusalem; or that of the Master of the Temple, who was only entitled, The humble Minister of the poor Knights of the Temple.

This Island is conceived to yield to the Great Master the yearly Rent of 1000 Ducats, the greatest part whereof is sent out of Cotton-mool: besides which, he hath towards the maintaining of his Estate, the tenth part of the prizes which are won from the Turks; and certain thousands of Crowns yearly out of the Treasure of the Order, which is great and rich; and one of the best Commanderies in every Nation. And for the scouring of the Seas and securing of their Harbours, they have many good Gallies, each of them able to contain 500 Souldiers, and to carry 16 pieces of Ordnance, with which they make Excursions many times to the Coasts of Greece.

MOUNT

MOUNT ATLAS.

IN our way from Barbary to Libya Interior, we must pass over Mount Atlas, a ridge of Hills of exceeding great height, and of no small length. So high, that the top, or Summit of it is above the Clouds, at least so high, that the eye of man is not able to discern the top of it. Extat in hoc Mari mons cui nomen Atlas, (Saith Herodotus) is sublimis, ut ad illius verticem oculi mortuorum pervenire non possint. Yet notwithstanding, it is always covered with Snow in the heats of Summer. Difficult of ascent, by reason of the sharp and craggy precipices, which occur in many places of it; the rest were plainer and more even, of such wondrous steepness, that the precipices of the Rocks form the steepest way. Full of thick Woods, and yielding to the Countreys on the North side of it, the greatest part of the Rivers which refresh and moisten them: and where it bordereth on the proper, or Roman Africa, of such self-fertility, that it affordeth excellent fruits of its natural growth, not planted, grafted, or inoculated by the hand of man. The beginning of it on the shores of the Western Seas, which from hence have the name of the Atlantic Ocean; in the 26 Degree and 30 Minutes of the Northern Latitude and passing on directly Eastward, draw near unto the Borders of Egypt, part of Marmarica, or the Roman Libya, namely interposing. It is now called Anobis, and Monte Clavio: And took the name of Atlas, from Atlas King of Mauritania, who dwelt at the bottom of this Mountain; famed by the Poets to be turned into this Hill by Perseus, and the head of Medusa, Of the Daughters of this King, their golden Fruit, and the famous Gardens of the Hesperides, we have spoke already, though some remove the place of their habitation more into the West (then by us disposed of) and others into certain Islands of the Western Ocean, which we shall meet withal hereafter. He was said to have been a man of such wondrous height, that the Heavens rested on his Shoulders; of which, when weary, he discharged his burden on the Shoulders of Hercules; the ground of the fiction is taken from the height of the Mountain, the top whereof seemeth to touch the Sky; or from his extraordinary knowledge in Astronomy (as the times then were) whereby he came to be acquainted with the motions of the Stars and Planets; in which Knowledge he instructed Hercules, when he came unto him. But for the more Authentic description of it, take it thus from Virgil:

--- Jungs, volens apicem & latera ardua cernis
Atlantis duci, Calum qui vertice fulcit;
Atlantis, celsum afflue cui nubibus atri
Pinifera caput, & vento pulsatur & imbri.
Nix humeros infusa tegit, non flamma mento
Precipitant sonu, & glacie riget horrida barba.

Which may be Englished in these words:

Then flying, he the top and sides descends
Of Atlas, whose proud head supports the Skies.
Atlas, whose Piny head with Clouds inclosed,
Is to the storms of Wind and Rain exposed.

Now hides the Snow his Arms, now tumbleth down Upon his Chin; his Beard with Ice o'er-grown.

OF LIBYA INTERIOR.

LIBYA INTERIOR is bounded on the North, with Mount Atlas, by which parted from Barbary and Cyrenæa; on the East, with Libya Marmarica, interposed betwixt it and Egypt, and part of Æthiopia Superior, or the Habassine Empire; on the South with Æthiopia Inferior, and the Land of the Negros; and on the West with the main Atlantic Ocean.

The reason of the name we have seen before, given to this Country in regard of its contiguities and resemblance to the other Libya; or else became descended from the Children of Lebanus, by which that Country was first planted. For of King Lybia, or Queen Libya (the Daughter of Enaphis, and Cassiopea) and other the like fictions of the Greeks, I shall take no notice. Distinguished from the other by the addition of Interior, as lying more within the main Land of Africa, the other being partly a Maritime Country.

Of the nature of the Soil and people we shall speak anon, when we come to take a view of its several parts. Look we now on it as it stood in the time of the Romans: when, though not so well travelled, or discovered, as in these last times: yet have we more particulars of it, as to the names and situation of the Rivers, Mountains, and chief Towns, than any of our late Writers have preferred to us. The Rivers of most note, 1. Salabus, 2. Chusirius, 3. Ophiodus, 4. Nobis, 5. Maffia, 6. Sobus, 7. Dardanus, 8. Stachiris, and 9. Mathisalus; all of them paying tribute to the Western or Atlantic Ocean. Mountains of most note, 1. Mandrus, out of which floweth the River Salabus, 2. Sagapala, which gives being to the River Sobus, 3. Rysadus, from whence Stachiris, 4. the Mountain called Deorum Carrus (of which more anon) whence Maffisalus, and Mount Capus, out of which Dardanus have their first Originals. Then there are, 5. Mount Ufur-gala, and 6. Mount Gignis, from the first of which the River Bagradus, and from the last that of Cynophus do derive their waters: and passing through the breaches of Atlas (of which these Mountains seem to be some dismembered Limbs) cross the whole breadth of the Roman Africa, to make themselves a way to the Mediterranean. Besides these, more within the Land, we find the famous Rivers of Gir and Niger: of which the first maketh the two great Lakes of Nubis and Cleobandus: the second those as great, or greater, called Nigritus, and the Lake of Libya. Which makes me wonder by the way, that in a Country so well watered as this seems to be, our Modern Writers should complain of such want of water: as if there were neither Spring, nor River, nor Pond, nor Lake, nor any thing to moisten and refresh the Earth, but the dews of Heaven, or some Pits of salt and brackish water not worth the tasting. Phrynia must either be mistaken, which I hardly think; or our late Travellers not so punctual in their observations, which I rather credit: or else the Rivers which were here in the time of my Author, in his arenarum vagitibus diffunduntur, must be dried up and swallowed in these sandy Defarts, as Magnus telleth us; finally there hath happened some later conflagration than that of Phœnix, to which the want of water may be better attributed than it was to his. Of which thus the Poet:

Hinc fallax est Libya, raptis humeribus æstu, Arida— Which Geo. Sandys thus rendreth;
A sandy Defart Libya thus became,
Her full veins emptied by the thirsty flame.

Places of note and name in those elder times, 1. Salathier on the River to named, 2. Bagaxi, 3. Jazabih, and 4. Babiba, all honoured with the name of Cities. 5. Gamar, 6. Gira, and Nigra, the Metropoles of their several Nations. Then there were two Havens of some good esteem, the one called Magnus Portus, the other Portus Perphobus, besides 43 other Towns and Cities (twelve of these on the banks of the River Niger) whose names and situation do occur in Pliny, which shews the Country not to be of uninhabitable and void of people, as was pretended by some other (but less diligent) Writers.

Nations of most note in it in the former times, were 1. the Getulii on the back of Mauritania, a resolute and unconquered people, Græci insuperabile bello, as we find in Virgil: 2. the Garamantes, dwelling South of Cyrenæa, and giving name to a large and spacious Territory, called Vallis Garamantica, supposed to be the most remote Nation towards the South, as the Indians were towards the East; whence we have ultra Garamantas & Indos, in another Poet. 3. the Pyræi, an Ethiopic Nation, on the South of the River Gir: 4. the Nigritæ, originally *Ethiopi*ans also, inhabiting on the North of the River Niger: 5. the Odrangidi, of the same original extraction, possessing the Country between the Mountains Capha and Thala: 6. the Perorsii, dwelling near the Hills called Deorum Curus: 7. the Ménaii, at the foot of Mount Thala: 8. the Nabæ, on the West of Vallis Garamantica: 9. the Derbici, dwelling on the West of the Hill Aranga: and 10. the Pisylli, placed by Pliny amongst the Inhabitants of Cyrene: but so near the Borders of this Country, and so far from the Civilities of those Nations which converted either with Rome or Carthage; that they may more properly be thought to belong to this. Of a Nature so venomous, that they could poison a Snake. Insumuch, that when their Wives were delivered, they would throw their Children amongst a Bed of Serpents, supposing that child to be born of an adulterate bed, the very smell of whose Body would not drive away a whole brood of the like poisonous Vermin. Others there were of less note, that Author calleth Minores Gentes; many in number, of small fame, and therefore not material to be here inserted; those of most note, the Africæmer, (whom some Authors call the Gampaphantes) honoured with the Attribute of Geni Magna, the greatest as it seems of those lesser Nations. None of them of much note in the way of story, except they were the Libyans, which are so famous in Herodotus for an expedition they made against the South-Wind. For when this Wind blowing abroad the Hills and Defarts of Sand, had dried up those many pools and waters they had among them; they, to revenge this injury, by common consent armed themselves, and went to fight against him. But they took not the South-Wind unprepared. For he mustered up his forces, and encountered them with such a brave volley of Sand, that he overwhelmed and slew them all. A better Friend was the North-Wind to the Citizens of Regium in Libya, and better was he rewarded for it: for having scattered a mighty Fleet, which Dionysius prepared against them, he was by the Common-Council made free of their City. That part of Cæsar's war which was managed here, we shall hereafter meet with on another occasion.

Thus having took a view of the state of this Country, as it stood of old; we will next look upon it in its present condition; as comprehending the whole Provinces of 1. Biledalgerid or Numidia, 2. Libya Deserta, or Saraceni; and 3. a great part of that Country which is now called Terra Nigritarum. But because the greatest part of this last Country is to come under another Account; we will here only take the two first into consideration.

1. NUMIDIA.

NUMIDIA, is bounded on the East, with Egypt; on the West, with the Atlantic Ocean; on the North, with Mount Atlas, which parteth it from Barbary and Cyrene; on the South, with Libya Deserta.

It was thus first called by John Leo, an African Writer, to whose description of all Africa we are much beholdings, because of that resemblance which the people of it have to the old Numidians; which is after the custom of the Nomades, living without Houses, under their Wagons and Carts, as Lucan testifieth of them, thus:

*Nulla domus, pluvibus habitant, migrare per arva
Mous, atque errare circumcære Penates.*

They dwell in Wains not Houses; and do stray
Through Fields, and with them lead their Gods each way.

And worthily may they owe their Names to them, from whom they borrow so much of their Nature: for the People to this day spend their lives in hunting, and stay but three or four days in a place, as long as the grails will serve the Camels. This is the cause why this Country is full peopled, the Towns so small in themselves, and so remote from others. An example herof is Tesser, a great City in their esteem, which yet containeth but 400 households, and hath no neighbours within 300 miles of it.

The Country aboundeth with Dates, whence it is called Dalylorum regio, and in the Arabic Biledalgerid, which signifieth also a Date-Region. These Dates (to speak properly) the fruit of the Palm-Trees, usually growing in hot Countries, of which some are male, some female; the first bringing forth only flowers, the other fruit; and yet the male so beneficial to the increase of the Dates, that unless a flowered bough of the male be ingrafted into the female, the Dates never prove good, in case they bear any Dates at all, as before was noted. This fruit is the chief diet of the people; but this sweet Meat hath few Sauce, for it commonly rotteth their Teeth betimes. As for the Stones of these Dates, they feed their Goats with them, whereby they grow fat, and yield store of Milk. The Air herof, of so found a nature, that if a man be troubled with the French Disease, he shall there, without any course of Physick find a present Remedy.

The natural Inhabitants of this Country are said to be a base and vile people, Thieves, Murderers, Treacherous, and ignorant of all things; feeding most commonly on Dates, Barley, and Carrion; accounting Bread a Diet for their Festival days. But the Arabians, who are intermingled with them, in most part of the Country, affirmed to be (comparatively with the Natives) ingenious, liberal, and civil. The Garments of these Numidians, of the coarsest Cloth, to shew, that they cover not half the Body: the richer sort, distinguished by a Tucker of Blue Cotton with wide Sleeves. Their Steeds are Camels, which they ride on without stirrup, or so much as a saddle; a leather, thrust through through an hole made in the nose of the Camel, serves them for a Bridle; and to save the charge of Spurs, they make use of a goad. Their Religion, Mahometism, to which pertained Christianity having once had some footing here; in the year 710; the Azawaghi and other people of those parts then subdued by the Saraceni: who held them for a Nation of so little reckoning, that no man of account amongst them would defend so low as to be their Princes but left them to be ruled as in former times, by the Chiefs or Heads of their several Clans.

The chief River which is left, hath the name of Dara, and possibly enough may be the Daradus of Pliny. The rest which are mentioned in that Author, rising out of Mount Atlas, and falling thence this way, finding these barren Wildernesses to afford them the readiest Channels, are trained along by the allurements of the Sands; and are either swallowed up in great Lakes; or being too liberal to the thirsty Sands in their way to the Sea, die at the last for thirst in the midst of the Deserts.

The Principal of their Provinces (if capable of a distinction into better and worse) 1. DARA; more cultivated than the rest, because of the River running thorough it, whence it hath its name: 250 miles in length, indifferently fruitful, where the River doth overflow and water it; and of so different a nature from all the rest, that here the country people have some scattered Villages, the better for their several Capitels. 2. PESCARA, so called from the chief Town of it; exceedingly infected with Scorpions; the sting whereof is present death. 5. FIGHIG, so called from the chief Town also, inhabited by an industrious and witty people (in respect of the rest) some of which betake themselves to Merchandises; come to the study of their Law, which they study at Fess, and grow rich upon it. 4. TEGORARIN, a large Region, and well inhabited, better than any except Dara; as having in it 90 Castles, so Gentlemen Houses, and 200 Villages. The people wealthy, in regard of the great Trade which they drive with the Negroes; and pretty good husbands in managing their land, on which they are forced to lay much toil; and will therefore let some of themselves and their Cattel. 5. BILEDALGERID, specially so called, abundantly fruitful in Dates, whence it had the name; but destitute of Corn, by reason of the extremity of the soil; and yet hath in it many Towns of good name among them. 10. Tesser, 6. Tesser, 7. Segelmiff, 8. Zeh, 9. Tebellati, and 10. Fessin, so called from the chiefest of their Towns and Villages.

Towns of most note both now and in former times, besides those spoken of before, 1. Timgedit, in the Province of Dara, the birth-place of Mohomet Ben Amir and his three Sons, the Founders of the Xeriffian Empire. 2. Tafilaite, in the said Province, to which place Mohomet the second of these Sons, and second King of Morocco, of that family, confined his elder Brother Amir, having took him prisoner, Anno 1544. 3. Tesser, a great Town of 400 houses, but so poorly neighboured, that there is no other inhabited place within 300 miles of it but of that before. 4. Tebellati, the Inhabitants whereof are very courteous to strangers, whom they entertain at free cost; and choose rather to marry their daughters to them, than to any of the Natives. 5. Ebnacab, the most Eastern Town in all this Country, distant about 100 miles from the Borders of Egypt. 6. Debris, one of the chief Cities of the Garamantes, of great renown in former times for the Wells or Fountains of the Sea. The Water whereof being lukewarm at the Sea rising, cooled more and more till noon, and was then very cold, and so continued until midnight; afterwards by degrees growing hotter and hotter; as if it had a natural Antipathy with the Sun, hottest when that was furthest off and cold when nearest. 7. Mafiche, seated on a Rock, garisoned by Jugurth for a place of refuge, but taken by Marine in the prosecution of that War. 8. Cuspa, the chief City of all this Tract, said to be built by Heracles; but questionable of very great strength; angustus arenifera vallata, made inaccessible (saith the Historian) by the thick Sands, and multitude of Serpents which were harboured in them; but easily forced by Marine in his wars with Jugurth, and utterly destroyed by Cæsar in his war against Juba.

It seems by this, that those people neighbouring Mount Atlas, were much at the disposal of the Kings of Mauritania, in the times foregoing, and so they have been also in these latter times. For though neglected by the Romans, who thought it an high point of wisdom not to extend their Empire beyond that Mountain; yet the Saraceni had not long possessed themselves of those parts of Barbary, which was in the year 698; but within twelve years (An 710.) they subdued this Country, and planted their Religion in it, though not themselves. Nor was Amir, the first Xeriff of Morocco, warm in that estate, when he thought it best for him to secure himself in it by the conquest of this: to whose Successors, the Chiefs of the Tribes herof render some acknowledgments.

2. LIBYA DESERTA.

LIBYA DESERTA, is bounded on the North with Numidia, or Biledalgerid towards the South, with the Land of Negroes wholly; and on the West with Gualata, another Province of these Negroes, interposed betwixt it and the Atlantic.

The reason of the name of Libya we have had before. To which Deserta was added upon very good reasons, as well to difference it from the other Libya, a Province of Egypt, as to express the barren and sandy condition of it: in which respect by the Arabians called Sarra, signifying, in their language a rude and uninhabitable Desert, as this Country is. So truly such, that men may travel in it eight days together without finding Water, or seeing any tree, and no grass at all. The water which they have is drawn out of Pits, exceeding brackish; and many times those Pits so covered with the Sands, that men die for thirst: the Marchants therefore carrying their water with them on the backs of Camels; which if it fail, they kill their Camels, and drink a water which they wring out of their guts. And yet as dangerous and uncomfortable as these Deserts be, they are very much travelled by the Merchants of Fess and Tremefin, trading to Agades and Tombatum, in the Land of Negroes.

The People differ not much from the Numidians in shape or qualities; but if a worse quality, it must be the Libyan. They did once worship a God called Pasaphon, who when he lived, taught divers Birds which he caught, and then set at liberty, to say these words, viz. Pasaphon is a great God; which the simple people hearing, and admiring at it, afforded him Divine honours. Converted at last to the Christian Faith, they remained a while in the profession of the Gospel: exterminated by the Saraceni, about the year 710. who having added Numidia or Biledalgerid to their former conquests, planned their Superstitions in this Country also.

This Country is divided (as others into Provinces) into five great Deserts, to which those of less note are to be referred.

1. ZANHAGA, beginning at the Borders of Gualata, (interposed betwixt it and the Atlantic Ocean) and extending Eastward to the Salt-pits of Togaza; having on the South, Gualata and Tombatum in the Land of Negroes; so destitute of water, that there is one pit only at the end end of each hundred mile, brackish and unwholesome; and in the Desarts of Asand and Arsan, which are parts of this, but one in an 150 or 200 miles riding.

2. ZUENZIGA, extended from the Salt-pits of Tegaza Eastward, to the Desart of Targa: bounded on the North with Sagelmefi and Tobelbaty, Namidian Provinces; and on the South, with the Desart and Gbir and Guber. So void of water, (especially in that part thereof which is called Goguda) that in Nine days Travel there is not so much as one drop to be seen, but what they carry on their Camels.

3. TARGA, extended Eastward to the Desart of Igbiadi, and reaching from Tegerasin in the North, to the Desart of Agadez in the South, the best conditioned part of all this Country, well watered, of a temperate Air, and a Soil reasonably fruitful. In length from North to South 300 miles, and liberally strewed with Manna, which they gather into little Vessels, and carry to Agadez to sell. Mingled in water, or with Potage, it is very cooling & drank of in their Feasts, as a special dainty.

4. LEMBTA, extendeth from the Desarts of Igbiadi, unto that of Bordau.

5. BORDEA, which reacheth to the borders of Nubia. Of these two there is little to be said in general, but that this last was lately discovered by one Hamara guide to a Caravan of Merchants who blinded with the Sands, wandered out of his way, and causing Sand to be given him at every twenty miles end, found by the smell at last that they begun to draw nigh home inhabited place; and told them of fifty miles before they came to it.

Cities of Note we hope for none, where we find no

Water. Of such as go for Cities here, the most comfortable, 1. Tegaza, rich in veins of Salt, resembling Marble; which the Inhabitants, being twenty days distant from any habitation, and consequently many times in danger to die for famine, exchange for Victuals with the Merchants of Tombutun, who come higher for it. Much troubled with the South-Wind, which doth so drive the Sands upon them, that it causeth many of them to lose their sight. 2. Huaden, or Hoden, a known resting place, and a great refreshment to the Merchant in the midst of these Desarts. 3. Guargata, on the brink of a Lake, fed by a River of hot Water; affirmed to be a Town of elegant building, and inhabited by a wealthy people. 4. Tobatum, of little note, but that it serveth for a Stage or halting-place to the weary Traveller. Of which kind there are said to be others at the extremities or ends of each several Desart, the Havens of such men as sail in those Sandy Seas; but not else observable.

Nor is there much, if any thing observable of them in the way of Story, but that not looked after by any of the great Conquerors, either Greek or Roman, much of the Country possessed by Arabian Colonies, (men fit enough to plant in such barbarous Nations) at such time as the Saracens planted their Religion here. The Government of the Country since, as it was before, by the Chiefs of their several Clans or Families, who as they know no Law themselves, so do the people hear as much ignorance of it in their lives and actions, differing but little from brute Beasts, more than in shape and speech.

TERRA NIGRITARUM.

TERRA NIGRITARUM, or THE LAND OF NEGROES, is bounded on the East, with Aethiopia Superior; on the West, with the Atlantic Ocean; on the North, with Libya Deserta; and on the South, with the Aethiopic Ocean, and part of Aethiopia Inferior. So called from the Nigritie, the chief of the Nations here inhabiting in the time of Ptolomy, and they so named from the River Niger, of which more anon.

The Country very hot by reason of its situation under the Torrid Zones yet very well inhabited, full of people, and in some places always green: well watered, and exceeding fruitful, specially in those parts which lie within the compass of the overflowings of the River Niger; and on the further side of the River Senaga: abundantly well stored both with Corn, Cattel, and Garden-ware for the use of their Kitchens; well Wooded, and those Woods well furnished with Elephants and other Beasts, both wild and tame. Their greatest wants (but such a want as may be born with) is the want of Fruit-Trees; few of which they have; and those they have, bear one kind of fruit only, which is like the Chestnut, but somewhat bitter. Rain here doth neither hurt nor help; their greatest welfare consisteth in the overflowings of Niger; as that of Egypt in the Inundations of Nile. In some parts liberally enriched with Mines both of Gold and Silver; very fine and pure: so that had not the Portugals affected the honour of discovering New Worlds, as much as Wealth, they might have made as rich a Factory here, as at the Indies.

The Inhabitants, till the coming of the Portugals thither, were for the most part so rude and barbarous, that they seem to want that use of Reason which is peculiar unto man; of little Wit, and destitute of all Arts and Sciences; prone to Luxury, and for the greatest part Idolaters, though not without some small admixture of Homemans. When the Portugals first failed into these Coasts, the People hereof took the Ships for great Birds, with white Wings; and after, upon better acquaintance, they could not be brought to believe, but that the Eyes which were usually painted on the Beaks of the Ships, were the Eyes by which they saw how to direct themselves in their course. Guns seemed to them, for their hideous noise, to be work of the Devil; and for Bag-pipers, they took them to be living creatures; neither when they had them permitted to feel them, would they be persuaded that they were the work of Gods own hand. The very Nobles (if so noble a name may without offence be given to such blockish people) are so dull and stupid, that they are ignorant of all things which belong to Civil Society: and yet so reverent of their King, that when they are in his presence, they never look him in the face, but sit flat on their buttocks, with their elbows on their knees, and their hands on their faces. They use to anoint their hair with the fat of Fishes, which makes them think more wretchedly than they would do otherwise. Of Complexion they are for the most part Cole black, whence the name of Negrees; but on the South-side of the River Senaga, they are only Tawny: the Blacky so much in love with their own complexion, that they use to paint the Devil White; which I find thus verified:

*The Land of Negroes is not far from thence,
Never extended to th' Atlantick Main;
Wherein the Black Prince keeps his residence,
Attended by his Jetty-coloured Train:
Who in their Native Beauty most delight,
And in contempt do paint the Devil White.*

They have tried all Religions, but agree in none. Idolaters at the first, as others the Descendants of Cham: Afterwards it is said, that they received the Rites and Religion of the Jews, (but the time and occasion of it I do not here find) in which they continued very long: But that being worn out at the last, Christianity prevailed in some Kingdoms of it. In the year 973, Mohometism began to get ground amongst them, by the diligence and zeal of some of the Preachers of that Law: the first who were seduced that way, being those of Me after which Tombuto, and then Gualata, were infected with the same poison also. In the end, all the rest of this Country followed their example, except the Kingdom of Borneo, some part of Nubia, and the Coasts of the Atlantic Ocean, which continue in their ancient Gentilism; Christianity being confined to a corner of Nubia (if still there remaining) and some few Garrisons belonging to the Crown of Portugal. And as they are of different Religions, so are they also of several Languages: those of Gualata, Guinea, Tombutun, Melli, and Gugonti, speaking the Language called Singai; the Guberoi, Canotes, Chefene, and Gangreter, &c. that called Gubro; Gualata, a language of its own; and those of Nubia, once resembling the Arabick, Chaldean and Egyptian.

Mountains of most note in it, in the former times, were those of 1. Aravates, and 2. Aravus, and 3. that called Dorom Curras; this last supposed to be the same which is now called Pumie de Lopez Conzales, but that more probably, which they now call Cabo de Sierra Leona, a large Promontory, thrusting it self into the Sea; discerned afar off by the Sailer and the Country people, as well by reason of his height, reaching to the Clouds, as the continual Lightnings and Thunder which do issue thence.

Rivers of most note, besides Nile, which watereth it on the East, 1. Senaga, or Canaga, which riseth out of the Lake of Ganga, supposed to be the same which Ptolomy calleth Lacum Chelmidan. And if so, then must this be the River Gir, of which he saith, that having fallen into that Lake, and there swallowed up, it thence produced another River, whose name he telleth not; 's little inferior unto Nile, for the length of its course, the variety of strange Creatures which are bred therein, or the distinction which it maketh in the face of this Country; the people on the one side of it being Black, on the other Tawny; the soil on the one side very barren, on the other fruitful. In the end, having run his race, he falleth into the Atlantic, by two great Outlets. 2. Niger, a River better known to Ptolomy by name than nature; now found to have its rise from a great Lake, within two degrees of the Aequinoctial, whence running Northwards for a time, he hideth himself under ground for the space of 60 miles together; when rising up again, and making a great Lake called the Lake of Borneo, he bendeth his course directly Westward; and taking in many less Channels, he teareth the Earth into many Islands, and at last falleth into the Sea. Of as long course, and the same wondrous nature as the River Nile. For from the fifteenth day of June it over-floweth all the adjacent fields, the space of 40 days together; and in so many more, recolletheth his Waters into their proper Channels: the whole Country being indebted to these inundations for its fertility, which otherwise could be but small; since the drinels of the Soil can afford no exhalations, whereby Clouds may be generated, and the Earth refreshed with moistures, or revived with dews.

Chief Cities of this Country in the time of Ptolomy, 1. Nigra, the Metropolis of the Country, 2. Panagra, 3. Milabath, 4. Anyath, 5. Thomondacana, 6. Sulnee, and others, to the number of 17 in all; situate all along the course of the River Niger: Of all which we have nothing now remaining but the situation and the names, which that Author giveth us. So that the memory of all the ancient Towns and people being quite defaced, we must look upon it now as it standeth divided at this time into several kingdoms, 25 at the least in all, (some say many more) the chief of which are these that follow.

1. ORA ANTEROSA, a large Tract of Ground on the Western Ocean, extended from Cape Blanco to the River Carnaga, sandy and barren, but reasonably well peopled. The Inhabitants hereof called Azanbaji, were accounted formerly very rude and barbarous; much civilized since the Portugals and other Christian Nations began to trade there; of middle stature, complexioned between black and ash-colour, great liars, very treacherous, poor, and parsimonious, and very patient in extremes both of heat and hunger. The chief Towns, 1. Porto di Dio (we may call it Gods Port) and 2. Porto del Rifatto, two frequented Havens, thus named occasionally by the Portuguese, at their first coming thither. 3. Arguin, a strong Fortrefs of the Portugals, situate on or near the Promontory now called Cape Blanco; and giving name unto some Islands, five or six in number, lying near unto it, called the Isles of Arguin; inhabited by a barbarous people, named the Azanbaji, but of no great note. These Coasts discovered first by the Portugals, Anno 1482, under the Conduct of Prince Henry, Son of John the first, or by his encouragement and directions.

2. GUALATA, distant from the Ocean 100 miles, (the Province of Libya; as being interposed) is but a small Country, though a Kingdom; containing in it but three Burrough-Towns, with some Territories of ground and petty Hamlets belonging to them. Fruitful only in Dates, Mill, and Pulse; but of these two last no great abundance. The Inhabitants Coal-Black, hospitable towards Strangers to their power, but poor and miserable, without Laws, settled form of Government, Gentry and Judges.

3. AGADEZ, bordering on Targa, one of the five Desarts of Libya; the people of it generally given to grazing; their Houses made of green Boughs, which upon every change of Pasture they carry with them. So that we are to look for few Towns among them, but their movable Villages. One of good note it hath, called Agadez, by the name of the Country, inhabited for the most part by Merchants Strangers, who drive a great Trade betwixt this and Tremelen. The Town well walled, the Houses of a better building than the Country promisseth; the people people civiler, and more fair conditioned than the rest of the Negroes; feasted commodiously on a River which falleth into the Sonaga, and by that means hath correspondence with the Ocean also. The King hereof a Tributary to the King of Tombuto, payeth him 15000 Crowns of Annual Tribute.

4. CANO, a large Province on this side of the River Canaga, full of Woods, Mountainous, and in some parts Defart; but plentiful enough of Corn, Rice, Citrons and Pomegranates, with good store of Cotton-Wool. Well watered, besides that great River, with some lesser Streams. Sufficiently populous, and stored with good Towns and Villages, the habitations of the Shepherds and Husbandmen, as the chief Town called Cano is of wealthy Merchants. This the Seat Royal of their King, a Tributary also unto him of Tombuto, environed with a Wall, built of a Chalk-stone, as most part of the Houses are.

5. CASENA, on the East of Cano, but less fruitful far; the Country over-grown with vast Woods, and the foil untractable, affording only Mill and Barly, but of that good plenty. The people as black as any Coal, with great Noses, and most prominent Lips. Their Houses very poor and mean, and their Towns accordingly, none of them numbering more than 300 Families.

6. SANAGA, lying on the other side of that River, from which this name is extended to the Atlantick Ocean, as far as to the Promontory which by Ptolomy named Africarium, is now called Cape-Vert, or Caput Viride. The Country full of rich Pastures, goodly Trees, and most sorts of Fruits; plentiful enough of Mill and Pulle, but ill provided of other Corn, and no Grapes at all. Well watered both with Lakes and Rivers. No tame Beasts about their Fields, but Goats, Cows, and Oxen; of Lyons, Leopards, Wolves, and Elephants, too great a plenty. The people extream black, much given to lying, treacherous, very full of talk, excessively vengeous, and extream jealous. A King they have, but such a one as holdeth but by Consejse only, having no certain Reuts or Revenues, but what is given by his Nobles.

7. GAMBIA, or GAMBEA, a small Kingdom on the River so named, but bordering in some places on the Atlantick. In those parts very pleasant, the Trees always flourishing, the Air very hot; in other parts of the same nature with Sanaga, but that this affords good store of Rice, which the other doth not.

8. TOMBUTUM, on the further side of the River Sanaga; exceeding plentiful of Corn, Cattel, Milk, and Butter. Defitute of Salt, but what they buy of foreign Merchants at excessive rates; and small flocks of Horses. Well watered by a Branch also of the River Niger, and many Wells of purpose made to receive fresh Waters as by Artificial Dikes and Channels are derived from both. The people courteous, rich and pleasant, spending whole days and nights in singing and dancing. Their food, Fish, Butter, Milk, and Fils, which they mingle together, and make it neither toothsome nor wholesome. The chief Towns, 1. Tombuto, which gives name to this Kingdom, situate about twelve miles from a branch of the Niger, and founded by the Saracens or Arabians in the 610. year of their Hegira. The Houses all of mud and thatch, except one fair Church, and the Kings Palace, both of Lime and Stone. Inhabited by wealthy Merchants, who manage a great Trade betwixt this and Effie. 2. Gago, the residence of the King, large, without Walls, the Buildings very poor and mean, except such as belong unto the King, or the chief Nobility. The Merchants rich, and their Wares sumptuous and precious, but excessive dear. The Town about 400 miles distant from Tombuto, situate in a fruitful Country for Rice, Fruits and Fiefl, and well replenished with fresh water. 3. Cabra, a large Town, but unwall'd, and of no better building than the other two.

9. MELLI, lying on the East of Tombuto, is a spacious and fruitful Province, situate all along on a Branch of the River Niger, in breadth 300 miles, and abundantly fertile, especially in Corn, Cattel, and Cotton-Wool: the people generally very wealthy; of greater wit, civility and industry, than the rest of the Negroes. The chief Town of it is called Melli, unwall'd, but large, as containing in it 6000 Families; furnished with many Temples, Priests, and Readers of the Mahomeian Law, which those of this Country did first unhappily admit of. This the Seat-Royal of their Kings, who are very courteous unto Forajers; but Homagers and Tributaries to the King of Tombuto.

10. GHENEOA, situate betwixt Gualata, Tombuto, and Melli, but so, that it bordereth in one place on the Ocean also; is a wealthy Country: but hath neither Town or Cattel in it, except that wherein the King resideth, who is a Vassal also to the King of Tombuto. That Town the residence also of their Priests, Doctors, and Merchants; of which the Priests and Doctors are apparelled in white, but all the rest in black or blue Cotton. The people have great Traffick with the Merchants of Barbary, and though made very rich by the overflowings of Niger, and the wealth of the Country, they have great store of Gold uncoined; yet in buying and selling at home, they use iron money.

11. GUBER lieth on the East of the former Province, of the same length, and naturally well fenced with lofty Mountains. Exceeding populous, and thick set with Villages; in which dwell their Husbandmen, and Shepherds; rich in their numerous herds of all sorts of Cattel, as also great quantities of Rice and Pulle: the people very industrious and good Artificers. Their Principal Town is called Guber also, a Town of 6000 Families, the usual residence of their King; full of wealthy Merchants, and rich in Manufactures.

12. GLALOFI lieth betwixt the two great Rivers of Sanaga and Gambia. The people whereof are of such admirable dexterity, that they can leap upon an horse when he is in his full Gallop, stand in the Saddle when he runneth fastly, turn themselves about upon his back, and suddenly down. Of their Country I find little, of their Story nothing, but that Bennin one of their Kings, being over-laid with Civil Wars, in the year 1489, went for Aid to the King of Portugal, and gave great hopes of his conversion to the Christian Faith. But being shamefully murdered by Petro de Vaz, the Portugal General, the hopes of Christianity in these parts fell together with him.

13. GUINEA, is a Sea-Coast Country, extended from Sierra Leona, (so called from the Lion-like roaring of the Waves beating on that Promontory) in the 10. degree of Longitude, to the Borders of Bennin in the 30. But the Portugals comprehend under this name the whole Sea-Coast of Africa from Cape Blanco and the Country of Ora Antrofia, to Angola and Congo, inclusively, in the Lower Aethiopia. But take it in the proper sense, as before-mentioned, and we shall find it to be rich in Gold, Ivory, Rice, Barley, Cotton-Wool, and a sort of Pepper, which the Portugals call Pimenta del Rubo, the Natives Melageta, and we Guiny-Pepper, of double the efficacy of the Pepper which comes from India; and therefore forbidden to be sold by the King of Portugal, for fear their Indian-trade should be discontinued. Well stored with Sheep and Poultry, and of Dates good plenty. All other fruits which which they want, or care for, are brought thither from Gualata. Birds in abundance, and of Elephants and Apes too many. A Tree they have, by them called Mignolo, the Bark whereof being cut, doth afford a most excellent Liqueur, more pleasant, strong and nourishing than the choicest Wines; which the drink of in their great Feasts, even to drunkenness. The people of both Sexes very rude and barbarous; as well in their habit as their manners; yet amongst many barbarous Customs, they have one most commendable, which is the breeding of their Maidens. When Marriageable, they place them in an house severed from the rest of their Cities, like a Cloyster, or Monastery, where for a space they are trained up by some old man of best estimation. At the years end they are brought out well apparelled, with Musick and Dancers; where the young men please themselves in the choice of their Wives: for whom having bargained with their Parents, they satisfy the old man for his care and pains in their Education. They keep one day of rest weekly, but therein differ from all Nations in the World besides, that they keep their Sabbath upon the Tuesday. Distracted into as many Kingdoms as great Tribes or Families: the Kings thereof subordinate unto one another, as they live more within the Land, till they end all in a subjection to the King of Maninga. Places of most note, 1. Songue, the principal of Maninga, about 100 Leagues Eastward from the Cape of Palmas, 2. Badomel, the chief Town of the Kingdom so called, 3. Usoo, in the Centre of all the Country. 4. Mina, a strong hold of the Portugals, situate near the Cape called Cabo de trois ponts, the three pointed Cape; named sometimes also S. George de Mina, by the name of the Cappadocian Martyr, and the Mines of Gold, which they hoped to find there: By which, and by the Port of Arguin, which they have upon Cape Blanco, in the North part of this Land of the Negroes, they command all the Countries which they call by the name of Guinea. This Town not built until the year 1486, in the beginning of the Reign of John the Second, though the discovery of these Coasts had been made before, Anno 1482, under the Conduct of Prince Henry Duke of Viseu, Son of John the First. By whose encouragement the Portuguese did first employ themselves in Foreign Discoveries, and became enamoured of the Seas. For in this interval, the Portugals being more covetous of new Discoveries, than of fortifying and securing the old, gave opportunity to the Catholians to look after this Country, who having took a view of it in the year 1477, pursued the Enterprise the next year with a Fleet of 35 Ships, under the Command of Pedro de Cabides, who brought thence great quantity of Gold: but in the year 1479, by an Agreement or Capitulation between those Princes, the Trade heretofore was again left free to the Portugals; who thereupon discovering the life of S. George, and finding it a fit place to secure and command the rest, built in it the strong Fort or Castle of Mina, which before we spoke of.

14. BENIN lieth directly East of Guinea, by the Portugals reckoned for a Province, or Kingdom of it; the King whereof is said to have 600 Wives, with all which twice a year he goeth out in Pomp. The Gentlemen (if I abuse not the name) have most of them 80 Wives, some more; he that is poor, ten or twelve, and the more the merrier. The people thereof do cut and raise their skin with three lines drawn to the Navel, esteeming it necessary to salvation. They use all, both men and women, to go naked till they are married; and then to be clothed only from the waist to the knees; so that had our Sir Thomas More lived in these parts, he had in some measure had his desire. For he amongst other strange Plots in his Utopian Commonwealth, telleth us, how there it is the Custom for some Reverend Old Sire to bring in naked the young man; and some hoary Old Matron to present naked the young woman, between whom a Marriage is propounded. For, faith he, in buying a Horse, the Chapman not only vieweth his naked Carcass, but taketh off all his trappings and fiddle, lett under them some Blain or Ulcer might be hidden: why then in chusing of a Wife should we take one, of whom we see no more than the Face (minus Palme spinam) and perhaps scarce that? The Learned and Ingenious Author of the New Atlantis, though he dislike of Marriages made upon such uncertainties, yet he would have this discovery made by some friends of the Parties, not by them themselves; it being, as he faith, very inconvenient that after such a plain and familiar sight of each others Person, there should be a refusal upon either side. But these new Projects I refer to your modest censures.

15. GUANGARA lieth on the North of Bennin, a wealthy and well-peopled Country, but their Towns and Villages very mean, except that called by the same name with the Country, where the King resideth, which is somewhat better than the rest, well traded and full of rich Merchants. The King heretofore of great Revenues, that he kept seven thousand Archers, and five hundred Horses in continual pay, but Hamager and Tributary to the King of Bornum.

16. BORNUM, a large and opulent Country on the West of Guangara, is there extended to the length of 500 miles. Distinguished equally in a manner into hills and valleys: the hills inhabited by Neat-herds and Shepherds, breeding great Flocks and Herds of Cattle, with Mill, and many other fruits to us unknown; the Valleys replenished with many Market Towns, and as full of Corn. The people are of no Religion, but live like Beasts; without propriety so much as in their Wives, or Children: nor are they differentiated by names, as in other places, but by some mark upon their bodies: Which though it seem strange to us of this present Age, yet was it thus in part with our Saxon Angels. Whence have we the names of White, Brown, Black, Grey, Green, and Tawny; or those of Long, Short, Low, Curly, Crispy, and others, but from such Originals? not to say any thing of the names of Trades, and Occupations, so familiar with us. The name of their chief City is Bornoe, where the King resideth. A potent Prince, who keepeth in continual pay 3000 Horses, and great numbers of Foot, and yet is said to have no other Revenue, than what he getteth by strong hand from his Enemies. Which if it be true, those Kings must needs be good Warriors, and have great success also in their undertakings: it being also said of these Kings of Bornoe, that all the Furniture of their Horses, all the Dishes, Cups and Platters which they eat or drink in, yea the very Chains for his Dogs, were of finest Gold.

17. GAGGA lieth betwixt Bornoe, and the Desarts of Nubia: the Country almost square, each side thereof extended 500 miles. The people ignorant, rude, uncivil, but especially those which dwell in the Mountains: their houses built most of boughs and leats, which once dry-cake they take fire; but the best is, they are soon repaired: their greatest wealth is in their Cattle, which they keep most tenderly. About the year 1420, they were brought into subjection by a Negro Slave, who having slain his Master, by the help of his wealth grew strong enough to inchoach on his Neighbours; and selling such Captives as he took, for Horses of Egypt became King of Gagga, and in due very gracious with the Mameluck Sultans. His Successors have since lost or cloathed their Territories, that they are descended unto none but the Kings of Tombuto.

18. NUBIA hath on the West Gagga, bounded on the North with Egypt, extended Eastward unto Nile, by which parted from Aethiopia Superior, or the Habashine Empire, so called from the Nube, an ancient and potent people people of this Tract, spoken of by Protony: the great Lake, anciently called Nubæ Palus, being hence denominated. A distinct people from those of the same name, dwelling on the shores of the Red-Sea, near unto Sinai, Avallites, who from the thornbush of their stature passed in account for Pygmies: Nubæ Troglodytes, faith Helychime an old Grammarian: these being a strong and potent Nation, and well skilled in Wars. Inasmuch, as Cyriacus once a King hereof, understanding of some perfidious laid upon the Christians of Egypt, is said to have raised 100000 Horse for their aid and succour; but by the perfidians of the Patriarch of Alexandria, went back untought with. For at that time the Country was wholly Christian, and had been so from the very days of the Apollies; but are now fallen off again to their former Idolatries, or become Mahometans, for want of Ministers to instruct them. It is recorded by Alvarez, the Writer of the Aethiopic History, that at his being in the Court of the Abissine Emperour, there came Ambassadors out of Nubia to instruct a supply of Pastors to instruct their Nation, and repair Christianity amongst them; but were unchristianly rejected.

Here is a Posyon in this Country, of which the tenth part of a Grain will dispatch a man in a quarter of an hour, and is sold for ten Ducats an ounce; the Custom for which unto the King, is as much as the price unto the Merchant. But for this one ill Commodity they have many good; that is to say, Corn, Sugar, Civet, Sanders, Ivory, all in great abundance; some store of Gold, and other Metals. The Country naturally sandy, but well refreshed with Lakes and Rivers which do much enrich it; inasmuch as the people generally are very wealthy, and manage a great Trade with the Merchants of Cane and Egypt. Their chief City is called Dangala, large and well frequented; said to contain no fewer than 10000 Families, but their Houses built of nothing but Thatch and Mortar. In other parts, especially towards the River Nilus, they have many Villages, few or none of them worth the naming.

There are many other Kingdoms in this Land of Negroes, besides these in Guinea, but of lesser note; as, 19. BITO. 20. TEMIANO. 21. ZEGZEG. 22. ZANFARA. 23. GOTHAN. 24. MEDRA. 25. DAUM. Of which there is nothing to be spoken, but of their Poverty or Riches, Customs or Curies, common to the people with the rest of these Nations, and therefore I purposely omit them.

The Country, or a great part of it, was anciently accounted part of Libya Interior, inhabited besides the Nubæ and Nigrite spoken of before, by the Nabathæ dwelling about the Hill Aravater, the Aroneæ, near the Hill Aravus, the Agargineæ, Xylines, and Alcalines, Aethiopic Nations. Not much considerable in the business of former times; not much discovered (not very perfectly at this day) till the year 973, at what time certain Mahometan Preachers, out of a superstitious zeal to propagate their Sect, first opened the way into these Countries: the people then living like brute beasts, without King, Law, or any form of Government, scarce knowing how to sow their Lands, clad in the skins of as very beasts as themselves, and challenging no propriety in Wives or Children. First conquered by Joseph King of Morocco, of the race of the Almohades; and after that by the Five Nations of Libya Deserta, who divided them into fifteen parts, every one of these Five Nations possessing three of them. One of the Kings of these Libyans, named Sani Heli, being slain by Ahmed Ibbia, General of his Forces, and the rest terrified with that blow, Anno 1526, the Negroes once again recovered their long lost liberty, and instituted divers Kings of their own. Amongst them, Ibbia was most deservedly made King of Tombuto, who managing his Affairs so well, that he conquered the Kings of Gadus, Agadus, Cano, Melli, Zanfara, Zegzeg, Gheneas, Gambon, and Cajena, which he made his tributaries. So that his Successors are now the greatest of those five Kings who have the supreme power over all the rest. The other four, 1. the King of Mandinga, lording it over the Realm of Benin, Gioloff, and the Kings of Guinea; 2. the King of Borno, the only one that is descended of the Libyan Race, in greatness of command next to him of Tombuto; 3. the King of Gualata, whose Kingdom is confined within that one Province, but therein absolute and supreme; and 4. the King of Goaga, Paramount over all the rest of these Provinces.

But because the greatest power is in the hands of the King of Tombuto, who possibly enough may in short time bring all the rest under his command, we will take a more particular view of his Estate affirmed to be the richest Prince in these parts of Affrick, and to have many Plates and Scepters of Gold, some of which weigh 1300 pound weight. When any of his Subjects do appear before him they kneel on both their knees, and bowing their heads unto the ground, cast sand over their shoulders and upon their head, going forward still upon their knees. His Court he keeps in a royal manner, continually guarded with 3000 Horse, but with many more Foot, all armed with Bows and empoyoned Arrows. To the Jews a very bitter Enemy, whom he admitteth not to trade in his Kingdoms, and confiscate the goods of all such of his Subjects as hold traffick with them. Zealous of the Mahometan Law; and liberal in stipends to the Doctors and Professors of it. Of greater power than any other beyond Atlas, but the Habissine Emperour. And though Ahmed the Xeriffe of Morocco, in the year 1589, had some hand upon him, and conquered a great part of this Kingdom, even as far as Gago, extending his Empire six months Journey, by Camels, beyond Morocco, yet it held not long; this King again recovering what was taken from him; and being since that time in as eminent power, as ever in any times before.

ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR is bounded on the East with the Red Sea, and the Sinus Barbaricus; on the West with Libya Interior, the Realm of Nubia, in the land of the Negros, and part of the Kingdom of Congo in the other Aethiopia; on the North with Egypt, and Libya Maritima; and on the South with the Mountains of the Moon, by which parted from the main body of Aethiopia Inferior.

It was first called Aethiopia, and afterwards Atlantia, as Pliny telleth us. In the end, the Grecians gave it the name of Aethiopia, from the Greek words Αἰθρ, signifying to burn, and ἡ a Countenance, because the violent heats of the Sun had so scorched the Countenances of the Inhabitants. The additions of Sin Egypti, Superior and Inferior, serve only to distinguish it from the other Aethiopia, which lyeth further off from Egypt, on the outside of this. It is called also Regnum Abyssinorum, from the Absini, or Abyssini, a people of Arabia Felix; who passing over the Red Sea, (not above seven miles broad in the narrowest place) came and settled here. And in the Scripture it is styled by the name of Ludim, from Lud the son of Mizraim, who first planted it, as hath been proved by many strong and concluded Arguments in our General Preface.

It is situate on both sides of the Equinoctial, extending from the South Parallel of seven Degrees, where it meeteth with some part of the other Aethiopia, to the Northern end of the Isle of Meroe, situate under the fifth Parallel on the North of that Circle. And though by this account it fall short of the dimensions assigned by some, who extend it from one Tropic unto the other; yet is it of a very great length, no less than 1500 miles; the breadth about half as much, the whole circumference amounting to 4300 miles. Yet so, that all this vast Tract of ground, is not to be understood of that part of the Country which is under the command of the Abissine Emperour, commonly but mistakenly called Preter-Jobn: but of the whole Country of Aethiopia, as before limited and extended, containing besides his Estate, the Kingdom of Adel and Ades, and the provinces of Quilao and Melindi; which two last are now reckoned of as parts of Aethiopia Inferior. The Isle of Meroe in the North is possessed by Mahometans, the most bitter Enemies of this King; all on the West of Nilus, betwixt it and the South-east of Nubia, inhabited by the Anzichi, an Idolatrious and man-eating Nation, subject to a great Prince of their own; and all the Coasts of the Red-Sea, as well within the Straits of Babel Mandel, as without, except the port of Ereco only, enjoyed by Arabians and Moors, who do acknowledge no subjection unto his Commands but are under the Kings of Adel and Ades, before mentioned.

But taking in the largest signification and extent heretofore (according unto which we must here describe it) it comprehendeth the three Countreys called anciently Aethiopia Sub-Egypti, Trogloditica, and Regio Cinnamomifera.

Of these, the two last are by some reckoned but as parts of the first; though certainly the Troglodites were a different Nation from the Aethiopiens. For past all doubt the Troglodites were originally an Arabian People, so called quia troglas subeunt, from their living in Caves and Dens, in which respect their part of this Country had the name of Arabia Trogloditica, in Disjunctis, and some others of ancient Writers. Of these it is affirmed by Pomponius Mela, that they were not the Masters of any wealth, and that their speech was rather a gnashing of the teeth, than any articulate and intelligible Pronunciation. Nallum opum Domini sunt Trogloditæ, frident magis quam loquuntur. As for their houses, they were (faith he) no better than Caves, and their food than Serpents. With whom concurrently Pliny also for their dwelling in Caves, and consequently for the reason of the name, laying positively, Trogloditæ beluinas excavant. Called for the same reason in the holy Scripture, 2. Chron. 12. 3. by the name of Suscebi, the word Suscebi (whence that name derived) not only signifying in the Hebrew, Tents, or Tabernacles, but Caves and Dens; and so translated Psalm 10. v. 9. and Job 38. v. 40. As for that part heretofore which was called Regio Cinnamomifera, taking up the southern parts in the time of Protony, it took that name from the abundance of Cinnamon, which was then growing it; it's now not a tree of it to be found in all this Country; as the Portugals, who have looked narrowly for it, have affirmed unto us. Shipped at Mosylon, a noted Emporie, placed by Protony in the ninth degree of Northern Latitude; it was thence transported into Egypt, and other Countreies as is said by Pliny, Portus Mosylitus quo Cinnamomum deservitur: the Spice in some Authors being called Mosylon, by the name of the Town. deservit ei et ad Arabum Maribus, et ad Musum aditus. Of Cinnamon the best is that which is called Mosylon, because brought from the City of that name in Aethiopia, faith Simon Sethi in his Tract de de Facultatibus Ciborum. As for this Cinnamon (note this only by the way) it is the inner bark of a Tree as big as an Olive, with Leaves like Bay-leaves: the drying of which maketh it roll together, and every three years is renewed, and stripped off again. Some think it came first from the Sine or the Country which the Romans called Sinnum Regio, the Moderns China; and that it was so called, quasi Sine Annum, the Annum of the Sine; Annum being the name of a sweet perfume growing in Affrica and Armenia. But then it should be written Sinannomum, and not Cinnamomum; yet to give the greater credit to the former opinion, they of Ormus called Bar-Chine, or the wood of China. But of this enough.

To go on therefore unto Aethiopia it self; The people of it in old times were said to have been great Astrologers, the first orderers also of sacred Ceremonies, and in both to be Tutors to the Egyptians. They were also noted to be very good Archers, and to draw the longest and strongest Bows of any Nation; the Perjan Bow (though those the greatest of all Africa) being only three cubits long; but these of Aethiopia four. Uinter etiam Aethiopes quatuor Cubitos.

torum arcibus, as we read in Strabo; the like is said also by Herodotus and Diodorus. Their Arrows small, but strong, for the most part poisoned: Aethiopia geminata venenis vincta, as we find in Claudian; and for that inhumanity very much condemned. But not to spend our time too much upon these particulars, Pliny reciteth two strange things of this Country: 1. That the air and Ground are so parching hot, that the people not only dare not go out of doors without shoes, but that they roast their meat also by setting it in the Sun. 2. That there is a Lake whose waters are thrice a day, and thrice a night, exceeding salt and unpleasing; but at all others times moist sweet and delicate to the Palate.

This Country being as big as Germany, France, and Italy laid together, is but meanly populous, the disposition of the Climate, and the dry barrenness of the ground, not admitting a multitude. For this cause Africa is by Strabo compared to a Leopard's skin, the distance of whose Spots leaveth the disproportion of the Towns and habitations in those torrid Countries. A country scarce in Wheat, but sufficiently plentiful in Rice, Barley, Beans, Pease, and the like; they have abundance of Sugars, Minerals of all sorts, and innumerable herds of Oxen, Sheep, Goats. Finally, there is no Country under Heaven fitter for increase of Plants, and Living Creatures, if industry were not deficient. But in regard of this defect, they are detitute of many necessary things, which otherwise the natural commodities of the Country would supply them with. For they have here great store of Flax, but make no Cloth; plenty of Vines, yet make no Wine, except it be to serve the Palaces of the King and Patriarchs; abundance of Sugar-Cane, and mines of Iron, but know not how to make use of either unto any advantage; Rivers and Brooks in many places, but will not take the pains to dig Channels, or trenches, to drive their waters to the rest of the land which want themselves Rivers almost choked with Fish, their Woods crammed with Venison, which they trouble not themselves to catch.

By this we may conjecture somewhat of the people also: Lazy and given unto their ease, ill clothed and not much better housed; extremely inclined to Barbarism, destitute of all learnings, not to be credited unless they swear by the life of their Emperours; they hate a Smith equally with the Devil: their colour is generally Olive-tawny, excepting only their King himself, who is always of a white complexion; a wonderful prerogative, if true. This blackness of their bodies, by the Poet attributed to the burning of the world by Phaeton.

Æthiopia populari nigrum traxisse colorem.*

Which may be Englished thus.

Their blood (it's thought) drawn from the outward part, The Æthiopians grew to black and swart.

But the true cause herof, whatsoever it be; may perhaps be looked upon hereafter, when we come to America.

The Christian Faith was first made known in this Country, by the Emperor of Queen Candace, who was baptized by Philip the Evangelist, and one of the Seven; more generally embraced by the pains and preaching of St. Matthew the Apostle herewith; but not totally propagated over all this Empire, till the reign of Abraham, Anno 470. who in his life entituled himself the Defender and Propagator of the Religion of CHRIST, and after his death was generally honoured as a Saint. Suppressed in part by the coming in of the Abissines and other Arabians, it was again revived and more universally received than in former times, in the reign of David King of the Axumite Æthiopians: who in a War against Dumax King of the Homieris in Arabia Felix solemnly vowed to the God of the Christians to become one of his Followers, if he got the victory: and so accordingly he did, sending his Ambassadors to the Emperor Justinian, for some Bishops and other learned men to instruct his people. The particulars of those Opinions wherewith they have since corrupted the purity of the true Religion, I had thus registred. 1. They use to circumcise their Children, both males and females. 2. They baptize the males 40, and the females 18 days after their circumcision. 3. After the receipt of the Sacrament, they are not to spit till Sun-set. 4. They profess but one Nature and one Will in CHRIST. 5. They accept only the three first General Councils. 6. Their Priests live by the labour of their hands, for they allow them nothing, and permit them not to beg. 7. They baptize themselves every Epiphany day in Lakes and Ponds, because that day they suppose Christ to have been baptized by John in Jordan. 8. They eat not of those Beasts, which in the old Law are reckoned for unclean. 9. They keep the Saturday or Jewish Sabbath, equally solemn with the Lords Day. 10. They administer the Eucharist to Infants presently after Baptism. 11. They teach, that the Reasonable soul of man is derived from their parents by seminal Propagation. 12. That Infants dying unbaptized, are sanctified in the womb, by virtue of the Eucharist received by the Mother after her Conception. And finally, they drew a Book of eight Volumes, writ, as they say, by the Apostles at Hierusalem for that purpose, the Contents whereof they observe most solemnly. These are the most material points in which they differ from the Tendencies of the Catholic Church. And there are other Points in which they differ only from the Church of Rome, as viz. 1. Admiring in both kinds. 2. Without either Elevation, or Reverence. 3. Rejecting mass Images; and 4. Extreme Unction. 5. Allowing the first marriages to their Priests and Bishops; and 6. In renouncing all relation to the Church of Rome; who to the business of these Churches is a very stranger, and so hath been from the very first foundation of them. For it appears by the Canons of the Nicene Council, extant in the Arabic, and translated into Latine by Pisanius, that the Patriarch (or Abbas, as they called him) of these Abissine Churches, was in those times subordinate to the Alexandrian, confirmed in that Supremacy by the Fathers, which were there assembled; and constantly ever since approved and practised by these Churches; in the Liturgies whereof, the name of the Alexandrian is remembered before their own. To this Patriarch, by an ancient privilege belongeth the seventh place in the Sessions of all General Councils; the Archbishop of Seleucia (or Babylon) only interpoling betwixt him and the Patriarch of Hierusalem. Elected by the Abissine Monks of St. Antonies Order remaining in Hierusalem, and confirmed by the Patriarch of Alexandria, (of which Order, and of whose jurisdiction he must always be he is sent into this Country to take his charge: where in some points of Civil nature, he hath equal privilege with the Emperor himself; and in Spiritual, hath the sole power of excommunicating an obstinate sinner. All other Ecclesiastical Dignities, from the Bishoprick to the lowest Benefice, are conferred by the Emperor only.

The principal Mountains of it in the former time, had the names of 1. Primoris, 2. Ibus, 3. Monodactylus, 4. Garrus, and 5. Mons Satyrorum, all of them in that which was called Trogloditica: 6. Garbale, 7. Elephas, and 8. Mofe, in the life of Moro: the rest of the Country flat and level, or the hills not eminent. Rivers of note note, 1. Atapus, (now Albani) arising out of a great Lake called Coloe, now the Lake of Barena, 2. Atabore, now

Tacasse.

Tacasse; both falling into the River Nilus. 3. Nilus, of which before when we were in Egypt; whose Spring undoubtedly sought for in the elder times, is now said to be out of the Lake Zembe in the other Æthiopia, eleven Degrees beyond the Equator; whence passing through spacious Deserts, large Lakes, and many great Kingdoms he at last entereth into this. Here in some places struggling amongst broken Rocks, and less free passages, he falleth with such a wonderful noise into the Vallies beneath, that a Colony planted by the Persians near one of these Cataracts, (so they call those huge falls of his) were so dulled and deafened with the noise, that they were fain to abandon their habitations. Nor doth it only dull and deafen the neighbouring people, but the very hills do seem to tremble at the noise it maketh. Of which thus the Poet,

*Cuncta tremunt audis, et multo murmure montis,
Spumans invictis abscissis fluctibus amnis.*

Which may be Englished in these words:

The noise the Mountains shakes, who roar for spite To see th' unvanquish'd Waves cloth'd all in white.

Of the Cataracts here are two most noted: the one called Cataract Major, in the borders of this Country towards Egypt, but South of both the Cities of Phile, and Pselis, Æthiopian Cities; the other called Cataract Minor, not far from Elephantis a City of Egypt, neighbouring to Syene the last City of that Country towards this. So turbulent is this River amongst the Hills. And yet as terrible as these Falls are supposed to be, one may divers times see the Country people in a little Boat not able to contain above two persons, to venture down them without disappearing after they have been long tossed in the water, a great distance off, as if they had been shot out of an Engine. Nor is he of such quiet passage in the open Countries, but that the Inhabitants of this Kingdom are fain to cut many Ditches, Sluces, and By-channels to receive his waters, which if not curbed and lessened by such ways as these, might by some sudden overflowing much endanger Egypt: in respect whereof the Sultans of Egypt have paid for a long time to the Abissine Emperours, an annual tribute. Which when the Great Turk, supposing it a needless charge, had once denied: this people, by the command of their Emperor, did open their Sluces, and brake down the Dams whereby the water fell so violently and so fast into Egypt, that the Turks was not only glad to continue tribute, but to give them great sums of money to make up their works. But others say, that this acknowledgment was paid by the Egyptian Kings, not so much for keeping up the waters from drowning Egypt, as for fear the Abissine Emperours should divert the Stream, and so deprive that Country of the benefit of it. But I incline rather to the former. Here are also said to be some Lakes, of that poisonous nature, that whoever drinke of them doth either immediately fall mad, or else is troubled for long time with continual drowsiness. Of which thus Ovid:

*Æthiopsque Lacus, quos spiritus faucibus haurit,
Aut furit, aut patitur mirum gravitate soporem.*

Which may be paraphrased in these words:

Who doth not know the Æthiopian Lake?
Of which whoever drinks, his thirst to slake,
Either grows mad, or doth his soul oppress
With an unward drowsiness.

To look upon the State as it stood in the former times, we find in it besides the Lakes and Rivers before mentioned, three capacious Bays; that is to say, 1. Sinus Adulicus, 2. Sinus Aualiter, and 3. Sinus Barbaricus; the two last neighbored by the now Countries of Adel and Melinde. Havens of note and Rodes for shipping, there were five in all, viz. 1. Babius, or the deep Haven; 2. Disgorum Portus, or the Haven of Cayor and Palox; 3. Theon Socrum, or the Haven of the Savon-Gods; 4. Portus Evangelicorum, Gospel-Port, or the Port of Good News; and 5. Serapionis, the Port of Serapion, with a Promontory of the same name adjoining to it. For other Promontories, which in so long a tract of Sea must needs be many; the Principal were, 1. Bafum, 2. Mumium, 3. Dimitria, 4. Aphis, 5. Ara Ameris, 6. Colobus, 7. The Promontory of Saturn, 8. Mofylon, with a noted Empory of the same name; 5. Aromata, near another well frequented Empory of the same name also; and 10. that of Natocum. Then for the Towns of greatest Trading, besides those last mentioned, we have, 1. Aualiter, 2. Malan, 3. Mandi, 4. Cabe, and 5. Acane in the Bay of Adalites; 6. Opone, in the Bay of Barbaria, 7. Effina, on the South of the Æquidial. Then for their Cities, we have amongst many others, the names of 1. Epitharia, by Ptolomy called Ptolomai Feronia, 2. Adalis, and 3. Aualiter, giving names unto their several Bays; 4. Rapta, the Metropolis of that part of this Country which was called Barbaria, lying along the shores of the Sinus Barbaricus; which as it taketh name from the River Raptus, upon which it is situated, they do both agree in communicating it to the Promontory called Raptum; 5. Moro, the chief City of the Isle so called; 6. Sabat in the Bay of Adalis, which possibly might be some Colony of the Sabæans, in Arabia Felix; 7. Coloe, by Pliny, called Tolon, not far from the great Lake so named 8. Cambusi, by Ptolomy, called Cambusi Ararium, from some treasures laid up here by Cambusi the Persian, in his invasion of this Country. 9. Axum, the chief City of the Axumite, a most potent people of these parts, and the Seat Royal of the old Æthiopian Kings, 10. Napata, as Ptolomy; but by most others called Tanape: of old the residence of the Æthiopian Emperours, sacked and ruined by Petrinus, President of Egypt. For when Candace (the Predecessor, I believe, of her whose Eunuch was baptized by Philip) had rancked and waited Egypt with Fire and Sword; Petrinus Lieutenant to Augustus, drove them home, harried the whole Country, put this City to the spoyl; and to prevent the like incursions, fortified the Frontiers of his Province. 11. Phile, upon the borders of Egypt, Garrisoned by the Romans till the time of Dioclesian, and by him abandoned. Of some of these, and others not here mentioned, we may have opportunity to speak more hereafter, in the survey of some of these particular Provinces, into which this Country stands divided at this present time.

And for the Provinces comprehended at this time within the bounds and limits of this Æthiopia, as before laid down, they are said to make up 70 Kingdoms, most of them subject to the Abissine Emperor. The principal of which are, 1. Guagere, 2. Tigremam, 3. Angote, 4. Amma, 5. Dannu, 6. Goujam, 7. Bagamedrum, 8. Barnagiam, 9. Adel, 10. Ades, 11. Danfali, 12. Dubar, 13. Fatigra, 14. Xos, 15. Barus. Concerning which I must premise, that I find the Relations of them to be very imperfect, many times disagreeing, sometimes false: So that I must needs myself be less satisfied in the description of this Country, than in any of the rest which have gone before. Such as it is, I here present it to the Reader.

1. GUAGERE.

GUAGERE containeth only the Island of Meroe, an Island of much note and fame among the Ancients; made by the confluences of Nilus and Astaboras, the two chief Rivers of this Country. The length hereof 350 miles, the breadth 125, abundantly plentiful of Gold, Silver, Brass, Iron, Ivory, Precious Stones, and an excellent kind of Mineral Salt. Well stored with most sorts of Beasts, both tame and wild, and of the last sort with Lyons, Leopards, Rhinoceros, Elephants, and Dragons.

The people are of the same nature and complexion with the rest: Mahometans by Religion, and the professed Enemies of the Abissine Emperour against whom they do not only defend themselves, by the advantages and benefit of their situation; but confederating with the Turks and Arabians, fall many times with great Forces into his Dominions. It is said by Pliny of the Inhabitants of this Island, that twice a year, viz. when the Sun is in the 16 degree of Taurus, and the 14 of Leo, they have the Sun so perpendicular above their heads, that he casts no shadow. More anciently memorable for their long lives, than their great exploits, attaining ordinarily to 123 years of Age; and therefore called Macerii by the old Greek Writers. The women said to be of such great breasts in the former times, that they did suckle their children over their shoulders (as some women are now said to do near the Cape of Good Hope): the Drug being bigger than the Child. Of which thus Juvenal,

In Meroe crasso majorem Infante mamillam.

In Meroe the Mothers Paps
Is bigger than the child in lap.

The Principal Cities hereof. 1. Meroe, which gave that name unto the Island, but took the same from Meroe, a sister of Cambyses King of Persia, or as Eusebius saith from Merida, the mother of Chephris, a King of Egypt. Josephus telleth us, that in former times it had been called by the name of Sabson, authority of whose mistake it hath been made the Regal City of that Queen of Sheba (the Queen of Egypt, and Æthiopia, as Joseph calleth her) who came to Solomon. An opinion to receive amongst these Islanders, that the name of Meroe being laid by, they have restored the name of Sabto to this City, as of greater eminence. The City said by some to contain about 5000 houses, great and sumptuous; the streets thereof to be large and spacious, with Galleries on each side before the doors of their houses, where men walk safe from all extremities of heat, or rain. Beautified with four chief Gates, (besides others of inferior note) built of Alabaster and Jasper, wrought with Antick works: the doors belonging to those Gates of Cedar, curiously wrought; the ways which lead unto them, for the space of two leagues, beset with Palms, Orange trees, Cedars, Cypresses, and others no less useful both for shade and fruit. In the place where the four streets going from the Gates, do cross each other, a goodly Arch erected upon stately Pillars, fairly wrought and gilded, with the Statue of St. Matthew made of brass, but gilded, on the top thereof. Such it is said to be by some. Others think there is no such City; it may be not so beautiful, as some have made it. The other Towns of note and name in it, in former times, 2. Saelebe, 3. Darorum Vicini, 4. Efer, of which we have little but the name.

This Island was once a peculiar Kingdom; he being chosen for their King, who excelled the rest in strength; person, or in stock of Cattle; but those Kings so subject to their Priests, that by a Messenger, or Herald, they were sentenced by them unto death, and others advanced unto the Throne. And thus it stood till one of the more provident Kings, forcing the Temple with his Armed Souldiers, slew all these Priests; and freed himself and his successors from to great a slavery. Afterwards made a Province of the Kingdom of Æthiopia; honoured for the most part with the Seat of those Kings, and memorable in those times for the Table of the Sun: which was a place near the City of Meroe, always furnished with variety of roasted meat, fed there by night at the charge and command of the King (much taken as it seemeth with this costly vanity) and eaten in the day time by all that would; called therefore the Table of the Sun, because ascribed unto his bounty by the ignorant people. In the declining of this Kingdom, occasioned by the inundation of the Saracens and other Arabians, this Island was seized on by that people, and hath been ever since kept by them together with the rest of the Country, lying betwixt it and Egypt, in which are contained, as some write, the Kingdoms of Damot, Sua, and Jalulium, anciently belonging to this Empire, now difmembered from it: not much observable, but for being a thoroughfare to great troops of Pilgrims, which every Year pass by them out of the Abissine Dominions, to the Sepulchre and other like places in and near Jerusalem.

2. TIGREMAON.

TIGREMAON, hath on the North, Guagere and the River Marabo, by which last parted from Barnagasso; on the South, the Realm of Angote; on the West, Nilus. On the East it is said to extend to the Red-Sea; but the Sea-parts thereof possessed by the Turks, and the adjoining Coast by the Moor and Arabians; the In-land parts promiscuously inhabited, especially more towards the Sea, by Christians and Ethiops. Divided into many inferior Regions, the principal whereof, 1. Sabian, 2. Tarrater, 3. Balgada, so called perhaps from the chief Towns of them, and 4. Tigrai, the most large and ample of all these subordinate Provinces, as containing in it 17 great Tracts under so many Lieutenants, which rule all affairs both of Peace and War. The people black of colour, deformed of shape, in condition miserable, of conditions wicked. Some Rivers they have, but dried up in Summer; yet so, that with a little digging they find water in them. Their chief City Caxumo, or Casumo, supposed to be the same which Ptolemy calleth Axume; Stephanus, Axomites, Procopius, Axumide: by all of them esteemed the Metropolitan City of Æthiopia, and the Seat Royal of their Kings. In witness whereof are many ancient buildings yet remaining, some Pillars which resemble the Egyptian Obelisks, admirable for their height and workmanship: 60 foot high and full of Characters, or Letters engraven on them, which now none can read. The Æthiopian Axumites, the most potent Nation of this Country, had their name from hence more probably conceived to be the regal Seat of Candace, (mentioned in the Acts) than any other in the Kingdom; and still affirmed to be honoured with the Court of their Emperours. Others I know have fixed his Court in Boimalechi, but I know not in what part to find it: some in a Royal Palace near the lake of Zemba, built in the year 1570, by some European Architects sent hither by Francis Duke of Florence; and many will allow him no fixed Seat at all, but tell us that he moveth with his Tents in a Royal Progress from one place to another; which wandering Court, or moving City, is said to be no less than ten miles in compass, when the

Pavilion

Pavilion which belong to it, are disposed of into Rank and Order.

This Kingdom is governed by a Prince of its own, but one who is an Honourer and Tributary to the Abissine Emperour; to whom he payeth yearly 200 Horcs of the best Arabian breed, infinite quantities of Silks, great store of Cotton-wool, and abundance of Gold; but the determinate proportion I have no where met with.

3. ANGOTE.

ANGOTE is bounded on the North with Tigremoon, on the West with Nilus, on the South with the Kingdom of Amara, on the East with Dancalia, and Xoa. Indifferently compounded of Hills and Valleys, both extremely fertile, productive of the choicest Fruits, and great Herds of Cattle. The people cut but once in 24 hours, and for the most part make that Meal in the night; their diet raw Venison, or smoked Beef: the Money most in use amongst them, Salt, Pepper, and Iron. Which custom of using Salt, Pepper, and the like instead of money, was in former times amongst most people the only barter, or way of exchange. So in Homer, Glauco Golden Armor was valued at an 100 King, and Diomedes Armor at 10 only. Afterward in Julius Commutative, it was deemed convenient to have some common Judge, or valuation of the equality or inequality of goods: the Invention of which, the Jews attributed to Cain; the Greeks to Hermes; the Wife of Midus; the Romans to Juno. It is called Nannus, or Nannus, from Nannus, because it was ordained by the Law: Pecunia, either because in elder times the chief of their wealth consisted in Cattle, as now among the Irish; or from a Cow (Pecus) which was stamped on it; and Moneta, à monendo, as Suidas saith, because when the Romans stood in need of money, Juno monens, Juno admonished them that they should use Justice, and there should be no want of money. To this Goddess, Dea Pecunia, the Romans erected a Temple, and worshipped it in the figure of a Woman, holding a pair of Scales in one hand, and Cornucopia in the other: by the Poet called Regina Pecunia, and not unly, the greatness of her power considered.

But to return again to Angote, I find not much spoken of the Country in the way of story; nor meet I with the names of any of their Towns, or Cities; unless that 1. Angote it self, as also 2. Alugana, 3. Ginnamora, two of the principal Provinces of it, may possibly be so called from their principal Towns, as perhaps they are.

4. AMARA.

AMARA hath on the North Angote; on the South Dannus; on the West, it stretcheth towards the Nile; and on the East, bounded with the Realm of Xoa. The Country very plain and Champaign, little swelled with Hills, sufficiently fruitful, and well stored with all sorts of Cattle. The chief City of it called Amara, by the name of the Province, situate in the midst of the Empire, and though not much distant from the Æquator, if not plainly under it, yet blessed with such a temperate Air, such a fruitful Soil, such ravishing pleasures of all sorts, that some have taken (but mistaken) it for the place of Paradise: So strangely Heaven, Earth, Nature, and Human Industry have joyned their helps together to enrich and beautify it.

But that which is the greatest Ornament of this Province, and indeed of the whole Empire of Æthiopia, is the Mountain Amara, situate in a large and delightful Plain: the bottom of the Hill in Circuit 90 miles, and a days journey high; the Rock so smooth and even (but leffer and leffer towards the top) that no wall can be more evenly polished: the way up to it is cut out within the Rock, through which are divers holes forced to let in the light; so facile of ascent, that one may ride up with great pleasure, and in the midst of the ascent a spacious Hall, as it were to rest in: the top it self is a large Plain, 20 leagues in circuit, compassed with an high wall, to the end that neither man nor beast fall down upon any chancy; beautified towards the South with a rising Hill, out of which issueth a sweet Spring, which watering the several Palaces and Gardens of it, uniteth it self into a Lake for the use of Cattle: the Plain enriched with all sorts, both of fruit and grain; adorned with two magnificent Magnificer, in each of which are found 1500 Knights of the Order of S. Anthony, a Religious Militia; and honoured with 34 Palaces, in which the younger Sons of the Emperour are continually inclosed, to avoid Sedition. They enjoy there whatsoever is fit for delight, or Princely Education; and from hence come one of them, who is most hopeful, or best liked, is again brought out, if the Emperour die Son-less, to be made Succesor. This Mountain hath but one ascent up, as before was said, which is impenetrably fortified; and was destitute to this use, Anno 1460, or thereabouts, by the Emperour Abraham Philip, advised hereto, as he gave out, by a Heavenly Vision. In one of these Palaces is a famous Library, wherein are said to be many Books, which with us are either in part or totally lost; as the Oracles of Enoch, which the Mysteries which escaped the Flood, being by him engraven on Pillars: the whole Works of Livy, and others. Which being heretofore translated by the Saracens into the Arabic Tongue (when having plundered all the most famous Libraries of the East and West, they burnt the Originals, out of a Plot to make that Language as Renowned, and as generally studied, as the Greek or Laine) are said by some good fortune to be here preserved.

5. DAMUT.

DAMUT hath on the North Amara, on the West Egamedram, on the South Goiomy; and on the East, the great Lake of Barcana, and some part of Zanquebar, one of the Provinces of Æthiopia Exterior. The Country plentifully furnished with Gold, Ginger, Grapes, Fruits, and living Creatures of all sorts. For none more famed than that for their Slaves, sold in great numbers into Arabia, Egypt, Persia, India; and much esteemed by them who buy them, for their abilities in War, dexterity in business, but specially for their fidelity in all things which they undertake. For this cause placed in Offices of great Trust and Power, by many of the Eastern Princes; who using a tyrannical form of Government, and not daring to trust the Sword into the hands of their Subjects, or to advance them unto places of Court, or Council, do for the most part arm these Slaves, and trust them also with the Conduct of their chief Affairs. A trust in which they never falsified, or failed in a true discharge, but when presuming on their power, and those advantages which they got into their hands the Kingdom of Abissine, and kept it many years in a Succession of the Abissine Slaves, wherewith they still made up their numbers, till outed not long since by the Great Mongol.

The Oxen of this Country are said to be near as great as Elephants; their Horns so large, that they serve as Tankards to carry, and as Barrels to keep either Wine or water. Here is also said to be a kind of Unicorn, very fierce and wild, fashioned like an Horse, but no bigger than an Ass; but we must think these Unicorns to be but Rhinoceros, or else we shall very much mistake the truth of the matter. And for the

the people (to go to them both over once again) they are for the most part Gentiles; some Christians intermixt amongst them, who have sundry Monasteries.

To this Kingdom belongeth the Principality of Coebe, said to have more Gold in it than all Pera; a Mountain all of Gold, if the Fryers say true. The people Gentiles, but the Prince not long since gained to the Christian Faith into which he was baptized by the Abbot or chief Governor of the Monasteries on the Hill Amara: Graden the Emperour being his Godfather, by whom named Andrem. And here they have an Hill of great height, and very difficult ascent; from the top whereof they use to cast headlong such of the Nobility, as by the Emperours sentence are condemned to die. What Towns they have either in that Kingdom, or their Principality, I am not able to resolve, unless, 1. Damut, and 2. Coebe may be two, and the two most eminent, as giving name to those Estates.

6. GOIAMI.

G O I A M T hath on the North Damut, on the West Bagamadrum, on the South and East, some Provinces of the other Æthiopia. The Country in the North parts full of Deserts and Rocky Mountains, in the residue plentifully furnished with all things necessary. Great store of Gold they find, but driftie, the people not knowing how to refine and purify it; or loth here (as in other places of this Empire) to take pains that way, for fear of drawing the Turks and Arabians to partake of the Booty.

It containeth in it many Rivers, or rather Torrents, which come tumbling down the Hills with a mighty violence, and a terrible fall, making a noise, not much inferior to a clap of Thunder: and amongst other Lakes, two of special note, which for their greatness seem to be Seas; in which, as some report, Mermen, and Tritons, or Men-fishes use to shew themselves; and out of which it is thought by others, that the Fountains of Nilus do arise; and both true alike. But past all doubt the Abissines themselves are of this Opinion; and therefore in the title of Neguz, (so they call their Emperour) he is termed King of Goiamy, with this addition, In which are found the Fountains of Nilus. Deceived alike in their Opinion touching this particular, the Springs or Fountains of that River being further South: though possibly leaving loth himself in these vast Lakes, and issuing hence into a more contracted Channel, he may be said to have a second birth from hence, though not the first. And these I take to be the Lakes which were discovered by the Komans in the time of Nova. Who following the deluge of some other great Potentates, Seslstris, Cambyses, Alexander, and Philadelphus, in discovering the true Original of this famous River, employed the Cutarians in that service; who sided in it by the then King of the Æthiopians, are said to have come at last unto certain great Marishes (most probably the lower and fildy parts of these Lakes now mentioned) of whose extent the Inhabitants themselves were ignorant, not possible to be discovered any further, the Weeds having so overgrown the water, that there was no further passage to be made by Boat, and less by wading.

Extwixt this Country and Damut, which we last passed thorow, is said to be a Province of Amazons, warlike and hence, and very expert at the Bow; whose Queen knoweth no man, and by the rest honoured as a Goddess. These, they say, were first instituted by the Queen of Saba as true, as that which some have added of the Phœnix visible in this Country; of Griffons, and of Fœnls so big, that they make a shadow like a Cloud. Which strange reports I have here added, to supply the defect of Towns and Cities, of which I meet not with so much as the named names, as undiscovered places in our Maps and Charts, are filled up with Monsters.

7. BAGAMEDRUM.

B A G A M E D R U M, or S A G A M E D R U M, (for I find both names) lieth on the West of Goiamy, betwixt the Northern parts thereof, and the River Nilus; and keeping all along the course of that River, as far as Gugere, or Meroe, encounterth with the Southern point of Barnagasso; some do extend it also beyond that Island, but making the whole Length thereof but 600 miles, do confute themselves. The greatest Province of this Empire it may probably be, Ceteris huius Æthiopie amplissimum, as they say it is; but if extended the whole length of it, it must be 1500 miles, not 600 only.

The Country plentiful in Mines of the purest Silver, which they cannot draw thence but by fire, which makes it run like long rods, or ropes of Metal. And yet as large and as wealthy as they say it is, I am more to seek for Towns and rich Cities in it, than in the Deserts of Lilya, or the sands of Arabia. Merchants and Travellers for the most part go no further than the Sea-coasts of the Country, of which they give us more exact and full informations, knowing but little of the In-lands; and of the Natives, (such as have travelled abroad in other Kingdoms, rude and ignorant men, know little more of their own Empire than the place they lived in: Or probably their best Cities not containing above 2000 houses, few of them so many, and those patched up of Thatch, Dirt and Hurdles, (unless some of the Nobility, or Wealthier Merchants are provided better) they may have no greater reason to speak much of them; or to acquaint us with the names of such forty places, as are indeed not worth the naming. Which I conceive to be the true condition of most, or all the In-land Towns in this large Estate.

8. BARNAGASSO.

B A R N A G N E S, or B A R N A G A S S U M, hath on the West Gugere, or the Isle of Meroe; on the Southwest, as some say, a point of Bagamadrum; on the South, Dangali and Adel; on the East, the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia; on the North it stretcheth towards Egypt; the Kingdoms of Jesulium and Saxa, possessed by the Mahometans, being interposed.

The Country very fertile, full of Towns and Villages, and exceedingly well stored with pleasant Rivulets, besides the Neighbourhood of the Red-Sea on the one side, Nile and Abambi on the other. Remarkable for a Mountain in the Western part of it, which being spacious in the beginning, growth strait by little and little, and then enlargeth it self again to a League in Circuit. On the top thereof a Royal Palace, a Church, a Monastery, and two very large Cisterns, with a piece of ground able to entertain and keep 500 men. To be ascended one way only, and that but to a certain mark; to which being come, they are drawn up with Cords and Baskets to the top of all; not to be took by force, by reason of the impossibility of ascent; not by long Siege, or any extremity of Famine, in regard it yields provision enough to maintain it self. Accounted therefore the chief Hold of all this Province against Turks and Moor.

It containeth besides Barnagasso it self, the two Provinces of Cassila, and Dafila: though rather subject to the Governour or Vice-Roy of it, than parts and members of the same. Towns of most mention in the whole, 1. Berna, or Barna, conceived by some to be the Colony of Ptolomy, the Residence of the Vice-Roy, situate on a retiring pleasant and fishful River. 2. Zameta, honoured sometimes also with the Vice-Roy's presence; but rather as a retiring place in times of leisure, than a Town of strength. 3. Suaden, situate in an Island of the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia, one of the richest Cities of the Eastern parts, and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, secured by Nature from all storms, of smooth Tides, free Anchorage, and able to receive 300 great Ships of Burden. Situate in a little Island, the whole circumference whereof it taketh up; inasmuch that Vessels of all sorts, both within the Haven, and without, do usually unlade themselves at the doors of the Merchants, to which the Ship-beaks serve for Bridges. A wealthy and well-traded Town, both by Sea and Land, to which from the more In-land parts of the Abissine Empire, the Mountains open a safe passage for the carriage and re-carriage of their Commodities. Taken by the Turks long since, with all the rest of the Country lying betwixt it and Egypt, and made the Seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, or Bassa; whom in imitation of the Romans, they call the Beglerbeg of Abissia; as if by the possession of this small part of the Empire, they would entice the Grand Seigneur unto the rest. The Town conceived by some to be that which Ptolomy calleth Ostium Sebasticum, or rather Sebaiticum, as called by Strabo. Others will have it to be the Ptolomæa Ferarum, or the Epiberia, as Pliny calleth it of the Ancient Writers. And some again will have it to be the Sucebe of Pliny, by whom reckoned among the Cities of the Troglodytes (who are called Sucebei in the Scriptures, as before was noted) in whole part of the Country it is seated, and to which name it hath some resemblance. 4. Bisam, not far from Erocco, remarkable for a Monastery situate on the top of a high Rock, environed with dreadful Precipices upon every side, in which live 3000 Monks, eating by three and three together, in a common Refectory: this being the chief of six others in this Province of Barnagasso, the furthest not above 30 miles distant. For maintenance of whom, and a great number of poor Children which they daily feed, besides the Riches of all the Mountain in which it standeth (fruitful and rich, and at least 30 Miles in compass) they have many good Farms at the Foot of the said Mountain, and an hundred small villages appertaining to them, out of which they raise yearly great provision of Corn, and above 2000 head of Cattel; their Revenues out of Tigremann being reckoned in. A Revenue able to maintain them and their Hospitality in regard their NoVICES, or young Monks are first abroad to earn their living, or to manure their Lands, and attend the Husbandry of the House: the Elder only being found at the charge of the Monastery, though all alike bound to the performance of Religious Offices. 5. Erocco, another noted Port on the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia, to which a passage openeth through the Straits of the Mountains, as it doth to Suaden, conceived to be the Adulis of Ptolomy, the Adulion of Pliny, now in possession of the Turks, or at their command. 6. Santar, 7. Gabel, 8. Laccari, and 9. Abarrach: these four last in the Province of Dafila. This Country at the present, and for long time past, is subject both to the great Neguz, or the Protigian of Æthiopia, and the Grand Seigneur of the Turks; naturally subject to the one, and tributary to the other. Governed by the chief of their own, whom they call Barnagassu, by the name of his Province, a Vassal and an Homager to the Æthiopian; to whom he payeth the yearly Tribute of 150 of the best breed of Horses, besides some quantities of Silks, and some other Commodities: but so ill-neighbour'd by the Turks, that he is fain to pay also to the Beglerbeg or Bassa resident at Suaden, 1000 ounces of Gold yearly for a Composition. For the Turks having by the Conquest of Egypt made themselves Masters of those Countries towards Æthiopia, which formerly were allied to, or confederate with the Mameluck Sultans; within short time (viz. An. 1558.) possessed themselves also of the Town of Suaden, and the parts adjoining; made it the residence of one of their Beglerbegs or Bassas, and gave him the title of Beglerbeg of Abissia, as before was said: forgot by the industrious Collector of the Turkish History, in his enumeration of the Beglerbegs or Bassas of Africke. To this they added not long after, all the rest of the Sea-Coasts, and the Port of Erocco; and not content therewith, after some short breathing made a further inroad; in which they did fo waste the Country, that in the end they compelled the Barnagassian (not being aided by the Neguz) to this composition.

9. DANGALI, and 10. DOBAZ.

South and South-East of Barnagasso, lie the two Kingdoms of DANGALI and DORAS; that of Dangali bordering on the Red-Sea, the other more within the Land: both of them held by the Mahometans, or Arabian Moors, both in continual enmity with the Abissine Emperours, and both of like nature, in regard of the soil and people.

DANGALI hath on the North, Barnagasso; on the South, some part of the Kingdom of Adel; on the East, the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; on the West, Dobaz before-mentioned. It taketh up some part of the Arabick Bay, within the Straits of Babel-Mandeb, and without those Straits, the greatest part of that spacious Bay, which anciently was called Sinæ Avalitionis, as far as to the Promontory then called Myslon, (neighbour'd by a noted Empery of the same name) now the Cape of Doonax; near unto which the Sea makes a little Gulf, and suddenly straiteneth it self again; so as the Channel cannot be above ten or twelve leagues broad. And in this Channel are five or six Islands, which hinder the passage, so as Sailors must have good experience to avoid the Rocks which lie near those Islands.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Sebi, or Babel, which gives name to the Straits of Babel-Mandeb, a narrow Frith, opening out of the Bay of Arabia into the Æthiopian or Indian Ocean. 2. Vella, a well frequented Port, conceived to be the same which Strabo calleth Antipolia, not found by that name in Ptolomy. 3. Zugani, 4. and 5. Zama, in a Province of this Kingdom called Lamra. 6. Doonax, near the Cape so called, and therefore probably the Myslon of the ancient Writers. 6. Dangali, not far from the Sea-side, which gives name to the Kingdom. Nothing else memorable of this Kingdom, but that there are in it two great Lakes, wherein live Crocodiles, as in Nilus.

On the South-West of Dangali lieth the Realm of DORAS, extended on the West to the borders of Angot. The Country large, containing twelve, or as some say, 24 several Prefectures. Of fo good Pasturage, that the Kine hereof are of greater size than in other places, and those for number not easily matched in all this Empire. The people much professed Enemies of the Christian Faith, that they suffer not any man to marry, till he hath killed 12 Christians. Some reckon them for Tributaries to the Prete, or Neguz; but it is only when they lift it so far from being Contributors towards the support of his Estate, that they take from him what they can. The chief of their Towns, 1. Dobaz, which gave name to the whole Kingdom. 2. Baba, upon the same River on which Dobaz standeth, but more near the head.

11. ADEL.

ADEL is bounded on the North with some parts Dangali, and the Red-Sea; on the South, with Ades on the East, with the Red-Sea, and the Indian or Arabian Ocean; on the East, with Fatigar; extended on the Sea-Coast from the Cape of Dooona, to the Cape of Guardafiu, conceived most probably to be the Aromatis of Ptolomy, a noted Promontory in his time.

The Country plentiful of Flesh, Honey, Wax, Corn, Gold, and Ivory; great flocks of Sheep, & many of those Sheep of such burdened Fleeces, that their tails weigh 25 pounds. Some Kine they have, which have horns like 25 Stags; others but one horn only, and that in the forehead, about a foot and an half long, but bending backwards. The people inhabiting on the Sea-Coasts are of Arabian Parentage, and of the Mahometan Religion; those towards the Inland Countries, of the old Ethiopian Race, and wholly Cottile.

Chief Towns heretof, 1. Zeila, a noted Port-Town, situate in or near the place where Ptolomy placeth Avaliter: stored with variety of Merchandise, and yielding some representation of Antiquity in the building thereof, being Lime and Stone; materials not much used amongst them in the latter times. Of great both beauty and esteem, till the year 1516, when sacked and burnt by the Portugals, before that time the most noted Empory of all Æthiopia for the Indian Trade. 2. Barbora, seated on the same Sea-Coast, well frequented by Merchants, and possibly may be the Mandi or Mulao of Ptolomy; neighboured by a lofty Promontory, which they call Mount Felax. 3. Mette, another of the Sea-Towns near the Cape of Guardafiu, supposed to be the Aene of the Ancient Writers. 4. Alfon, 5. Selir, and 6. Bidar, on the Sea-Coasts also. 7. Arar, the principal of the Kingdom, more within the Land, and about 38 Leagues from Zeila.

This Country, formerly a member of the Ethiopian Empire, is of late grown to so great strength and reputation, that the Kings heretof have freed themselves from all signs of subjection to that Crown, and think themselves the mightier Princes of the two. Advanced to this repute and power by Gradigna, or Gradameth, who reigned here in the year 1540, by whom Claudian the Negus was so overhaid, and his Country so destroyed by continual Incursions, that he was forced to abandon his Frontiers, retire himself into the heart of his Estates, and crave Aid of the Portugals. And though by their assistance, and in the help of their Shot, he was twice victorious; yet in the third battle he was vanquished, and in the fourth, Anno 1559, slain upon the place. This King accounted for a Sunt by the Moors and Saracens, in regard of his continual Wars against the Christians, did so establish the Affairs of his little Kingdom, and left it to well settled unto his Successors, that the Abissine Emperor hath ever since left it out of his Titles; though many other of those small Kingdoms are reckoned in the Imperial Stile, in which he hath as little power as he hath in this. It is said also, That in the battle wherein Claudian was slain, and his Army routed, consisting of 60000 Foot, 5000 Horse of his own Subjects, besides the Portugals, the King of Adel got into his possession the greatest mass of Coin and Treasure that was ever seen. A Victory obtained as well by Policy as Force: the Abissine being seldom fought with, or their Country wasted and depopulated by the Kings of Adel, till by the strict observance of their Lenten Fast, they were grown so weak, that they were not able to discharge their domestick businesses, and therefore most unable to resist a prevailing Enemy.

12. ADEA.

ADEA, or ABEX, as some call it, hath on the North the Kingdom of Adel; on the South and West, some parts of the Abissine Empire; on the East, the Sea. Extended from the Cape of Guardafiu, where it joyneth with Adel, along the greatest part of the Bay, called of old Sinus Barbaricus; of the realm of which name hereafter.

The Country plentifully fertile, shaded with Woods and spacious Forrests, and those Woods liberally furnished both with Fruits and Cattel; the Champagne Country not less fruitful in Wheat, Barley, and other necessaries, besides a great store of Horfes. The people of an Olive-colour, in some places more inclined to black: not clothed, but from the Girdle downward; nor very well armed in the time of War, but with poisoned Arrows; Mahometans in Religion, Arabians by original Extraction, whose language they retain with some little difference in pronunciation.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Ades, which gives name to the whole Kingdom, because of the old residence of the Kings. 2. Casir, upon the Sea-Coast, sometimes called Opon, then a noted Empory, and situate near the Promontory called Zingis extrema. 3. Azan, and 4. Zazelle, supposed to be the Hoffna and Tonica of the Ancient Writers. 5. Magadazo, a petty Kingdom of it self a wealthy and well traded Town, situate in a fruitful and delightful soil, and neighboured by a safe and capacious Haven: much traded by the Portugals, who bring from Ades in Arabia Felix, and Cambodia in India, their Spices, Silks, and other Indian Commodities; which here they barter and exchange for Honey, Wax, Gold, and Abissine Slaves, which last they value as the chiefest Merchandise which this Country yieldeth. First built by some Arabian Moor, who flying from the King of Lava their Mortal Enemy, under the Conduct of seven Brethren, came into these parts, where they founded this City, and that of Barus in the Province of Barus, of which more hereafter.

The Inhabitants are originally of Arabia, as before was said; who many hundred years ago became Lords of all the Sea-Coasts of both Æthiopia's, as far as to the Cape Des Carientes, which is somewhat to the South of the Tropic of Capricorn. The Kings heretof in former times Vassals to the Abissine Emperor, to whom they paid a yearly tribute; this Kingdom still remaining amongst his Titles: but since the taking of Magadazo, made it obnoxious to the power and command of the Portugals, that the Estate of the Abissine in it is but merely titular.

13. FATIGAR, and 14. XOA.

FATIGAR hath on the East Adel, and some part of Ades; on the West, the little Realm of Xas; on the South, Barus, another Province of this Empire. The Country Champagne, sufficiently fruitful of Corn and Cattel, not meanly furnished with pleasant and delicious Fruits. Most memorable for a Lake of twelve miles in compass, on the top of a Mountain, well stored with Fish; from whence and from the rest of the Mountain issue many Rivers, which much enrich the Vallies and Fields adjoining. The chief Town heretof (if any one be better than another) conceived to be Fatigar, giving this name unto the Kingdom, or so called from it.

Westward of Fatigar, lieth the little Realm of XOA, bordering West on Anara; Southward upon Damti; furnished with great store of Corn and Cattel, but not much much beautified with Towns of any consideration. Nothing observable in the History or description of it, but that together with Fatigar, and others of the Mid-land Provinces, it hath continued constant in obedience to the Abissine Emperors, notwithstanding all those misadventures which have hapned to that Empire in these latter days.

15. BARUS.

ON the South-East of Ades, lieth the Province of BARUS, extended Eastward to some part of that of Fatigar. The soil and people much of the same condition with the rest of Æthiopia. Mahometans upon the Shores, but Christians subject (as the rest) to the Abissine Emperor; but he hath neither place of strength or consideration in all the Country; those of most note, 1. Brava, once a Free Town, and governed after the manner of a Commonwealth, by twelve Aldermen or Common-Councillors, descended from the Seven Arabian Brethren, by whom first built; the Founders of Magadazo also, as before was said. But now, together with 2. Pate, and 3. Gogia, all upon the Sea, made subject to the Portugals; by whom taken under the Conduct of Tristram de Gogus.

Besides these, there are many other Kingdoms mustered in the Stile Imperial, (the swelling vanity whereof, we shall see anon) but of so little observation in the course of business, and so obscure in the esteem of such as have spoken of them, that it is enough to tell you where to find their names; and having found their names, to bid you not to seek for more; there being nothing else in them which is worth the knowing.

As for the Body aggregated of those several Members, it was first planted, as is noted and proved elsewhere, by Ludim the Son of Mizeram, and the Nephew of Cham: from whence this Nation in the Scripture hath the name of Ludim. A Nation not much taken notice of in the first Ages of time, but by an Error of Josephus: who giving too much credit to some Talmudical Tales, or willing to advance the reputation of the Jews to the highest pitch, telleth us a story, how the Ethiopians invaded and endangered Egypt, how they were beaten back by Moses; the City of Meroe besieged and taken by him, or rather delivered to his hands by Tharbis, the Daughter of the King, who had fallen in love with him, and on the betraying of the City was married to him. All this not only questioned, but rejected by discerning men, as a Jewish Fable, that hath no ground to stand upon in true Antiquity. With little better fortune, and as little truth do the Ethiopians tell the story of their own Original. By whom we are informed, that Chus the Son of Cham, first reigned in this Æthiopia; to whom succeeded his Son Regma, and next after, Dedan; that from the death of Dedan, till the reign of Arach (the certain time whereof they tell not) the people lived in Caves and holes digged under the ground; as did the Troglodytes, an ancient Nation of this Country, in the times long after that Arach first built the City of Aruma, and by that Pattern taught them the use of Towns and Cities. But the main part of the Legend, is the story of Marquada a Queen heretof, and fourth from Arach; whom they will have to be the Queen of Sheba, famous in both Testaments, for the Royal Visit which the belovèd upon Solomon. Of whom they tell us, that being got with Child by Solomon when she was in his Court, it was delivered of a Son, whom the cauld to be called Melech, or Milech, and at the age of 20 years, to be sent to his Father. By whom instructed in the Law, and circumsized, and called by the name of David; he was returned into his Country, with Azarias the Son of Zadok the Priest, who had stolen the two Tables of the Law, and carried them with him into Æthiopia; where the old Queen reigned the Empire to her Son. His Successors afterwards called David, till Indim. (as they call him) the Eunuch of Queen Candace, returning home, baptized the young Prince by the name of Philip. This is the substance of the Legend, as related by them in their own Chronicles (but we know that they are no Gospel). That Chus planted in Arabia, hath been shew already, as also what absurdities must needs arise from supposing the Land of Chus to be this Æthiopia. Therefore most probable it is, that this Country was first peopled by the Children of Ludim, as before was said. To whom the Abissines coming out of Arabia Felix, might be after added; and in some tract of time be of such great power as to put their name upon the Country. For that the Abissines were originally an Arabian people, appears by Stephannus, one of the old Chorographers, who out of Oranus (an ancient Author than himself) hath told us this, Ἀσάνωι ὁ ὄνομα Ἀβισσινῶν. Another Stephannus, and he a very learned Grammarian and Lexicographer, hath, as he thinks, decided the Controversy, by making Sheba the Son of Chus, the Progenitor of the Arabians; and Sheba the Son of Regma, the Father of the Ethiopians: and for this cause hath cited us with this pretty Criticism, that Sheba when it is written with Samech, must be rendered Ethiopia; and Arabia, when written with Shin. But this by no means will be found to agree the controversy; it being evidently clear, that both Sheba the Son of Chus, and Sheba the Son of Regma, were originally settled in Arabia, as hath there been shewn; though I deny not, but that some of the posterity of Chus in those elder times, (before the coming over of the Abissine Nations) might either out of too much Popularity, or desire of Change, cross over the Arabian Gulf, and take up such part of this Country as the Ludims had not fully peopled, with whom conjunct at last, both in name and government. And for Marquada (supposing that to be her name) she was doubtless Queen of the Sabeans in Arabia Felix, not of the Ethiopians in the waste of Africk. For besides the longfornness of the way, too much for a Woman and a Queen to travel; it is very probable, that the Son of Solomon into this Lady would never have suffered Egypt to have lain in quiet, whilst Syrie the King thereof made war upon Rebhomam, the Son of Solomon also, and so by consequence his half Brother. But to leave these uncertain Fables, the first action of moment which we meet with in unquestioned Story, touching these Ethiopian, is that which hapned betwixt them and Cambyses the Persian Monarch; who having by force of Arms united Egypt to Persia, conceived it to be worth his labour to unite Æthiopia unto Egypt also. Upon this resolution he sent Embassadors to that King, to search into the passages of his Country, and discover his strengths; and by them sent a Tun of Wine, some Bracelets, a Purple Habit, and a Box of sweet Ointments, to present him with. Which Presents being tendered to him, he looked upon the Unguent and the Purple Robe, as too slight and effeminate: the Bracelets he conceived to be Bonds, or Fetters, and openly laugh'd at them, as too weak to hold in a Prisoner: but with the Wine he was very well pleased, and sorrow'd that his Country yielded no such Liquor. But understanding well enough what his Visit aimed at, he gave the Embassadors at their parting (amongst other Gifts) an Ethiopian Bow of great length and strength; requiring them to tell their Master, That until every Persian could bend that Bow (the Ethiopian Bows being a foot longer than the Persian, as before was noted) it would be no life warring upon his Dominions; and that he had good cause to thank the Gods for giving the Ethiopians to contented minds; as not to think of conquering their Neighbouring Kingdoms. Lying far off, and parted from Egypt by vast Mountains, we find them not looked after by the Macedonians. Nor had the Romans meddled with them; had they not been provoked by Candace, the Queen herself, during the Empire of Augustus: who having made a War on Egypt, was by Petronius, Governor of that Province, brought to such conformity, that the was fain to sue for peace, and to purchase it with the loss of some part of her Country. To keep them quiet for the future, Philo an Æthiopian City, but on the borders of Egypt, is made a Garrison by the Romans, and the Seat of their Deputy for these parts: held by them till the Empire of Dioclesian, and by him abandoned, because the charge of keeping it did exceed the profit. After this, growing into power and reputation, the Æthiopian Kings were reckoned of as friends to the Roman Empire: innumerable as Justinian sent unto Heliodorus, as Justin his Successor did unto Archetes, the then Kings of this Country: to crave their brotherly assistance against the Persians.

Of their Conversion to the Faith in the Reign of a second Candace, (unless as Pline thinketh, Candace was the general Name of all their Queens) we have spoken already. To name the Æthiopian said, that after the baptizing of their first Philip (the Son of that Candace) by the hands of the Eunuch, the Emperours succeeding had the name of Philip: till the Religious life of John, a Contemporary of the Emperour Constantine, honoured as a Saint after his decease, made them take his name. Some building upon this Tradition, have to the name of John, prefixed that of Presbyter, because (as they affirm) he executed as well the Sacerdotal as the Regal Office; Res idem bonum, Divinus Sacerdos, the very Annu of the Poet. And this is commonly received, that he is vulgarly called by the name of Prester John, and his Estate, the Empire of Prester John, with no truth at all. Others more probably conceive, that this vulgar name of Prester John, is but a corruption, or mistaken for Preterian (or Preterian) John; and that the word Preter (by which his Subjects call him) importeth no less. And yet I more incline to those, who holding that the word Prester signifieth an Apostle, in the Persian Tongue; and Preterian an Apostolical man do thereupon infer, that the title of Padescha Presterian, an Apostolical King, was given unto him for the Orthodoxy of his Belief. Which not being understood by some, instead of Presterian, as they like made Preist John, in Latin Prester John as by a like mistake, one Pregon, or Pogran, (as the French pronounce it) Commander of some Gallies called under Lewis the XII. was by the English of those times called Prior John. Presterian then, not Preist John, is his proper adjunct; contractedly, but commonly called the Prete, by the Modern French, who usually leave out before a Consonant. Their Empire greater heretofore, than it is at the present, thrice impaired of late times by the Turky and Arabians. Of which the first have taken from him all his Country, from the Life of Meroe unto Egypt, with all the Sea-coasts of Barnagasso; the latter as much encroaching on them, on the rest of the Maritime parts of his Dominions. But from none have they suffered more than the Kings of Adel, who their King in battle: not cured of those wounds to this very day. For Adam, who succeeded Claudius that was slain in battle, was so far from being able to revenge the death of his Predecessor, that being suspected to incline to Mahometanism, he was defeated by the under-King of Barnagasso. Since which time they have so languished by intestine difficulties, that though Alexander the Third (if there were ever such a King, which I find much doubted) is said to have settled his affairs by the aid of the Portugals, and that some strange successes have been since reported of a later Emperour: yet the truth is, that the Estate heretofore had been so imbroiled in Civil Wars, and so many of their Emperours successively murdered, that the power and reputation of it is exceedingly weakened, and the Country made a prey to impuissant Enemies. For in the year 1603, the Emperour Maleb Gada, who succeeded in the Throne by the deposition and imprisonment of his Predecessor, (under colour of Baltardy was not long after slain by one Zezelezeus: and James or Jacob, advanced unto the Empire: James not long after vanquished, and slain in the fields of Guera, by one Sazingius (contractedly by some called Sufnean) his three Sons being forced to fly to provide for safety. What became of the two Eldest, I have no where found. The youngest, called Zaga Christos, after many hazardous wanderings and accidents, arrived at last into Italy, and thence he came to Paris, Anno 1638, where he was entertained in the quality of a Prince, but without hope of being restored to the Throne of his Fathers: for Sazingius, or Sufnean, immediately upon the victory, had possessed himself of the whole Empire; though for a time so terribly disquieted with Treasons and Conspiracies, that in the year 1607, he was fain to sue for aid to the King of Spain, and tender a submission of the Abissine Churches to the Pope of Rome. But the spirit of Rebellion being conjured up, could not so easily be laid down, (though there followed a long calm between) but that it broke out again within few years after (that is to say, about the year 1628,) more violently than it did before: a powerful Rebel starting up, who followed by an Army of 50000, had questionless dispossessed the Prete of his whole Dominions, if not prevented and discomfited beyond expectation. For it happened, that one Vernille, a Frenchman, a Jeweller by Trade, but exercised in the wars of Holland, understanding that the Abissine Emperors was much delighted with the Rarities and Jewels of France, found means to convey himself into the Court, where understanding the great danger which that great Emperour was in, and the ignorance as well of the good Subjects, as of the Rebels, in the Arts of War, he got leave to have the disciplining or training of 80000 men, with which small Army, he utterly discomfited and routed that vast body of Rebels, and was thereupon deservedly made Commander in Chief of all the Forces of the Empire. This is the last News of any certainty that hath come from thence: (it being Anno 1634, in which that Victory was obtained) but that there hath been a report of some new Conventions, Anno 1648, the particulars and truth whereof, must be sought elsewhere.

Yet notwithstanding these disasters, these late Emperours have still preserved their Majesty among their Subjects whom they hold in Servitude enough, though they keep not such a distance as in former Ages, when the Prete was honoured as a God, and used to show himself but thrice in a year, viz. on Christmas, Easter, and Holywood-day: by which retiredness it was thought that he made his presence more acceptable: some holding nothing to be more derogatory from the Majesty of a King, than to make himself too common an object for the eye of the Vulgar. The like kind of state was once kept by those Kings of France of the first Merovingian line; who withdrawing themselves from all publick affairs, used only to shew themselves (as we have already said) on May-day. A greater retiredness than this, was that which Velledy Queen of the Tugheti, (a people of the Rhine) is reported by Tacitus to have used; for when the rest of the Germans then in Arms, sent Ambassadors to her to inform her of their Victory against the Romans, they were prohibited either to speak to her, or to see her; Arcebatum aspectu, quo venerationis plus indiget. Such a keeping of State the Politick Prince Tiberius used. Such a keeping of State the Politick Prince Tiberius used. Such a keeping of State the Politick Prince Tiberius used. him self himself to see them pacified, but sent his Son; and the reason was, quia majestati major e longinquo reverentia. And no doubt, the same keeping of distance swayed much with him, when he forsook Rome, and kept Court privately at Caprea: though I deny not, but a propensity to follow his unnatural pleasures the more securely, together with his deformities on his face, had also their powers upon his resolution.

The Title of this great and mighty Emperour, but neither so great or mighty in power as title) runneth thus: N. N. Supreme of his Kingdoms, and the beloved of GOD, the Pillar of Faith, spring from the Stock of Judah, the Son of David, the Son of Solomon, the Son of the Column of Sion, the Son of the Seed of Jacob, the Son of the hand of Mary, the Son of Nahu after the flesh, the Son of St. Peter and Paul after the Spirit; Emperour of the Higher and Lesser Æthiopia, and of the most mighty Kingdoms, Dominions and Countries of Xoa, Goo, Caffares, Fatigar, Angote, Balagnato, Adea, Vangne, Goyami, where are the fountains of Nile, Amara, Bangamedron, Ambica, Vangucum, Tigreman, Sabaim, the birth-place of the Queen of Saba, Barnagassum; and Lord of all the Regions under the Confiner of Egypt.

It seemeth by this Title, that these Æthiopian Emperours, however the truth of Story goeth, conceive themselves to be sprung from Solomon and Maqueda, (or Nizandae, as Joseph nameth her) the Queen of the South. For better confirmation whereof, it is by some reported, that the Arms of this Kingdom are the same with those of the Tribe of Judah, which area Lyon Rampant in a Field Or, and that the Motto of them is to this effect, viz. The Lyon of the Tribe of Judah shall overcome. But Bara, an expert Herald, giveth this Prince no such Coat-Armour; his Arms, according to him, being Luna, a Cross Portate Mari, charged with a Crucifix Sol, between two Scourges of the Second. And yet not altogether to discredit the old Tradition so generally received amongst them; it may be probable enough, that when the Abissins came into Æthiopia, some of the Sabeans their next Neighbours, came along for company, and amongst them some of the Royal Race of the Queen of Sheba; with some of which, by reason of their great Nobility, some of the Abissins Emperours might think fit to match. Nor is it any matter of impossibility, but that Solomon (considering his course of life) might give a Son upon the body of that Queen, from whom the Æthiopian Princes might be thus descended.

As for the Government of these Emperours, it is absolutely Regal, or to say better, perfectly Despotic: the people being treated by them more like Slaves than Subjects; taking away Seigniories, and giving them unto whom he pleaseth, the deprived party not daring to express the least discontent. By them so reverenced, that it was anciently a custom, if the King were blind, or lame, or maimed, for the Subject to inflict on his own body the like impresion: still had in so much honour by the greatest Subject, that at his barename they bow their bodies, and touch the ground with one of their fingers and reverence his Person as they pass by, though he be not in it. He on the other side seldom appeareth to his Subjects, but with his Crown upon his head, and a Silver Crucifix in his hand; his face then covered with a piece of Watches-Taffata, which he lifteth up and putteth down, according as he is minded to grace the party with whom he talketh.

As for his Forces and Revenue, some of our late Observators speak nothing but wonders. Some say his Empire reacheth from the Red-Sea to the Atlantic Ocean, and from one Tropick to the other: Some, that he is of so great Riches, that he is able to purchase a moiety of all the world, if it were to be sold; others, that he is able to raise for any present service a Million of Men. And he himself is said to have offered to the Portugals one million of Money, and another of Men, if they would employ it in a war against the Infidels. But notwithstanding these great brags, I cannot think this Emperour to be such a Miracle as some of these reports have made him. For they that speak most knowingly of his Revenue, affirm, that the ordinary expences of his Court and Army being discharged, he collecteth up but three Millions of Crowns per annum; which is no great matter: and upon extraordinary emergencies of War and Trouble, will be easily waited, or brought into a narrower compals. And yet to make up this Revenue, besides the Crown-Lands, or Domain Imperial, he layeth some Tax or other upon every house, receiveth the Tenth of all that is digged out of their Mines; and leviech on the great Lords the Revenue of any one of their Towns, which he pleaseth to chuse, so be not that in which the Lords themselves inhabit.

This, thought he be no great Intrada, considering the large extent of his Dominions, and Form of this Government; yet it is greater in proportion than his Forces are. For notwithstanding the report of Alvarez, and his own great brag of raising a Million of Men for present service; it is well known, that he was never able to advance half that number in his greatest necessity; and amongst those whom he can raise, there are but few who can deserve the name of Souldiers. For the People being poor and beggarly, and brought up in a servile and base condition, are naturally destitute of that courageous alacrity of spirit which should be in men pressing Arms, or fit for Noble Undertakings, and are besides, uncertain Jealous of State, so diffused from War, that they know not how to use their Weapons, when there is occasion. So that for my part, I consider him as a weak and impuissant Prince, of no authority or influence over his Dominions; nor able to defend himself from the continual Incurfions of his Neighbours (some of them mean and petty Princes) which lie nearest to him. Landed on every side from Traffic and Commerce with the Seas; incroached upon Northward by the Turky; confronted on the West by the King of Barnao, who possesseth not a tenth part of the Land of Negros; on the East, continually bearded and bafled by the King of Adel, sometimes a Vassal of his own; and on the South with the Galle, a barbarous Nation of the other Æthiopia, who lay all waste before them wherever they come; and finally in the latter time by his own Subjects. Injuries not to be endured, had he power to help it.

But the chief stay of this Estate, is an Order of Knights, entitled by the name of St. Anthony, to which every Father that is of the degree of a Gentleman, is to dedicate one of his Sons, if he have above two, but not the eldest, and out of these they call about 12000 Horse, which are to be the standing Guard of the Emperour's person: to preserve Religion, and to make head against the Enemies of the Faith. The Abbots of this Order (for it is partly Religious, partly Military) live in the Mountain of Amara, where they have two Monasteries, as well for the training up of these Knights in the time of their youth, as their retirement when grown old, and discharged from service.

The Arms of this Empire we have seen before.

ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR is bounded on the East with the Red-Sea, (that name extending from the bottom of the Gulph of Arabia, to the Southern Ocean) on the West, with the Æthiopic Ocean; on the North with Terra Nigritarum, and the Higher Æthiopia; and on the South, where it endeth in a point or Conus, with the Main Ocean, parting it from the Southern undiscovers Continent.

It was called Æthiopia for the reason before delivered; Inferior was added for distinction sake, because somewhat of a lower situation than the other is. By Ptolemy called Æthiopia Interior, because lying more within the Land, and remote from knowledge, than the nearer did: and by late Writers, for the contrary reason, called Æthiopia Exterior, because situate without and beyond the other.

It comprehendeth all Ptolemy's Æthiopia Interior, part of his Æthiopia sub Ægypto, and all those Lands to him unknown, which he giveth us under the name of Terra Incognita. The Country so little discovered in those elder times, that we find mention only of some eminent Mountains, as 1. Gandia, 2. Lon, 3. Ziphia, 4. Bardia, 5. Mafchi, one only Region known by name, called Agifimba, and of that nothing but the name, and that it was a Province of a large extent. The People not distinguished here as in other places, by their Tribes and Families; but only by their kind of diet; some of them being called Antiprophagi, from their eating of men; and others Ichthyophagi, from their living on fish. Of these, the first inhabited on the Eastern shores, near the Bay of Barbaria; the principal of which had the name of Rapti: the last on the shores of the Western Ocean, near Magnus Sinus, or the Great Bay; called also from their Western situation, by the name of Hesperii. Nothing else told us of these parts by the Ancient Writers, but that the Lakes or Fens of Nilus were occasioned by the great abundance of Snow, which fell from the Mountains of the Mon: and that in many parts heretofore, there were Rhinoceros, Tygers, Elephants, but these last all white.

Such was the face of this Country in those elder days. The Character of it at the present, generally and in brief, is thus given by Aubanus, viz. That it is Mountains in the West, Sandy in the middle, and Desert towards the East. But for the several qualities of the soil and people, being of very different tempers; we shall give the better description of them in their several Inclinations, then as presented thus in common. In the mean time to take a view of the Hills and Rivers of most reckoning in it; the principal of their Mountains are, 1. those called Camtaberri in the Province of Angola; 2. Lume Montes, formerly accounted for the boundary of both Æthiopia's, now found to belong to this alone. A Chain of Hills, but known by no particular name, lying under the Tropick of Capricorn; full of sharp Rocks of an incredible height, and inhabited by a barbarous and savage people: the Valleys underneath of so great a depth, that they seem to emulate the Mountains.

In this Country is the Lake of Zembre, so much renowned for giving birth to the greatest Rivers of the World; thought it fell but 50 miles in compass. For out of the abundance hereof flow the famous Rivers, 1. Nilus, which passing through some part of this Country, and traversing the whole length of the Abassin and Egyptian Empires, endeth its long course in the Mediterranean. 2. Zaire, the greatest of all Africa, but unknown to the Ancients, which running Westward through the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and taking in the lesser Streams of 1. Vamba, 2. Barbelo, 3. Coanza, 4. Lelunda, makes many Islands in his way, and at the last by a mouth of 28 miles wideness, disgorgeth his full stomach in the Western Ocean. 3. Cuama, which making his passage towards the East, and much increased by the addition of six great Rivers, after a long course of 700 miles (in all which it is Navigable) loseth it self in the Indian or Arabian Ocean; and 4. Fluvius Spiritus Sancti, or the River of the Holy Ghost, which shaping a course opposite unto that of Nilus, endeth it in conclusion in the Southern Seas. It is divided most properly into three parts, that is to say, 1. Zanguebar, 2. Monomotapa, 3. Caffaria, 4. Manicongo. Some also add the Country of Ada, subdivided into the two Kingdoms of Adal and Ada. But these we have ascribed with better reason to the other Æthiopia, within the Bounds whereof they are wholly situate.

1. ZANGUEBAR.

ZANGUEBAR, or ZANZIBAR, is bounded on the East with the Red-Sea, or the Indian Ocean, and on the West with the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and part of the other Æthiopia; on the North with the Higher Æthiopia only; on the South with Monomotapa. The reason of the name I find not.

It contained in it the great Province of Agifimba, placed by the old Writers in Æthiopia Interior, and in so much of the other also as lieth on the South of the River Raptus; now called Quilimanci, by which parted from the Kingdoms of Adal and Adia. The Country on both sides of that River, known in old times by the name of Barbaria, giveth to a large adjoining Bay the name of Sinus Barbaricus, and was much famed in those Elder Times for the best sort of Myrrh: the Myrrha Tridactica, and Myrrha Barbara, or Barbarica, being used for the same by some of the Ancients, because the Tragelodites, and the people of this Barbaria joynd one another. Here was also in those Elder Times a good Race of Ginger, of which faith Dioscorides, Μαγειρον & ζομαζου & αινω βασιλιν, that it is the Bark of a Tree brought out of Barbaria. Where by the way, the Scholiasts upon that Author, and Pliny in the 12. Book, have been much mistaken: of which the first takes this Barbara or Barbaria for some part of the Indies; the other thinketh, that the Myrrha of those parts had the name of Barbara, from the drossiness and coarseness of it, as if to called only because unrefined. The principal Town heretofore called Raptus, by the name of the River, seated not far from the Sea; and by reason of the great Trade of it, esteemed the Metropolis of Barbaria in the time of Ptolemy. A noted Promontory of the same name was not far from hence.

To come again to Zanzibar, as it is now called; The Country is affirmed to be low and fenny, and very much overflowed with unrunly Rivers; and withal full of Woods and Forests, that for want of passage for the wind, the Air is generally (as in all Fenny Countries of the like obstruction) exceeding pestilent. The People of Complexion black, and of curled hair; Mahometans on the Sea-Coasts; in the Inland parts Idolaters; extremely given to Witchcraft and Divinations. Naked above the Waiste, and beneath covered only with the skins of Beasts, or some fish mingled colour stuff, as the Scutiffi Plad. The Moors which dwell on the Sea-coasts, use to adventure on the Seas in little Vessels, covered together with leathern thongs, and calked with Gum; having no other Sails in them than the leaves of Palm-trees. Boats of as slight making as those used anciently by the Britans, whereof thus the Poet:

Primum caua salix, madefacto vimine parvum
Tectum in pappi; casque induta jereco
Veleis patiens, tumidum supernatat Amnem.

Which I find thus rendered to my hand:

The moistned Oser of the hoary Willow
Is woven first into a little Boat;
Then clothed in Bullocks Hides; upon the Billow
Of a proud River lightly doth it float.

It containeth in it to the number of 15 Provinces, that is to say, 1. Melinde, 2. Bombaza, 3. Quilao, 4. Mambique, 5. Sofala, all along the Coasts; 6. Monemange, 7. Corova, 8. Calen, 9. Anzaga, 10. Monzato, 11. Badin, 12. Mombira, 13. Mombizzo, 14. Embro, and 15. Macar, more within the Land. Of the nine last, not being perfectly discovered, and therefore likely to yield nothing of note and credit, we shall now be silent. But the first six lying upon the Shores, or near it, and consequently better known to Merchants, Travellers, and the like Adventurers, shall be surveyed in order as they lie before us.

1. MELINDE is the name of a little Kingdom, on the South of the Realm of Adia, in the Higher Æthiopia, from which parted by the River Raptus, now called Quilimanci; so named from Melinde, the chief City of it, well walled, and seated in a fruitful and delightful Soil; abundantly productive of Rice, Mill, Fleh, Limons, Citrons, and most sorts of Fruits; but not well furnished with Corn, the greatest part whereof is brought out of Cambaza, a Province of India. The Houses built of Lime and Stone, after the manner of Europe. The Inhabitants on the Sea-Coasts of Arabian breed, and of that Religion; those of the In-lands, which are of the original Natives, for the most part Heathens. Most of them of an Olive-colour, but inclining to white; the Women generally of as white complexions as in other places; but they have some black people also: and all of them more civil in their habit, course of life, and entertainment in their houses, than the rest of this Country. Great Friends unto the Portugals, and befriended by them, ever since the kind entertainment which they gave unto Vasques de Gama; whom they furnished with Pilots to direct in his way to India, when first discovered by that people, Anno 1497.

2. MOMBAZA is the name of another of the petty Kingdoms, of the same nature for the temper of the soil and people that Melinde is. So called from Mombaza the chief City of it, situate from Melinde about 70 miles, in a little Island of 12 miles compass; but of good influence on some part of the Continent also. The Isle and City said to have some resemblance unto the Rhoder. The Town about a league in circuit, environed with a Wall, and fortified with a Castle; the streets thereof very narrow, but well built, most of the Houses being Brick, and the Mosques capacious. The King heretofore a Mahometan, as are most of his Subjects, and a bitter Enemy of the Christians. For which cause, and upon some discourtesies received from them, the Town was taken by Vasques de Gama, Anno 1500, but abandoned again by reason of the unhealthy Air, not well agreeing with the constitution of the Portugals. Afterwards, having taken in Alibog, and five Turkish Gallies, the better to enable themselves against the Portugals; the Town was taken and ruined by Thomas de Caicao, sent thither Anno 1589, by the Portugall Vice-Roy residing in Goa, there being taken at that time besides the spoil of the City) all the Turkish Gallies, and in them 23 greater, and as many lesser Pieces of Ordnance. Such of the Turk and Citizens as escaped the slaughter, and had the opportunity of coming to them, yielded themselves into their power, to avoid the fury of the Imbians, a man-eating people, who had before besieged the City; and gathering up such gleanings as were left by the Portugals, devoured the King, and as many of the principal Citizens as they could get into their hands. 2. Ampaza, the second Town of note, was taken by the Portugals about two years after.

3. QUILAO lieth on the South of Mombaza. The Country rich and pleasant, the Inhabitants for the most part of Arabian Ancestry; of complexion near unto a white: their Women comely, sumptuous in Attire, and of civil carriage; neat in their houses, which are generally well built, and richly furnished. Touching the ordering of this Sex (of whose honour they are very tender) the people of this Quilao are said to have a strange custom amongst them, more to be mentioned for the rarity than the decency of it: which is the fowing up of the private passages of Nature in their Female Children, leaving only a small vent for their Urine. Thus fowed, they keep them carefully at home, till they come to be married. And the that is by her Husband found to want this sign of her perpetual Virginity, is with all kind of ignominy first back to her Parents, and by them as disgracefully received.

It took his name from Quilao, the chief Town thereof, situate in a little Island, but near the shore, from which parted by a narrow Fyrl, opposite to the mouth of the River Cuama, by some called Quilao; first built in the 400 year of the Hegira, by Ali, the Son of Sultan Hishben; who not agreeing very well with his other Brethren, because their Mothers were Persians, and his an Abassine, sought new Adventures in these parts, and bought this Island. His Successors grown rich and powerful by the trade of Sofala, extended their Dominions far within the Land; and so adorned Quilao, the chief Town of their Kingdom, that for sumptuous and magnificent buildings, there were few like it in those parts. Proud of their many good Successes, they provoked the Portugals, by whom under the conduct of Vasques de Gama, Anno 1500, the City itself was taken, the King made a Tributary, and with his leave some Fortresses erected by them in convenient places. Secure and wanton by this means, they pick a quarrel with Abraham, then the King of this Country; whom in the year 1505, they deposed from his Kingdom and placed another in his Throne, under the colour of paying

paying the conditioned Tribute. For which the Arabians rose in Arms, displaced their new King, demolished their Fortifications, and sent them to learn better moderation in their prosperous Fortunes, An. 1509. The business coming after to a composition, the Quilias covenanted for the yearly Tribute of 1500 Marks of Gold paid unto the Portugals, to live in Peace, and quietly enjoy his own without further trouble.

4. MOSAMBIQUE lieth on the South of Quila. So called of Mosambique the chief City of it, situate in a little Island, the principal of three; opposite all of them to the mouth of the River Mogimbis; and bordering on the Promontory of old called Prasam, spoken of by Pliny, and by him made the furthest known place of all this Coast. In the Island there are said to be Sheep, whose tails are 25 pound weight, as in other places of these Countries, and some parts of Syria; Hens, black in Feathers, Flesh and Bone; and if foddren, make the water as black as Ink, but yet sweeter in taste than any other. Of Pork good store, the more, because the people are for the most part of the Law of Mahomet, by which all Hog-meat is forbidden. The In-land parts more barren, but very populous: so ignorant and rude when the Portugals first came among them, that for a Shirt, a Razor, and a little Bell, they sold fifteen Kine, and then sell out among themselves, who should have the Bell. The Town conveniently seated on a large and capacious Haven, and fortified with a very strong Castle, in the hand of the Portugals; who in their going to the Indies, and returning back, use to call in here, and sit themselves with all things necessary to pursue their Voyage. A town of so great wealth and trading, that the Captain of the Castle in the time of his Government (which continueth only for three years) is said to lay up 300000 Ducats for his lawful Gains, out of the Gold that cometh from Sofala: A gain so great, that at the end of his three years, he is to serve for three years more at some place or other of the East-Indies at his own charge, without any allowance from the King or State of Portugal, and then permitted to return into his native Country. Such of that Nation as are suffered to inhabit here, are enjoyed to be married, to the end the Island should be well peopled, and as well maintained; which otherwise perhaps might have few else in it but the Garrison-Souldiers, and the Factors of particular Merchants.

5. SOFALA lieth in the South of Mosambique, from which parted by the River Cuama, the greatest River of those parts, and thence extended to the Mountains which they call Matuca, by which separated from Monomotapa: So called from Sofala, the chief City of it, situate in a little Island (as the former are) but with great influence on the Land adjoining. Both Town and Island subject unto the power of the Portugals; who have a Fort, the better to secure the Factory by them here erected, one of the richest in the World; the People bringing in hither great quantity of Gold, of which they have most plentiful Mines, which they exchange with them for their Cloth and other Commodities. It is supposed that the Gold brought into this Town amounteth to two Millions yearly. The supposition to agreeable to all other circumstances, that little question need be made of the truth hereof. In-much as this Country for its abundance of Gold and Ivory, is by some thought to be that Land of Ophir to which Solomon sent: And of this Opinion Orelinus in his Thezaurus, was the first Author; but in my mind, upon no probable conjectures, and against very strong presumption. For first, Ophir the son of Jedai, of whom mention is made Gen. 29. 27. 10. and from whom the Land of Ophir, in all likelyhood took its name, is in the next verse said to have planted in the East; whereas this Sofala is situate South-west from Chaldea, in which the confusion of Tongues, and dispersing of the people began. And secondly, it is impossible for the Navy of Salomon, which lay at Ezion-Geber, in the Bay of Arabia, to have spent three years in coming, and returning; which we find to have been the usual time of finishing the Voyage to Ophir, 1 Kings 10. Ophir then is some part of India; or whether it were the Island of Sumatra, or that of Zeilan, or one of the Maluccos, or the Land of Malaca, called by the Ancients Aura Chersines, I dare not determine; considering what worthy men maintain these several Opinions.

6. MOENHEMAGE, or MONOEMUG, the only In-land Province of any note, hath on the East Mombaza and Quilias on the West, the famous River Nilus on the North, some part of the Dominions of the Abassine Emperors; on the South, Mosambique. The Country very plentiful of Mines of Gold, yet the people use it not for Money; but barter it in exchange with the Portugal Merchants for Silks and Tassetaes, with which they use to clothe themselves from the Girdle downwards. In stead of Money they make use of Red Counters, much resembling glass. Governed by a King of their own, who holds confederacy with the Kings of Mombaza and Quilias, for the better ordering of their Trade. To whom are also subject a wild and cruel people, called Agas, inhabiting on the Lake Zemba, and the Banks of the Nilus; dispersed about the fields in their homely cottages, black, Cannibals, and of an horrible aspect; more horrible than otherwise they would be, by drawing lines upon their Cheeks with an Iron-Instrument, and forcing their Eye-lids to turn backwards. By the assistance of this people, the King of Moehemage hath hitherto preserved his Estate against the King of Monomotapa; and they themselves by some of their own Leaders did so distress the King of Congo, that they forced him to retire to a small Island, where he hardly escaped a violent and untimely death, most of his people being starved. Of which more hereafter.

Touching the rest of these Provinces, we can say but little; and that little of no great note or certainty; but that they differ for the most part from one another, both in speech and behaviour; each Village under a several King, and each in continual quarrel with its next Neighbours; whom if they overcome, they eat. At leisure times they live by hunting, and the flesh of Elephants. And amongst these, but more upon the borders of the Abassine Empire, place the Galle; a Nationless Nation as it were, without house or dwelling, without Law or Government; as barbarous and horrid as the Agas (whom some call Jage or Giagui) are affirmed to be, who watching their advantages, and joined together in some Arts of doing mischief, have made of late such Desolations in the Countries of the Præter-John.

2. MONOMOTAPA.

MONOMOTAPA, or BENOMOTANA, or BENOMOTAXA (for by all these names it is called) is bounded on the North, with the River Cuama, by which and the Mountain of Magnice, it is parted from Zanzibar on the West, and South; by the River of the Holy-Ghost, which separated from Cafrovia; and on the East, by the main Ocean. So that it is almost an Island; said to contain in compass 750 Spanish leagues or 3250 Italian miles.

The Air hereof is said to be very temperate, and the Country very good and pleasant, yet full of Forests. Well watered, besides the two great Rivers before mentioned, with the Streams of 1. Panani, 2. Luanga, 3. Avanga, 4. Mangungu, and certain others, which carry gold with them in their fads. By means whereof it hath not only abundance of Corn, but great store of Pasturages on which they breed infinite Herds of Cattel, and other Beasts very large and great, such store of Elephants, that they kill 5000 yearly for no other reason, but to make Merchandise of their Teeth: their Gold-Mines great and small, reckoned to 3000; some in the hills of Magnice, others in the Province of Matuca and Boro, the places where the Mines are, known without further art in the discovery of them, by the dynes and barrenness of the soil; as if Nature could not hoard up gold in her spacious bosom, but the mud needs be barren of all good works.

The People are of mean stature, and black complexions; but strong and active, courageous, and of such footman-ship, that they out-run Horses. Their apparel Cotton-Cloth, which they make or buy from some other place: their Diet Fleish, Fish, Rice, Mill, and an Oyl called Sufman. Their Religion, Paganism for the most part; yet they worship not Idols, but believe in one God only, which they call Mucimo; and seem not much averse from the Christian Faith, to which one of their Kings was once converted. They punish nothing more severely than Witchcraft, Adultery, and Theft: and in the punishment of Delinquents they use no Prisons, but execute them as soon as apprehended, which is the reason that the Vulgar have no doors to their houses, that being a privilege for the Nobles. They may have as many wives as they will, but the first the principal, and her Children only to be heirs: the women here very much respected (as a second England) the Emperor himself, if he meeteth any of them in the streets, he giveth them the way. Not to be married, till their Magistra or Natural purgations testify their ability for conception; and therefore they solemnize their first Flux therewith with a liberal Feast.

Provinces of most note in it, and adjoining to it, but reckoned as Members of his Empire, are.

1. Matuca, rich in Mines of Gold, the Inhabitants whereof are called Botongbi; who though they dwell between the Line and the Tropicke, have in the winter such deep snows on the tops of their Mountains, that if they come not specially down, they are frozen to death.

2. TORRA or BUTUA, extended from the mouth of the River of the Holy Ghost, or di Spirito Santo, to Cabo Corrientes (Caput Correntium in the Latine) wealthy in fat pastures, and great herds of Cattel; more in her unexhaustible Mines of Gold. Mines memorable for formerly by some torrid Prince to secure the Mines built of square stone, and every stone of marvellous greatness, without any sign of cement or other mortar; the walls hereof 25 spans thick, but the height not answerable over the Gate certain characters written, which the most learned of the Moor could never read. Perhaps the work of some of the Æthiopian or Abassine Emperours, when their power and Empire was at the height. By the Inhabitants who conceive it to be a work beyond humane power, it is thought to have been built by Devils; but by those who take Sofala for the Land of Ophir, ascribed to Solomon, though situate 510 miles more Westward than Sofala, by their own account. The Air here very cold, by reason of the sharp blasts coming from the Pole-Antarctic; so much the colder, in that they have no wood, or other fuel, but what they make themselves of the dung of their Cattel.

3. BORO, and 4. QUITICUI, both furnished with Gold also in their Mines and Rivers, but not so pure as that of Torra and Matuca; yet such as serves their turn so well, as to spoil all industry: the people here being very careless in providing necessities, which they presume the Moor (I mean the Arabian Moor) will bring them in exchange hereof.

5. INHABAN, governed by a King of its own, but Vassal and Tributary to the Emperor of Monomotapa, the King whereof in the year 1560, was Christened by Gonsalvo Silveira a Spanish Jesuite, by the name of Constantine; his Queen baptized by the name of Mary; but I find nothing of the further progress of Christianity, Touching 6. Matuca, 7. Melenba, 8. Buinbobe, 9. Bericea, and 10. Bavagul, five other Provinces of this Empire, I can meet with little but their names.

Cities of note here are not many, hardly Towns or Villages; the houses being here so thin, that from the border of Sofala to the Fort of Torra, being 510 miles, as before is said, there is no sign of any building either old or new. The principal of those that be, 1. Tangani in the Province of Inhaban, and the Seat-royal of those Kings; memorable for the baptism of the King and Queen, which was there performed. 2. Simbulu, supposed to be so called from the Agisymba of Pliny, the chief Town of the Province of Torra, or Boro; distant from Sofala one and twenty days journey, and neighboured by the remains or ruins of the old Fortresses before described. 3. Benomotaxa, where the King or Emperor makes his usual residences, giving this name to the whole Kingdom, but taking it from the King himself, whom they call Buomotaxa or Monomotapa, the word in their language signifying a King or Emperor.

The King hereof accounted one of the greatest of Africk, hath under his command, besides the Provinces described, some part of Cafrovia. Of great Riches in regard of his Mines of Gold, which so abundantly supply all the Royal occasions, that he exacteth no kind of Tribute from his Subjects, but some certain days service in his Works; and from his Nobles Gifts and Presents, without which none of them are to come before him. His Forces great, the multitudes of men considered; but weak for want of skill to train them, and Arms wherewith to fit them for modern service; the Arms they most use being only Darts and Targets. For which cause, (and in regard the people of the subject Kingdoms are so prone to Rebellions, that he is fain to keep the Heirs of the Tributary Kings as Hostages of their Fathers Loyalty) he wagem mercenary Souldiers of other Nations, whom he distributeth abroad in his several Provinces: and amongst these it is affirmed, that he hath a strong Battalion of Amazon, a Warlike Race of Women, who inhabit about the Lake of Zanzibar, and the out-skirts of Zanzibar, compared by some for their fidelity and Prowess, to the Twifo Janizaries. And yet not trusting wholly to the faith of these Mercenaries, it is said that he keeps 200 Maffios for the Guard of his person. Much, reverenced by his Subjects, by whom he is served upon the knee; and when he cougheth or drinketh, all those that are about him make such a shout, that the Town rings of it. In one particular they differ from most Nations else, which is. That such as are admitted into his presence, are bound to sit down, in token of reverence; to stand before him, being a sign of the greatest Dignity which can be afforded unto any. Once in a fair way to have advanced Christianity in his Dominions, when in the year 1560, the King hereof was baptized by Gonfalo the Jesuit, by the name of Sebastian, that being the name of the King of Portugal then reigning. But afterwards on the suggestions of some Arabians then in great place about him, having caused the Jesuite to be slain, he was warred upon by the King of Portugal with an Army of 1600 men, under the conduct of Francisco Barreto; to whom he offered very honourable amends for the injury done: But Barreto having in hope swallowed all the Gold in the Country, would not admit of any peaceable agreement; but referred the business to a battle; in which being overcome himself, and his whole Forces not long after consumed by sickness, the hopes of Christianity, and the Portugals interest in that Kingdom, fell together with him.

3. CAFRARIA.

CAFRARIA is bounded on the East with Rio di Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghost; on the South and West, with the main Ocean; on the North, extended to some parts of Manicongo, and the Province of Zanzibar. So called from the word Cafra, which in the Arabian tongue signifieth an Heretic; a name by them given to Christians, Heathens, and those of their own Religion also, which differ in Opinion from them; but given to this Region by some late Writers, because destitute of another name.

The Country for so much of it as hath been discovered, is said to be full of great Herds of Cattel, and flocks of Sheep, abundance of Deer, Antilopes, Baboons, Foxes, Hares, Ottriches, Pelicans, Herons, Geese, Ducks, Pheasants, Partridges; in a word all things necessary for the life of man, were it somewhat better filled with Corn. Exceedingly well watered, and as liberally stored with Woods and Forests: the Hills thereof intermix with grassie Vallies, that pity 'tis so beautiful and rich a Country should be inhabited by so barbarous and rude a people, who being utterly unprovided of Towns and Houses, live in Woods like Beasts. Of colour black, thick lips, flat noses, long shaped heads, and most monstrous ears, extended far beneath their shoulders, by hanging in their Iron-chains, Glafs, Bullets, Bells, and such ponderous baubles. These ornaments common to both Sexes, who also use for their greater beauty most hideously to flath themselves in all parts of their bodies, even their very bellies; as if no lace could better fort with their naked skins; with which only, except some flap of an Hide or other leather to hide their privities, they are here apparelled.

Their best habits for the most part are the Hides of Beasts, undressed, unfashioned, and as they tear them from the flesh; but when they cloath themselves with Sheep-skins, they have so much wit as to wear their fleeces next to their bodies in cold weather, that at other times they expose (with no small pride and glory) to the open view. Their voice so inarticulate, that it is hard to be distinguished into words and syllables; which being compared with that brutishness, which commonly appeareth in all their actions, makes it hard to say, whether the people generally may be thought to be men in the skins of beasts, or beasts created in the likeness and shape of men. But they make a greater use of their Cattle, than for Garments only; their raw flesh serving them for food, and the Guts for Ornament, which hang about their Necks uncleaned, and with all the filth in them, in as great a bravery as Ropes of Pearl, or Chains of Gold in more civil Countreys. Gold here so vilified, that they exchange it gladly for Brass, or Iron, and that not only quantity for quantity, and weight for weight, but in such senseless disproportion, as rendeth Brass and Iron the more excellent metals.

But amongst all the several Nations which inhabit this most flourishing Country, none are more barbarous than those whom they call the Imbians, dwelling not far from the Cape of good Hope; tall, square, and strong, addicted always to War and Rapine, and feeding on the flesh both of their conquered Enemies, and their dying Fricks, whose death they hateen for the Shambles; the Skulls of whom they use for their drinking Cups. Their Weapons poisoned Arrows, and Poles burnt at the end: And in their Wars they always carry Fire before them, meaning thereby to roast or boyl all such as they overcome. Their King (if such a sacred Name become such an impious Monster) they account for Lord of all the Earth; as the Portugals for all the Seas; and he with the old Giant-like Arrogance, not only threatneth the destruction of Men, but shooteth his poisoned arrows against Heaven it self, as often as the rain or heat offends him. In the year 1580, laid desolate all the Country as far as Mombaza, which City they besieged, sacked and devoured the people of; which Tragedy we have heard before, in our description of Mombaza, a Realm of Zanzibar.

Towns here are none, scarce so much as Houses; and except to mean, that they deserve not to be so called: except it be some heds on the Sea-fides, for the use of Saylor. Of most note in it, is Soldania, a large and capacious Road, about fifteen or sixteen Leagues on the North-West from the Cape of Good Hope; not so much noted for the buildings adjoining to it (if there be any such) as by the bay it self; environed on all sides with a pleasant Country, enriched with variety of Herbs, not only pleasing to the sense, but very Medicinal for many diseases, especially for those that are troubled with the Scurbut (or Scurvy, as we use to call it,) the Hills adjoining stored with great multitudes of Cattel, both Sheep and Cows, though less in size than those in the Northern parts; great helps unto our Sea-men in their Eastern Voyages; for here such as are to fail towards the Indies, use to take in fresh water, and make provision of things necessary for so long a Voyage. I have heard that some of our English ships in their return from the East-Indies, seized on two Savages, living near this Bay, whom they brought on Ship-board, with an intent to carry them into England, to the end that having learned the English tongue, we might be more particularly informed by them of the Estate and Affairs of this Country. One of these was called Goore, being brought to London, (for the other died upon the way) was dierced and clothed according to the English fashion, gratified also with Brass Rings, Beads and such other things, by which they thought they might most gain upon him to affect the change of his condition. But home is home, though it be but home, as the saying is. For this poor wretch having learned to much English as to become his own misfortunes, would throw himself upon the ground, and cry out with great anguish and vexation of spirit, Goore home go, Soldania go, home home go; out of which unquietness of humour, when they could not get him, they sent him back in the next Ships which were bound for the Indies. After which time, as oft as he saw any Ship with English Colours, he would joyfully make towards the Bay with Guts and Garbage hanging about his neck (as their custom is) and readily perform all good offices towards them; yet so, that was found withal, that by discovering to the Natives how low esteem the English had of Brass and Iron, they thenceforth raised the value of those richer Metals, which formerly they had parted with for such sorry trifles, as have been spoken of before.

But that which is of most consideration in all this Country, is the Cape it self; discovered by the Portugals, under the Conduct of Bartholomew Diaz, in their first Indian undertakings; by whom, for the continual Tempests which he found about it, was first called Tormentosa. But afterwards the Portugals having doubled the Cape, and thereby finding good hopes of a prosperous voyage, they caused it to be called Cabo di Buona Speranza, or the Cape of good Hope: Vasques di Gama, the first discoverer of this way to the wealth of India, being then their Admiral, Anno 1597. It consisteth of three great points of headlands, of which that which is nearest us, is the Cape of good Hope; the middlemost hath the name of Cabo Falso, because mistaken for the other, by some of the Portugals, returning homewards; the third called Cabo della Gualia or the Cape of Needles, by reason of those sharp points which shoot towards the Sea. On the top of the Cape is a large and pleasing Plain, adorned with great variety of flowers, and covered with a Carpet of grass: it is called the Table of the Cape, and yieldeth a large prospect over the Sea on all sides. The Sea here is very rough and tempestuous, and harsh to the Spaniards proved oftentimes very unkind; whereupon a Spanish Captain being vexed with a storm, expostulated with GOD, why he suffered his good Catholicity to endure such torments; and permitted the English Heretics, and Blasphemers, to pass so easily.

The Country is not subjected to any one Prince, the Natives being governed by the Chiefs of their several Clans; nor had I hitherto that either Portugals or Spaniards, have took possession of any one part of it, in the name of the whole. So that for ought I know, the best title to it doth belong to the King of England; for whom possession was taken of it in the Reign of King James, by one Captain Finis-Herbert, who called the Ascent unto the Table, King James his Mount. But whether this Act of his beger any good title, or whether the title of a Country lying so far off be held worth the owning, I leave to be determined of by Lawyers and Statesmen.

4. MANICONGO.

MANICONGO is bounded on the South with Casfaria, and the Mountains of the Moon; on the West with the Æthiopic, or Atlantick Ocean; on the North with the Realm of Benin, and other parts of the Land of the Negroes; and on the East with Zanzibar, and some part of the Abessin Empire. So called from Congo or Manicongo, the principal of those many Kingdoms which are united in this Name.

The Air hereof so temperate, that their Winter is like the Autumn in Rome; inasmuch as the people do not use to change their garments, or to make more fire than they at other times: the tops of the Mountains free from cold, and the nights so equal to the days, that for the greatest part of the year there is little difference; the Country being situate under the Equator, though more of it on the North than the South thereof. Not over-hot nevertheless, standing in the heats of Summer, by reason of the cool winds which then blow continually; and the great dews, which falling in the night make some compensation for the extrem fervour of the day. The soil so exceeding fruitful in the production of herbs, plants, fruits, and such sort of Pasturage, that they have here great herds of Cattel, large flocks of sheep, plenty of Goats, Stags, Deer, Hares and Conies; Elephants of that bigness, that their teeth weigh 200 pounds; and Serpents of so vast a bulk, that they will eat a whole Deer at once; not to say any thing of their Fowl, both wild and tame, which they have here in great abundance.

The people of mean stature, black of complexion, thick lips, and having the apple of the eye of divers colours, which makes them ghastly to behold; strong and long-lived, with very little hair on their heads, but that all naturally curled. In Religion for the most part Heathens, some worshipping the Sun and Moon, others the Earth, as the Mother and Nurse of all things; and some again, wild Beasts and Serpents. So populous, that without any sensible diminution of their infinite numbers, it is supposed that they sell 20000 Slaves to the Portugals yearly: by whom they are sent into Brasil, there to work in the Mines and Sugar-houses. The Christian faith admitted in some few of their Provinces, but specially in that of Congo, where first preached, in the reign of John the II. King of Portugal, Anno 1490. by Gonzalvo de Sufia; who having converted and baptized the Kings Uncle, and one of his Sons, prevailed so far upon the King, that in the end he and his Queen, and many of his principal Subjects, did embrace the Gospel. Received there by the people with such infinite joy, that when their first Bishop came to live amongst them, they caused the ways from the Sea-side to the City of Banza (being 150 miles) to be covered with Mats; and offered him all the way as he went, Lambs, Chickens, Kids, Partridges, Fish, Venison, and other necessities, to testify their rejoicings in that happy change. And though many of the Subjects, in the other Provinces were baptized accordingly, and for a time embraced the Faith; yet after some small trial of it they relapsed to their former Heathenism; either unable, or not willing to conform to so strict a Rule.

Principal Rivers of this Country. 1. Bengo, 2. Casanza, 3. Dande, 4. Barbela, 5. Ambreza, 6. Loza, 7. Zaire. This last the greatest of them all, if not of all Affrick also: Of which, though we have spoke already, we shall add this here, That it falleth into Æthiopic Sea with so great a violence, that for ten miles commonly, for fifteen sometimes, the waters of it do retain their natural sweetness, not intermingled nor corrupted with the salt Sea-waters. Nor can the people say above five miles against the stream, by reason of the Cataracts, or huge falls which it hath from the Mountains; more terrible and turbulent than those of Nile. And for the Mountains of most note, they are, 1. Sierra compida, or the long Mountain; 2. Mons Crystallin, or the Crystalline Mountain, so called from the abundance of Crystal, which is found therein; 3. Sierra de Sol, the Mountain of the Sun, of excessive height; 4. Montes Sal-Nitri, so called from the abounding in that kind of Minerals; and 5. the Mountains of Cabambe, rich Mines of Silver.

It containeth in it many large and ample Provinces, of which we have this general muster in the title Imperial; wherein their King, calleth himself King of Congo, Bamba, Sango, Sandi, Bango, Batti, Pemba, Abandi, Matani, Quisoma, Angola, and Cacango; Lord of the Congones, Amozale, Languelungu, Anzuichi, Cucobi, and Zanghi. Many of these not so well discovered, as to afford us any matter matter-fit for our discourse; the principal of those that be are—

1. ANGOLA, bounded on the South with Cafra-ria; on the North, with the Provinces of Bamba and Pemba; on the East, with some part of Zanzibar; on the West, with the main Atlantic Ocean. The Country rich in Mines of Silver, and most excellent Copper; some store of Kine and Horses brought out of Europe, which they kill rather for their tails, the wearing whereof is held for a special ornament, than keep for any other use: their chiefest diet being Dogs, which they fat for the Shambles; and to that daintily affected, that at the first coming of the Portugals thither, they would give 20 slaves and upwards for a good large Dog. By this we may conjecture somewhat at the nature of the people, who besides this, are said to be much given to sojcery, and divinations by the flight of Birds; Skilful in medicinal herbs and poysons, and by familiarity with the Devil, able to tell things to come. Permitted as much Pagans are, to have as many wives as they will; who with the rest of the women, whether maids, or widows, use at the first light of every New-Moon to turn up their bare Butts in defiance of her, as the cause of their troublesome purgations.

In this country are the Mountains called Cavalieris rich in Mines of Silver; but those Mines not fished to be digged, for fear of drawing force unnecessary war upon them; so that they use Glass heads for money, and there-with also to adorn the persons of greatest eminence. Their principal City called Cabazza, is about 150 miles from the Sea, and the Royal residence of their Kings; but not else observable.

This Country was first discovered by the Portugals, under the conduct of Diego Can, Anno 1486, the King hereof at that time Vassal unto him of Congo, and so continued till that King did embrace the Gospel: whereupon they revolted from him, and have since subsisted themselves without such dependence. At first they held good correspondence with the Portugals, and allowed them free Traffick in their Dominions: But after their revolt from the King of Congo, with whom the Portugals were in league, they put to death as many as they found in Cabazza, Anno 1578, under colour of some pretended treason. To be revenged of this foul murder, Paul Diaz, Governor of these parts for the King of Portugal, arming such people as he had, with two Gallies and some other Vessels passed up the River of Congo, waiving the Country on both sides. Against whom the King of Angola raised an Army of a Million of men (as some Writers tell us); but amongst those multitudes of men, there were few Souldiers, that a handful of the Portugals, aided with some of the Forces of the King of Congo, gave him a notable defeat, Anno 1582. Since that, the Trade with Portugal was revived again, and the King herof hath expressed some good affections unto Christianity: sending unto the King of Congo for some Priests to instruct him in it, but obtained them not; the state of Religion in that Kingdom being then declining. The Portugals having thus gotten the upper hand, built, or repaired a strong Fort, situate near a convenient Bay, by which they did not only take their Trade, but command a great part of the Country, till dispossessed thereof by the treachery and fallshood of the Hollanders, Anno 1640, or thereabouts: For the Portugals having withdrawn themselves from the Crown of Spain, a Cession from all Hostility, with them was proclaimed in Holland, and not long after a firm peace made between the Nations; in the Articles whereof it was conditioned, that this peace should not begin in the East-India, till the end of the year, nor in Brasil, till the end of half a year from the making thereof. Which being obtained, they gave order to their Fleets and Forces which were abroad, to make themselves Masters of any thing then belonging to the Portugal, which they could lay hold on, who following these instructions, and Anchoring near the Fort of Angola, were by the Portugals received with joy into the Castles as their special friends, which presently they possessed themselves of, turning the poor Portugals in a very weak Bark to seek new adventures. But of this more hereafter in the life of St. Thomas.

To this King belong also the two Provinces of Matana, and Quifima, though both used in the titles of the King of Congo; of which the first lieth towards the Sea, is said to be of a wholesome air, and a fertile soil; outwardly furnished with fruits, and inwardly with mines of Crysil and other metals; but not very rich, for want of some convenient Haven to bring on commerce. The other lying towards a great Lake called Aque Linda, was once governed after the manner of a Common-wealth; but tributary at that time to the King of Congo, as of later times to the Kings of Angola, by whom brought under this new yoke by reason of the aid they had given the Portugals in their wars against him.

2. BAMBA hath on the South the River of Canza, by which parted from Angola; on the North, the River Ambrize, by which divided from Songo on the East, Pemba; on the West, the Æthiopic, or Atlantic Ocean. The Country rich in Mines of Silver, well stored with Beasts and Birds, as well tame as wild. Amongst the Birds, Parrots both green and grey, and many which are taught to sing; not much inferior for their musicke to the birds of Cameris. Amongst the Beasts of most note, is that called the Zebra, shaped like a Mule; but from the ridge of the back to the belly streaked with lines of white, black, and yellow, and those streaks so naturally fit in such even proportion, as yieldeth to the eye most pleasing object. But wild, and of so swift a foot, that velox ut Zebra, to be as swift as a Zebra, is grown into a Proverb amongst the Portugals. The men so strong, that it is said of them, that at one blow they will cut off the head of an Ox, or strike a slave quite thorow the middle, into two pieces; and to be able to carry in their arms a Vessel of wine, weighing 325 pound weight, containing the fourth part of a buttsard hold it so till it be quite drawn out. It containeth in it many Signories, most of them called by the names of their principal Towns. The chief of which, 1. S. Paul, situate on the Sea-side, opposite to the life of Loanda; inhabited for the most part by Portugal Families. 2. Bamba, which giveth name to this Province, and is situate about 100 miles from the Sea, betwixt the Rivers of Lofo and Ambrize.

3. PEMBA hath on the West, Bamba; on the East, the Lake Zemba, and the River Barbela; on the North, Batta; and on the South, Angola, Estimated to be the richest and most pleasant Country of all Mauca-ngo; the Fields in all parts thereof beset with Palm-trees, but intermixt with other fruit-trees, which are always green. The water of it good a nature, that it never hurteth any that drink of it: the Air exceeding wholesome, and the earth as fruitful; productive of all sorts of grain, and especially of that which they call Lena, in form like muscad, but bigger, which they grind in an hand-mill, and make thereof a Bread not inferior to Wheat. The people much reclaimed from their ancient Barbarism since the coming of the Portugals thither; so well skilled in imitate both in behaviour and apparel. So well skilled in the virtues of Medicinal herbs, that every one is his own Physician, Chirurgion, and Apothecary. Anciently clothed with Mats, and trimmed up with Feathers: retained till by the Villagers and poorer sort, in some part of the Country. Their chief City formerly had the name of Banza, so called, because the Kings Court (as the word doth signifie,) but since the receiving of the Gospel it is called S. Savours: distant from the Sea 150 miles, beautified (since it became Christian) with a Bishop See, and a fair Cathedral, in which are 28 Canons, with other Officers, and Ornaments accustomedly belonging to the like Foundations. The Town it self situate on the side of a large and lofty Mountain; on the top whereof is a spacious Plain, two Dutch miles in compass, full of Villages, Burroughs, and scattered houses; which are thought to have 10000 persons, most of them Portugals, and their Servants.

4. BATTA hath on the West and South, Pemba; on the East, the Mountains of the San, and those called Sal-nirion the North, Pango. Of the Soil and People there is nothing singular to be said, but that the Inhabitants herof are more Military, and better furnished for the Wars than the rest of these Provinces; necessitated thereunto by the ill neighbourhood of a fierce and savage people, dwelling about the spurs and branches of the Mountains before mentioned, whom they call Jaggos or Giachis. These naturally and originally of the Land of Negroes, abandoned the parts about Sierra Leona, where before they dwelt, and to the number of 12000 fell into the Mountainous part of this Region, under the Conduct of one Elembé, where they are since grown into a people, and become a terror to their Neighbours. Greedy devourers of mans flesh, which they prefer before that of Beeves or Muttons: not yet so qualified by the change of their Country, as to build houses, sow or plant, or to breed up Cattel; finding it far the easier life, to maintain themselves by the labour and spoil of others. And which is yet most strange of all, though they have each of them many Wives, ten or twenty a piece, yet they have no Children, but strangle them as soon as born, lest they should be an hindrance to their often wanderings. But as Pliny once said of the Essini, Geni eterna est in qua nemo nascitur; so we may also say of these, that they do not want succession, though they breed no children: selecting out of their Captives and stolen Children, some of either Sex, (but neither steal nor take them captive, under twenty years old) to the Siernary (as it were) of a new posterity. Against these Mosters those of Batta are armed continually, not otherwise able to defend themselves, their Wives and Children, from their hands and teeth; inasmuch as this one Province, though none of the best, is able to raise 70000 men, well armed, and fit for any service. The principal of their Town is Batta, which gives name to the Province situate on the Banks of the River Lelandi, and the Seat of the Vice-Roy, who is always of the Blood Royal, honoured sometimes with sitting at the Kings own Table, which none else may do; and of so great authority in all Consultations, that no body dares to contradict him.

5. PANGO, is bounded on the South with Batta; on the East, extended to the Mountains of the San, which close up this Country: on the North with Sunda; and on the West, with parts of Pemba, and Sango. Of the people, little singular, of the Country less. Neighbourhood on the North-East towards Sierra de Crysil, with the Languelongo, supposed by some to be the Æthiopes Hesperii, (spoken of by Pliny); a barbarous Nation, but of so considerable power, that they are found amongst the rest in the Sierra Imperiali. This once a Kingdom of it self not subject till of late times to Kings of Congo. The chief Town of it called Pango, is seated on the Western Bank of the River Barbete, the ordinary residence of the Viceroy, and the name-giver to the whole Province.

6. SUNDA, is bounded on the South with Batta; on the North with the great River Zaire; on the East with Barbete; and on the West with part of Songo. The Country rich in several Metals, but the Inhabitants prefer Iron before any other, because it doth afford them Materials for Swords, Knives, and Armour; well furnished also with Martens, Sables, and other Furs of great esteem among Foreign Merchants. This is the best Region of this Kingdom, not above 40 miles in breadth, betwixt Batta and the River of Zaire; nor much more in length. Their chief City hath the name of Sunda, which it communicates to the whole.

7. SONGO, is bounded on the East with Batta and Anzichana; on the West with the Æthiopic, or Atlantic Ocean; on the North with the Kingdom of Loango; and on the South with the River Ambrize, by which parted from the Realm of Bamba. It lieth on both sides of the great River Zaire, which is here so turbulent and broad, and so full of Islands, that the one part of it hath little or no commerce with the other. The chief Town herof called Songo, gives this name to the Country; in which is nothing singular for the Soil or People.

8. ANZICHANA, hath on the West, part of Songo and Loango; extended thence unto the East, as far almost as the Lake of Zemba; on the North, some part of the Land of Negroes; on the South, the Zaire. So called from the Anziqui, the Inhabitants of it: The cruellest Cannibals in the World; for they do not only eat their Enemies, but their Friends and Kinsfolk. And that they may be sure not to want these Dainties, they have Shambles of mans flesh, as in other parts of Beef or Mutton. So covetous whilst, that if their Slaves will yield but a penny more when sold joynt by joynt, than if sold alone; they will cut them out, and sell them so upon the Shambles. Yet with these barbarous qualities they have many good. Affirmed to be of so cunning at the Bow and Arrows, that they will discharge 28 Arrows (for so many do their Quivers hold) before the first of them falls to the ground; and of so great fidelity to their Masters, and to those which trust them, that they will rather chuse to be killed, then either to abuse their trust, or betray their Masters: for that cause more esteemed by the Portugals, than their other Slaves. And for the same, and that only, worthy of so good a Country: said to be rich in Mines of Copper, and very plentiful of Sanders both red and gray, which tempered with Vinger, is found by the Portugals to be a certain remedy against the Pox; as the smock thereof against the Head-ache. Towns they have none, or none at least of any reckoning, which deserve place here.

9. LOANGO hath on the East Anzichana; on the West the Æthiopic or Atlantic Ocean; on the North Benin, one of the Realms of Guitana, in the Land of Negroes; and on the South, the Province of Songo, from which parted by the River Loango, whence it hath its name. The Country very hot, as lying under the Line, but well peopled, indifferently fruitful, and more stored with Elephants, than any other of these parts; stretching in length 200 miles within the Land, and for the most part very well watered. The Inhabitants whom they call Bramas, by Religion Heathens, but of old accustomed (as the Anziqui and others of these barbarous Africans) unto Circumcision. Governed by a King of their own, once subject to the King of Congo; but of late time, both he and the King of the Anziqui (for they are also under the command of one Sovereign Prince) have freed themselves from that subjection; though still the King of Congo be called King of both. Their King they call by the name of Mani Loanga. Their Towns of note, 1. Ponga, the Haven to the west, 2. Morumba, 30 Leagues more Northwards, and within the Land; the inhabitants of which Towns being more civil than the rest, apparel themselves with the leaves of Palm-Trees; but not so well skilled in the nature of that excellent Tree, as the more civilized people of the Realm of Congo, who out of the leaves thereof well cleaned and purged, draw a fine long thread, of which they make Velvets, Damasks, Sattins, Taffates, Sarcenets, and the like fine Stuffs.

10. Having thus looked upon the chief Provinces of this Kingdom seated on the Continent, let us next look upon the Islands. The principal of which LOANDA, situate over against the Town of S. Paul, in the province of Bambila, said to be first made out of the sands of the Ocean, and the mire of Coanza, cast into an heap, and at last made into an Island. Now beautified with a very fair Haven, of the same name with the Island, possessed by the Portugals. The Island destitute of Rivers, but so well furnished with waters, that every where within less than half a yard digging, they find sweet and good Waters, so contrary to the Sea from whence they come, that when the Sea ebbs from it, they be salt and brackish, when it floweth towards the Island, then most fresh and sweet. But most remarkable is this Island for the Cockle-fishing, which the Women going a little into the Sea, take up together with the sands, in baskets, and part them from the sand, as they lye on the shore; the shells of which being naturally distinguished into divers colours, serve over all the Kingdom of Congo, instead of money; which is a matter of such moment unto this King, that he entertains a Governor in the Island for no other reason, but to take care about this fishing.

Besides this, there are many Islands in the River of Zaire, now subject to the Kings of Congo, but heretofore in continual Wars against them: fighting in Boats which they made of the bodies of a Tree, by them called Licande. The Tree so big, that two or three men or more are not able to fathom it; inasmuch that many times a Boat is made of one of the largest of them, able to contain 200 men. Upon the shores of these Islands, and in other of their Bays and Creeks, they have so great numbers of Anchovies, that in Winter time they will leap upon the Land of their own Accord.

Compacted of these several Members, and of the rest expressed in the Stile Imperial, is the Realm of Congo: so called from Congo the chief Province, but now distinguished from thence by the name of Pemba; which being of more power, or of better fortune, than any of the other, or of all together, hath given both Law and name unto them. Discovered by the Portugals, under Diogo Chan, An. 1486, at what time these Kings were at the greatest: called by their Subjects Mani Congo, or the Kings of Congo, the word Mani, signifying in their Language a Prince or Lord; the name communicated since to the Kingdom also. Of their affairs before this time there is nothing certain. What hath since happened in this Kingdom, may best be seen in the ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of CONGO.

1486. 1. John, not so called till converted to the Faith of Christ; and then Baptized by this name, in honour of John the Second King of Portugal, Anno 1490. in whose Reign this discovery and Conversion hapned.
2. Alphonso, eldest Son of John, zealous in the advancement of the Christian Faith, and for that opposed by Panse Aquitine his younger Brother whom with a very small Army, zealously invoking the assistance of Jesus, he is said to have vanquished. A Prince, who during his long Reign of 50 years did seriously promote the Gospel, and caused all Idols in his Kingdom to be overthrown: and Churches to be built, and furnished in convenient places.
3. Pedro, the Son of Alphonso, in whose time was founded the College of 28 Canons, in the Cathedral Church of S. Croffe, in the Town of S. Saviour.
4. Francisco the Son of Pedro, who reigned not long.
5. Diogo, or James, one of the Kinsmen of Francisco, in whose time Religion growing into discredit, by the scandalous lives of some of the Secular Clergy: John the Third, King of Portugal, sent four Jesuits thither; who are said to have converted in five months 5000 persons, and to build three Churches.

6. Henry, the brother of Diogo, after a sharp War touching the Succession, in which were slain all the Portugals of S. Saviours, except the Priests, at last succeeded: not long after slain in battle against the Anziquers.
7. Alvarez, the Son of Henry, forced by the Jaggies or Giacebi to abandon Congo, and betake himself, together with the Portugals Priests, to an Island of the River Zaire: where he continued, till restored to his Crown by the Aid of Sebastian King of Portugal, after by Famine he had lost almost all his company.
8. Alvarez II. Son of Alvarez the first, who much solicited Sebastian and Henry Kings of Portugal, to send him a new supply of preachers; the old store being wasted in the Islands of Zaire.
9. Alvarez III. Son to Alvarez the Second, not being born in Lawful Wedlock, was opposed by one of his Sisters and a younger Brother, both of Lawful birth; whom he overthrew, Anno 1587, and in the place of the Victory founded a Church in honour of the Virgin Mary.

Touching the Forces and Revenues of these Kings of Congo, I am able to say nothing certain; but that he is a Prince of great Power and Riches. His Riches visible by the great Treasures which he draweth from the Mines of Silver Silver, and of other Metals in his Kingdom: from the Trade of Cockle-shells, the only Money of his Realm, which he keeps wholly to himself, the great gain which he makes by Slaves, and from Elephants Teeth; the Presents which he hath in way of Tribute from the King of Angola. And though it be not easy to say what he layeth up yearly, because he hath not his Revenue in Coin, as most Princes have; yet it is thought that he is as rich and well furnished with all things as any Monarch in Africk.

As for his Forces, they consist most in the multitudes of his Subjects; which were they well armed and used to the Wars, would make him formidable to the rest of the African Princes. And though he hath no Garrisons or Towns of War, but must trust, if once invaded, unto Cavalries of Bomas; yet he doth rest secure enough from all fear of danger, except out of Europe: being able to raise against his Rebels, or any of his invading Neighbours, 400000 men out of Bambila only, all armed according to their manner, and 70000 men at least, well exercised in Wars against the Jaggies, from the Province of Battata besides what may be drawn from his other Provinces.

The Arms of this King are Mars, five Swords meeting in Bafe Sol: which Coat was taken by Alphonso, the second King in this Catalogue, because in the Battle which he fought against Panse Aquitine, he and his Souldiers laid (or supposed they lay) such a number of shining Swords hanging in the Air, with their points turned directly upon the Enemy.

And so much for ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR.

OF

The ISLES of AFRICK.

IN tracing out the Isles of AFRICK, we must observe another course than that which we have taken in Europe and Asia: these Islands not belonging to any part of the Continent, nor under the command of any great Prince in Africk, in the account of whose Estates they might be considered; but being all of them independent and sui juris, and therefore to be handled by themselves apart. In our Chorography of which and the stories of them, (as far forth as my Authors will direct me in it) I am now to travel, beginning first with those that lie in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean, and so proceeding by the Cape of Good Hope, through the main Atlantick Ocean, to the Straits of Hercules: that from thence we may have the shorter passage into America, and there adieu Æthiopia conclude our journey. These then we will consider either joyned, or separated, as delivered to us by the names of 1. The Æthiopic Islands, 2. Socotara, 3. Madagascar, 4. Mobelia, 5. Mauritius, 6. St. Hellens, 7. Ascension, 8. St. Thomas, 9. The Princes Island, 10. The Island of Anubon, 11. The Gorgades, or Islands of Cape Verde, 12. The Canaries, or the Fortunate Islands, 13. Madara, 14. The Island of Holy Port, and 15. The HESPERIDES; of all which, the four first only are dispersed in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean, all the rest scattered up and down in the main Atlantick, on this side of the famous Promontory, called, the Cape of Good Hope.

1. THE ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS.

THE ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS, so called because they lie upon the Coast of Æthiopia Superior, together with all those which lie on the further side of the Cape of Good Hope, or scattered, or dispersed in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean, (for by those names these mighty Oriental Seas are most commonly known) of which we have spoke more at large when we were in Arabia, and therefore shall say nothing here which concerns the same, but for the Islands of those Seas, such as we comprehend here under the name and notion of Æthiopic Islands, which were only known unto the Ancients, they are more in number than in weight: some of them situate within the Straits of the Red Sea, or the Gulf of Arabia; others without those Straits, in the open Ocean.

1. Of those within the Straits, not reckoning such as lie upon the shores of Arabia Felix, of which we have already spoken; there is 1. Altare, or Altrata, now called Causia. 2. Ara Palladis, so called from some Altar of that Goddess which was there erected. 3. Gypseris, by Pliny called Cypris, but Gypsius in Justinians Code, renowned in former time for its plenty of metals. 4. Macaria, or the Fortunate Islands, so called from the fertility and pleasures of it. 5. Orneon, or the Isle of Birds, from the great plenty of Birds which was found therein. 6. Daphnis, by Pliny called Daphnie, opposite to a famous Port-Town of the same name in the Continent. 7. Bacchus, so called from Bacchus, unto whom consecrated. 8. Anti-Bacchus, so named, because opposite to it. 9. Acantiline, supposed by some to be now called Anguina. 10. Insula Didori, conceived by the Learned to be the same which is now called Babel Mandel, and giveth name unto the Straits, or entrance of the Bay of Arabia now called the Straits of Babel Mandel. 11. Insula Isidis, memorable for a Temple dedicated to the Goddess Isis; and for a well frequented Port called Portus Isidis; the same which is now called Pafos, as Bel-Forst thinketh. 12. Mendi, an Island in the Bay of Avalliter, opposite to a noted Empory of the same name on the shores of that Bay. Besides all which, we find in Pliny two Islands by the name of Thridides; two more, called Chelonides, or Chalbrates, two others passing by the name of Gomados; together with the Isles of Miron, Pan, and that called Insula Magorum: which make up one and twenty in all, but of no note or observation in the course of business, or the conduct of humane affairs.

Those of most Note in the open Ocean, which still preserve the name of the Red Sea, and is sometimes called the the Indian, sometimes the Arabian Ocean, and by a particular name Pelagus Hypodis are but four in number, that is to say, 1. Myrica, by the Translator of Ptolemy called Myrica; 2. 3. Two Islands called by the name of Menan, a degree more Northwards than the other: 4. Amicofia, as Stephanus; or Amici Infula, as called by Ptolemy, the most North of all; which I conjecture to be that which is now called by the name of Socotara, the most noted Island of this Sea. I know that many Learned men will have this Island to be that, which Ptolemy and others of the Ancients call Disfordis: but because Disfordis, by all those Ancients, is made to be an Island of Arabia Felix, and Socotara by all the Moderns affirmed to be an Isle of Africa; I can by no means yield unto it. Again, it is affirmed by our best Modern Geographers, that Socotara lieth over against Cape Guardafui, (the Armatia of Ptolemy, as before is said) from which distant not above 30 leagues: which site and distance forth will with Amicofia, but can by no means be applied unto Disfordis, Amicofia being placed by the Longitude of 85, whereas Disfordis is situate from it almost four degrees, in the Longitude of 16, and 40 Minutes; besides as great, or greater difference in their several Latitude. So that supposing for granted, that Socotara is that Island which was anciently called Amicofia; and having cleared my way for now, I now proceed to the Description and affairs thereof.

2. SOCOTARA.

2. SOCOTARA, the greatest Island of these Shores, is situate, as before was said, against Cape Guardafui, from which distant about 30 Leagues, Abadalemy a small Island lying in the midst, that is to say, 15 Leagues from the Cape, and 14 from the Island. The length hereof 60 miles, 25 the breadth; divided in the middle by craggy Mountains of great height, the top of which are for the most part covered with fens. The Island extremely vexed with Winds, and molested with dryness, inasmuch as it is destitute of most things necessary for the life of man; affording nothing towards it of the growth of the Earth, but some small quantity of Mill, Dates, and some kind of Fruits. Provided notwithstanding of some good Pastures for the breed of Cattel, and liberally furnished with Medicinal Drugs, as Cinnabar, Dragons blood, which is a red Gum issuing from the bark of a Tree; and the best Aloes in the World, from hence called Aloes Socotrina.

The people of an Aethiopian, very rude and barbarous; their bread for the most part of Dates; the rest of their food being milk and butter their hair long, and their clothing only enough to hide their nakedness. The Women as good Soldiers as the men, countenancing, or occasioning the tradition of the Arabians, that they came from the Amazon: And the better Husbands of the two, governing all affairs both within and without. All of them by profession Christians, governed by a Bishop of their own, with some few Priests; but ignorant enough of all things with concern Religion. More generally Circumcised than Christians, though both used among them, Jacobites in Sect, as the Abissines their Neighbours are; and zealous worshippers of the Cross, which they always hang about their Necks. So pertinaciously addicted unto Magic and therein so expert, that they bring incredible things to pass, not to be weaned from those black Arts, though the Bishop excommunicate all such as use them. They hold opinion, that St. Thomas suffered shipwreck upon their Coasts, as he sailed towards India; and that his Ship being drawn to land, was turned into a Church; but it appeareth neither by their life, or Doctrines, taint any Apotetical man hath let foot amongst them.

They live for the most part in Caves or Cabins, of no other stuff than the boughs of Trees; so that we are to look for new Towns among them. The principal, 1. Zocotara, giving name to the Island, the place of the Kings residence, and a Bishops See. 2. Tamarind, 3. Deliba, two Port-Towns, and reasonably well traded, in the hands of the Natives: as 4. Cora, and 5. Bonia, two other Ports, possessed and garrison'd by the Portugals. The King thereof a Vassal to the King of Fartane, one of the petty Princes of Arabia Felix, not far from Aden; in Habit and Religion Turkish: attended on when the Re-Liber was there, Anno 1614, by five Camels and five Horses only yet the whole in the Island.

Nigh herunto are two Islands, (those posibly which Ptolemy calleth Menan) the one inhabited by men only, and the other by women, who do meet at their accustomed times to preserve their kind, but make no long stay; the Air of the one being found unhealthy for the constitution of the other Sex. The other Islands of these Coasts, scattered up and down in the Bay of Barbaria, (but not known by any name in the time of Ptolemy) as 1. Dan Garcia, 2. The Three Brethren, 3. Brandon, 4. Francois, 5. Mafcadenna, 6. Comoro, and many others of as small note, are not worth the speaking of.

3. MADAGASCAR.

3. MADAGASCAR, the greatest of the world, is situate over against Mesambique in India Inferior supposed to be the Memuthis of Ptolemy, the only Island by him named on the Coast of that Country; but by the Portugals called the Isle of St. Lawrence, because discovered by them on the day of that Saint, An. 1506. The length hereof affirmed to be 1200 miles, (which is longer than Italy) and 4000 in compass: the middle part hereof opposite to the Promontory, which Ptolemy calleth Prasium, now the point of Mesambique, from which distant 170 miles: in reference to the Heavenly bodies, situate from the 17 Degrees of Southern Latitude, to the 26th.

The Country plentiful of all things necessary for the life of man, particularly of Mill, Rice, Honey, Wax, Cotton-wool, Sugars, Stags, Goats, Deer, and other Creatures both wild and tame; Lions and other cooling Fruits, some store of Ginger, Cloves, but little different from those of India, red Sanders, Saffron, Amber, and some Mines of Silver, Iron, Gold, and Copper: not to say any thing of their Bees and Muttons, so large and good, and so good cheap, that for a two-penny Bead, or some such trifles, they will sell beves and Sheep of good rate and bigness: such numbers of Elephants, that they find thence yearly great store of Ivory. And amongst other rare Fruits, they have plenty of those which they call Cocos, or Cocoanuts; a kind of Date as big as a Cabbage: the liquor in it, about the quantity of a pint, tastes like Wine and Sugar; the Kernel big enough to content two men: and like good Ale, it affords not only meat and drink, but clothing; as also furniture for their houses, tackle for their ships, fuel for the fire, and timber for building; the body of the Tree being straight and high, and toward the top diversified into many branches. A Country far too good for so bad a people.

For they, as Travellers report, and most Writers testify, are treacherous, inhospitable, ignorant both of Prayers and Festivals; destitute of the distinction of time into years and months, not knowing any proper names for the days of the week, nor able to reckon above tens naked, except except their privities, which they cover with Cotton; Idolaters in the mid-land parts, and Mahometans upon the Shores. Commendable only for their hate to Polygamy, and restraining themselves to one Wife; the declining of the Marriage-bed severely punished: but otherwise so eager upon copulation, that their Boys at the age of twelve years, and their Girls at ten, think they stay too long if they keep their Virginitie any longer: some of them, like Quarilla in Petrus Arbitr, begin so early, at unquam meminere se Virgines fuisse, that they remember not the time when they lost their Maidenheads. Of colour they are black, and of strong composition; their Breasts and Faces cut and pink, to appear more beautiful. Much given unto the Wars, well armed according to their Country manner, and exceeding good Archers. Amongst them there are some white people, said to come from China.

It hath in it many fair Rivers, but their names I find not; and at the mouths of those Rivers some convenient Havens, into which they admit the Foreign Merchants, but suffer none to come on Land; which the Merchant hath no cause to be sorry for, finding himself not safe on Shipboard from their treacherous practices. So that we can give but small account of their Towns and Cities, except it be the bare recital of their Names: as, viz. 1. S. Augustine, on a fair Bay in the South-West point; as 2. Gangomar, in the North-East of it. 3. Antabola, 4. Point Antogil, 5. Santo-Jacoba, 6. Matatians, 7. Angoda, 8. Herndor, 9. Andro-arco, and 10. Roma, or New-Rome, got entituled by some zealous Romanist, in hope to have it thought that the Pope of Rome had got some footing in this Island.

This Island known, but very imperfectly in the time of Marcus Paulus Venerus, who telleth us many strange things of it: but none more strange than that of the Bird called Rack, of such incredible strength and bigness, that it could march upon an Elephant as easily as a Kite doth a Chicken. Discovered by the Portugals in the year 1506, as before was said; and since frequented by the English and Holland Merchants: by whom we are informed no further touching the Estate and Affairs thereof, but that it is divided into four parts, under so many Kings, each of them in continual Wars against one another, but well enough agreed to defend themselves against the coming in of Strangers. Yet, as some say, they would be well enough content with an English Plantation: either in love to our Nation, whom they acknowledge to be more courteous than the Portugals, and not so covetous as the Dutch; or else by the strength of our Shipping, and the reputation of our interest in it, to keep off all others.

4. MOHELIA, and 5. MAURITIUS Island.

A Djoining to Madagascar, and as it were attending on it, I find divers Islands; and some on the North-west we have, 1. Mottey, 2. Chamroy, 3. Mohelia, and 4. Jaama Island; on the East. 5. The Island of Mauritius, and 6. Englands Forre. Of these Mauritius is the greatest, but Mohelia the best inhabited.

4. MOHELIA, situate on the North-west of Madagascar, is about 20 miles in length, and 15 in breadth: abounding in Goats, Hens, Coco-nuts, Lemons, Oranges, Pom-Citrons, Pulse, Sugar-canes, store of Fish taken on the shores, and other necessities. The people of complexion black, of composition large and strong; courageous, affable, less treacherous than their Neighbours of Madagascar. Of the same Language and Religion with those of Arabia, from whence they seem to have descended; but by reason of their commerce and intercourse with the Portugals, they speak that Tongue also. The Women of the like complexion, to amend which, and seem more lovely, they Pink their arms and faces in several thapses. Both Sexes no otherwise apparelled than their natural Garments; with some Plumbe Leaves about their middle to hide their thame.

Their Religion that of Mahomet; as before is said, their Priests in great esteem amongst them; so their Temples also: which they keep clean and neatly matted; not suffering any man to enter with his Shoes on his feet. Their chief Town Moringuza, at the West-end of the Isle, strong and well Garrisoned: Heretofore under the command of one King alone; of late divided into two Principalities; one of the last Kings leaving two daughters, the one married to a Native, the other to an Arabian Lord.

5. Larger than this, on the East of Madagascar, is the Isle of MAURITIUS, so called by the Hollanders in honour of Maurice Prince of Orange, in whose time they first set footing in it; but by the Portugals called De Corne, and by some Ceylon. In compass about 100 miles: well stored with Beeves, Hogs, Goats, most flocks of Fowl; and liberally endowed with all the blessings of Nature, sweet Waters, most delicious Fruits, Woods fit for any use both of food and building; plenty of Ebony of all colours, but the best coal-black. Yet altogether destitute of humane Inhabitants: inasmuch as we may say of this, as the Poet of the World, before man was made;

Sanctis bis Anima, mentisque capax astra, Deerat adhuc, & quod dominari cetera possit.

Which may be Englished in these words:

But yet the Chief, with supream power posselt,
Was wanting, he that should command the reit.

Of the ATLANTICK OCEAN, and the Isles therein.

HAVING thus looked upon such Islands as lie upon the Eastern side of Africa in the Indian Ocean, let us come homeward by the Cape of Good Hope, into the main Atlantic, the greatest body of Waters, which is given to us by one name in any of our Cosmographers, either old or new: a name peculiar to that part of the Western Ocean, which lieth between the Streights of Gibraltar and the Land of Nigros, to which Mount Atilis the west it felt with a cloudy top, and gives name to the Seas adjoining, but generally communicated to all that vast Region of Waters which lieth between Spain and Africa on the one side, and the New World, or America on the other side: Extended further by Strabo, and some other of the ancient Writers, who not knowing any thing of the interposition of America, carry the name of the Atlantic to the Shores of India, which they make to be terminated by this on the East and South. Macrobius goeth farther in it, affirming positively, emmen terram, que a nobis colitur, Atlantico mari (quod Oceanum appellamus) circumfunditur, that the whole habitable World (so far as it was then known and peopled) was compassed round about with the Atlantic Ocean. The like affirmed by Julius Firmicus also, by Aristotle in his Book De Mundo, and by others, who have took it upon their Authority. And though some parts thereof, which wash the Western Shores of Aethiopia Inferior, be called the Aethiopian Ocean; yet that it doth derogate no more from the great extent that is given formerly to the main Atlantick, than that some parts of the Mediterranean should be called Mare Siculum, Sardum, Tyrrhenum, Creticum, according to the shores of those several places which it passeth by; which having said in general of the Sea it self, according to our method in other places, we next proceed unto the rest of the African Islands, which we named before, but could not meet with but in this Sea, and this side of Africa.

6. St. HELENS, and 7. the Isles of ASCENSION.

AND the first Isle we meet with in this side of Africa is, 6. the Isle of St. Helens, situate on the West of the Cape of Good Hope, and in the 16 degree of the Southern latitude, no other Island interposing betwixt Madagascar and it, except those of Don Alvarez, and of Tristram de Acugna, near the Cape it self; but of so little note, as not worth the naming. The Island very high and hilly, and mounting from the Sea with so steep an ascent, that the Mariners have amongst them a merry saying, that a man may chuse whether he will break his heart going up, or his neck going down.

It was thus called, because discovered by the Portugals on St. Helens day; not then inhabited, nor since; the King of Spain suffering none to dwell there, because it had been an unlawful Receptacle for uncustomed Goods; whereby he lost exceedingly both in Power and Profit. Stored by the Portugals at the first discovery, with Goats, Hogs, Hens, and other Creatures: as also with Figs, Limons, Oranges, and the like Fruits, which there thrive exceedingly, and grow all the year long. Intended by them for a Stage in their going and coming to and from the Indies: in which they might refresh themselves, and bestow their lick, whence they are taken off by the next years Fleet. Used for the same purpose by the English and Hollanders, who so dominion about the Island, that the Portugals dare not Anchor near it, or own their Property, if they see any shipping in the Rode. No buildings in it but the ruins of a little Chapel, destroyed by the Hollanders; and some fragment of a little Village begun by some Portugal Mariners, but demolished by the King of Spain.

7. North-west from hence is the Isle of Ascension, so called, because discovered on Ascension day; not then inhabited, nor any use at all made of it for ought I can find. Of the same bigness with St. Helens, 30 miles in compass, and about 700 English miles distant from it.

8. St. THOMAS, 9. The PRINCES Island, and 10. the Isle of ANNIBON.

8. THE Island of St. THOMAS is situate directly under the Equator, of Oblisical form, the Diameter being 60 miles, by consequence the Perimeter or compass 180, and just to many from the shore of the Realm of Congo. At the first discovery nothing but a continual Forest, now very well inhabited both by Portugals and Negros; these last brought hither from the opposite Continent: with whom the Air agrees so well, that they attain generally to 110 years of Age, few of the Portugals unto fifty. The Air so vehemently hot, that it forthwith brings forth no Ear: nor will

The Country destitute of Wheat, which if sown here, turneth all to blade, and brings forth no Ear: nor will any Fruits here prosper, that have any stone in them: but so abundant in Sugar-Canes, and well stored with Sugars, that 40 Ships are hence loaded yearly with that one Commodity; for making which, they have here 70 Ingenios, or Sugar-houses, and in each of them 200 Slaves, in some 300, which belong to the Works. Six days in seven these Slaves work for their Masters and the seventh for themselves; which they spend in sowing and planting their Seeds, Fruits, and Provisions. Where, by the way, these Sugar-works, or Ingenios, are a late Invention: the boiling and baking of Sugar (as it is now used) not being above 200 years old; and the refining of it more new than that: first found out by a Venetian in the days of our Fathers, who is said to have got above 100000 Crowns by this Invention, and to have left his Son a Knight; who (though he was no Knight of the Poist) in very little time brought it all to nothing. Before which Art of boiling and refining Sugars, our Ancestors not having such luxurious Palates, sometimes made use of rough Sugar, as it came from the Canes; but most commonly pleased themselves with Honey, more wholesome, because more natural than these forced inventions. But to proceed in the description of this Island, in the midst thereof is said to be a woody Mountain, over-shadowed continually with Clouds: which so moisten the Trees that grow there in a great abundance, that from thence falleth a sufficient quantity of waters to refresh their fields, and feed their Sugar-canes, notwithstanding the extreme heat of the Climate and Air.

The Religion here allowed of, is the Christian only, first preached here by the Portugals, or brought hither with them. The Church hereof governed by a Bishop, his Title, the Bishop of St. Thomas; but his Charge extendeth all over all the Churches in the Realm of Congo. The Principal City of it hath the name of Pavosian, a Colony of Portugals, consisting of 700 Families, or about that number: situate on a fine River, and a pleasant Haven: seldom without the company of Portugal Merchants, who bring hither in exchange for Sugars, Wheat, Wine, Cheese, Hides, and other things more necessary than these Sugars for the life of Man. Took by the Hollanders in the year 1599, but again recovered, or abandoned; and since possessed again by the Hollanders, not as before by force of Arms, but by fraud and falshood, at the same time, and by the same dishonest Arts by which they made themselves Masters of the Castle of Angola, before mentioned. And though the Portugal Ambassador presented his injurious dealing to the States of Holland, yet all the answer he could get at the present, was, that their people had done nothing but what was justified by that clause of the Article, that both sides might take and keep whatsoever they could within such a time: and though the Ambassador replied very rationally in behalf of his Country, and pressed the restitution both of this Island, and that Castle by all honest arguments, yet he could then get no reason from them: and whether they have done the Portugals any Justice since, as to those particulars, I am not able to determine.

9. THE PRINCES ISLAND, (Insula Principum in the Latine) so called, for that the Revenues of it were allotted to the Prince of Portugal; is situate in three degrees of the Northern Latitude. The Country very fruitful for the bigness of it; but not much observable, except it be for being taken for the Hollanders by Julian Clarcbogen, Anno 1598, abandoned not long after to the former Owner. Attended as is fit for a Princes Island, by a Mess of Chaplains, viz. 1. the Isles of St. Matthew. 2. St. Croix. 3. St. Paul. and 4. St. Concepcion. ception: and waited on by seven servants (so many Islands near Cape Verd laid in Coats of Green, called by one common name, Barbaena. But because the former four yield no matter of Hibory, and these last seven have no other Inhabitants but Birds; we may be thought, having said thus much of them, to have said enough.

10. South-west hereof, but on the other side of the Line, lieth the Isle of Annobon, (Insula Annoboni, as the Latines call it.) So named, because discovered upon New-years-day. Inhabited, and of very good fishing all along the Coasts of it; but that fishing made unsafe by Crocodiles, and other venomous and hurtful Creatures, which are said to be about the shores in great abundance.

11. The GORGADES, or the Isles of CAPE VERD.

11. THE GORGADES, or the Islands of Cape Verd, (Insula Capitis Viridis, as the Latines call them) are nine in number, called by the last name, because situate over against Cape Verd (Promontorium Capitis Viridis) in the Land of Negros. Their Names, 1. Saint Anthony. 2. Saint Vincent. 3. Eusebiana. 4. Saint Lucius. 5. Insula Salis, the Isle of Salt. 6. Del Fogo, or the Isle of Fire. 7. Saint Nicholas. 8. Moggo, or Maja. 9. Saint Jago. Some add to these a tenth, called Brazza. Discovered all in the year 1440, by a Genoese called Antonio de Noli, employed therein at the charges and direction of Henry Duke of Vise, one of the younger Sons of King John of Portugal, the first of that name. Of the most little to be said. The principal, and indeed the only ones which are now inhabited, are Maja, Del Fogo, St. Jago. 1. Maja, is of most repute for a Lake of two Leagues long; the Waters whereof are by the heat of the Sun turned into Salt, which is here made in great abundance. 2. Del Fogo, is called from the flakes of fire which it sends forth usually; and fell to thick upon the Ship of Sir Anthony Sherley, when he took the Island, Anno 1596, that one might have writ his name in the ashes on the upper Deck, with the top of his finger. 3. The principal of all, St. Jago, yet but 7 miles long; Rocky and Mountainous, but full of very pleasant Valleys, and well inhabited. The chief Town of it called Ribiera, or Ribiera la Grande, a Colony of Portugals; situate on a fine River and a beautiful Haven: taken and sacked by Sir Francis Drake, in the year 1585, and after by Sir Anthony Sherley, Anno 1596.

The names of Gorgades, as the more ancient of the two, is almost forgotten. Given to those Islands, as supposed (but I cannot see upon what Grounds) to be the fear of the Gorgons; the proper habitation or dwelling place of Medusa and her two fair Sisters. This Medusa, said or rather fabled by the Poets to have been a Woman of great beauty; who either for suffering her body to be abused by Nepereus, one of the Temples of Pallas, or for preferring her self before Pallas, had by the said Goddess, her hair turned into Snakes; and this property annexed unto them, that whatsoever looked on her, should be turned into Stones: which quality was retained after the was slain, and beheaded by Perseus. Thus and far more fabulously the Poets. The Historians (for as some think, omnis fabula fundatur in historia) relate how this Medusa was indeed a Lady of such exceeding beauty, that all men that saw her were amazed; and of such a wife and subtle brain, that for that cause only men attributed unto her a Serpents head. She abounding in wealth, and by Pisces molesting the Seas of Europe, was invaded by an Army of Grecians, under the leading of Perseus, who in a single combat slew her. Perseus when he plucked off her Helmet, admiring that beauty which he had destroyed, cut off her Head, and carried it unto Greece: where the people beyond measure wondered at the rare composure of her face, and the exceeding beauty of her hair; and are therefore said to have by her head been metamorphosed into Stones. Pausanias in his Comuthiack so reports the Story.

12. THE CANARIES.

THE CANARIES are in number seven, situate over against the Coast of Libya Interior, so called from Canaria, one of the principal of the number. By Pliny, Pholomy, and other of the ancient Writers, they were called Insulae Fortunatae, the Fortunate Islands: and amongst them of great note, for being made the fixed place of the first Meridian; removed since to St. Michaels one of the Azores. But those Ancients knew but six of them by name, and in the naming of those six do not well agree, by Pliny, whom Solinus followeth, they are said to be, 1. Ombrio, 2. Junonia Major, 3. Junonia Minor, 4. Canaria, 5. Nivaria, and 6. Canaria. By Pholomy thus reckoned, 1. Aproditus, 2. Hera, (or Junonia), 3. Phaetania, 4. Canaria, 5. Canaria, and 6. Canaria. Where we may note also to our purpose, that though these Authors disagree in all the rest of the names (Junonia being added by the Translators unto Pholomy's Isles) yet they agree in making Canaria to be one; which sheweth that one to be of eminence enough, to give the name of Canary Islands unto all the rest. Called Fortunate, from an opinion which the ancients had of their fruitfulness, and other excellencies; in which respects several Countries in those times had the names of Macaria, Felix, Fortunate. Now better known by the new names of 1. Canary. 2. Palma. 3. Tenariffe. 4. Gomero. 5. Ferro. 6. Lanzarote, and 7. Fuente Ventura.

1. CANARIA, or Canaria Magna, because the biggest of the Cluster is said to be 90 miles in compass, and to contain 9000 persons: plentiful in Barley, Honey, Wax, Sugar-Canes, Goats, Kine, and Camels; of which and of their Cheese, and the skins of Beasts, they raise great profit: but from nothing more than from their Wood (whereof they have very great abundance) used by the Clothier for the well-colouring of his Cloth. From hence and from the other of these Islands which bear this name, come the fine singing-Birds, called Canary-Birds; and so do also those rich Wines, (the Fruit of the Rhynio-Grape transplanted) which we call Canaries. A sort of Wine, if not sophisticated and abused, which is said to fume less to the head, please the palate more, and better help the natural weakness of a cold stomach (if moderately and discreetly used) than any other Wines whatsoever. Brought hence in such abundance to supply our luxury, that no less than 3000 Tuns hereof are vended yearly into England and the Netherlands only.

2. PALMA, one of the least in circuit, but as rich as any; fruitful in Wine and Sugars, abundantly well stored with Cattle, and great plenty of Cheese; and therefore made the victualling place of the Spanish Fleets as they pass to Brasil and Porto. This Island, together with Canary and Tenariffe, make up the Bishoprick of the Canaries. One of the Bishops whereof was that Melchior Canius, a Dominican Friar; whose works now

"Isles of Blessed Souls, and the Fortunate Islands. They have rain there very seldom, but a fine sweet Dew, which makes the Earth exceeding fruitful both for tillage and planting Fruits, which sometimes grow without any care or labour of the Husbandman: sufficient by their plenty and sweetness to maintain the people, much given to ease, and hardly troubling themselves with any business. The Air for the most part very temperate, never extreme in any changes of the Season; the rigour of the Northern and Eastern Winds, being by so long a passage thither very much abated; as on the other side the Western and South-Eastern Winds, do much refresh it with such Mists as they bring from the Sea, to the great comfort of the People. A place by generally sweet, that the Barbarous people in it have a constant and approved opinion, that these "should be the Elysian Fields, the seats of the blessed Souls departed, described by Homer: with the report whereof Servilius was so highly taken, that he intended to have given over the pursuit of the Civil Wars; and there to spend the rest of his days in peace and happiness; which he had done, if the Cilicians, men accustomed unto spoil and rapine, had not took him off. So far, and to this purpose Plutarch. But what these Islands are, and where now to be found, (for in regard of their great distance from the Coast of Africa they cannot be the Fortunate Islands spoken of before) I cannot easily determine: unless we should conjecture, as Ortelius doth, that they are the Islands of Cuba and Hispagnola, on the Coasts of America; to the Story and Geography whereof we are now to hasten.

And so much for the Isles of Africa.

PART II.

CONTAINING THE CHOROGRAPHY and HISTORY OF AMERICA,

AND ALL THE

Principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Islands of it.

OF AMERICA.

AMERICA, the fourth and last part of the World, is bounded on the East with the Atlantic Ocean and the Percian Seas, by which parted from Europe and Africa, which Seas the Mariners call Mare del Nord; on the West, with the Pacific Ocean, by the Mariners called Mare del Sur, which divides it from Asia; on the South, with some part of Terra Australis Incognita, from which separated by a long but narrow Streight, called the Streights of Magellan: the North bounds of it hitherto not so well discovered, as that we can certainly affirm it to be Island or Continent.

It is called by some, and that most aptly, THE NEW WORLD: New, for the Late Discovery; and World, for the vast greatness of it. The most usual, and yet somewhat the more improper name, is that of America; because Americus Vesputius, an adventurous Florentine, discovered a great part of the Continent of it. But since the first light he had to find out those Parts came from the Directions and Example of Columbus, who first led the way; and that Sebastien Cabot touched at many places which Americus Vesputius never saw, it might as properly have been called Columbiana, Sebastiana, or Cabotia.

The most improper name of all, and yet not much less used than that of America, is the West-Indies: West, in regard of the Western situation of it from these parts of Europe; and Indies, either as mistook for some part of India, at the first Discovery, or else because the Seamen use to call all Countries, if remote and rich, by the name of India.

Many are of opinion, but rather grounded on conjectural Presumptions, than demonstrative Arguments, that America was known long before our late Discoveries. Their Reasons drawn, 1. From the Doctrine of the Antipodes, which being maintained by many of the Ancient Writers, inferreth (as they think) a knowledge of these parts of the World which are opposite to us. But unto this it may be answered, that the knowledge of the Antipodes amongst the Ancients was by Supposition at the best by Demonstration only, & not in fact; that it was known that there were Antipodes, but the Antipodes were not known. 2. It is said that Hanno, a Noble Carthaginian, discovered a great Island in the Western Ocean, and after a long Voyage returned home again, not wanting Sea-room, but Vithuals, as he told the Senate. But he that writ the actions of Hanno in this famous Voyage, (which some conceive to be Hanno himself) inform us that he failed not West-wards, but more towards the South : and therefore this Great Island, whatsoever it was, (whether Madera, or some one of the Fortunate Islands, I determine not) could not be America. 3. It is alleged that Plato in his Timæus speaks of a great Island of the Atlantic Ocean, Libyam & Africam adiacentem, (as out of him Terullian hath it) as big as Libya and Africa, properly so called : which he confesseth to be drowned long before his time, and therefore possibly never extant but in some poets fancies. 4. That Ariftole in the Book of Manda if that Book be his speaks of an Island very fruitful, and full of Navigable Rivers, discovered by the Carthaginians, and by them forbidden to be planted upon pain of death. Which Island being affirmed by that Author to be Multorum diemum itine a Gadibus remota, hath made some men conceive it to be this America, or some of the great Islands of it. As if it might not as well be one of the Azores, or perhaps some of the Phœnicians, have, who would not gladly lose such an opportunity of embellishing their performances in Navigation, (could anything be built upon it) doth waste the whole Relation as of doubtful credit; and knoweth of no such place as there described by that Author, whosoever he were. 5. Some have produced these Verses of Senecca, to infer a knowledge of this Country amongst the Ancients, viz.

*Veniunt anni sceleris frons,
Quibus Oceanus vincula rerum
Laxat, et ingens pateat Telluris
Noſſusque Tiphys detegat Orbem,

Which may be English in these words :

In the last days an age shall come
Wherein the all-devouring Foam
Shall lose its former bounds, and there
Another Continent to view.
New Worlds, which Night doth now conceal,
A second Tiphys shall reveal,
And frozen Thule shall no more
Be of the Earth the farthest Shore.

But this Argument can bring no necessary, nor so much as a probable inference, of any such Continent as this, then known to Senecca : the Poet in that Chorus shewing as well the continual dangers as the possible effects of Navigation; that there might be, not that there were, more Lands discovered than those formerly known. 6. Some hold this Country to be the Land of Opbis, to which Solomon is said in the holy Scriptures to have sent for Gold. But Ezra and Gheber, which is there also said to be the Nation where his Navy lay, was situate in the bottom of the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia : whereas if he had had this way, his shipping must have lain at Joppa, or some other Port of the Mediterranean, and from thence set forthwards through the Straights of Gibraltar, and so plainly Westward. 7. Finally in the History of Walter, writ by Davide, it is reported that Mado the Son of Ovra Givendib Prince of Walter, of purpose to decline engaging in a Civil War raised in that Estate, in the year 1170. put himself to Sea, and after a long course of Navigation came into this Country; where after he had left his men and fortified some places of advantage in it, he returned home for more Supplies, which he carried with him in ten Barks; but neither he nor they looked after by the rest of that Nation. To which some add, that there is still some smattering of the Welsh or British tongue to be found amongst them ; as that a Bird with a white head is called Penguin, and the like; in which regard some forty States-men went about to censure Queen Elizabeth into the Sovereignty of these Countries. Others, more wisely, dissuaded from that vain Ambition, considering that Welsh-men, as well as others, might be cast upon those parts by force of Tempest, and easily implant some few words of their own among the People there inhabiting. And though I must needs say for the honour of Walter, that they have more grounds for what they say, than those which look for this New World in the Atlantis of Plato, the Atlantick Islands of Ariftole and Plutarch, or the Discoveries of Hanno the Carthaginian : yet am I not so far convinced of the truth thereof, the use of Mariner's Compass being not so ancient, (without which such a Voyage could not be performed) but that I may conclude with more satisfaction, that this Country was unknown to the former Ages.

But now, as Mela the Geographer said once of Britannia then newly conquered by the Romans, Britannia qualis sit, qualesque progressus, mox certior & magis explorata dicemus, ( he means Claudian Cæsar ) non indolentiam modo sed & inopiam ante se Genium Vitæ : so may we say of America, on these late Discoveries. What kind of Country it is, and what men it produceth, we do and shall know more certainly then in former times ; since those puissant Kings of Spain have laid open almost all the parts thereof, inhabited not only by unvanquished, but even unknown Nations. For God remembering the promise of his Son, that his Gospel before the end of the World should be preached to all Nations, stirred up one Christopher Colon, or Columbus, born at Nerby, in the Seignoury of Genoa, to be the Instrument for finding out those parts of the World, to which the sound of the Gospel had not yet arrived. Who being a man of great abilities, and born to undertake great matters, could not persuade himself (the motion of the Sun considered) but that there was another World to which that Glorious Planet did impart both his Light and Heat, when he went from us. This World he purposed to seek after, and opening his design to the State of Genoa, Anno 1486. was by them rejected. On his repulse, he sent his Brother Bartholomew to King Henry the Seventh of England ; who in his way happened unfortunately into the hands of Pirates, by whom he was detained a long while, but at last enlarged. As soon as he was set at liberty, he repaired to the Court of England : where his Proposition found such a cheerful entertainment at the hands of the King, that Christopher Colon was sent for to come thither altho. But GOD had otherwise disposed his rich purchase. For Christopher, not knowing of his Brothers imprisonment, nor hearing any tidings from him, conceived the offer of his Service to have been neglected ; and thereupon made his desires known at the Court of Castile : where, after many delays ; and six years attendance on the business, he was at last furnished with three Ships only, and those not for Conquest, but Discovery. With this small strength he sailed on the main Ocean more than 60 days, yet could see no Land, so that the discontented Spaniards began to mutiny ; partly out of scorn to be under the Command of Stranger, partly desirous to return, would not go a foot farther. Just at that time it happened that Columbus did discern the Clouds to carry a clearer colour than they did before : and probably conceiving that this clearness proceeded from some high habitable place, refrained the time of their expectation within : the compass of three days, passing his way to return again, if they did not see Land within that time. Towards the end of the third day, one of the Company, called Rodrigo de Triame ( he deserves to have his name recorded, being no otherwise rewarded for such joyful News ) descried Fire, an evident Argument that they they drew near unto some Shore. The place discovered was an Island on the Coast of Florida, by the Natives called Guanahani ; by Columbus S. Savanah ; now counted one of the Luciais. Landing his men, and causing a Tree to be cut down, he made a Cross thereof, which he erected near the place where he came on Land ; and by that Ceremony took possession of this NEW WORLD for the Kings of Spain, Octob. 11. Anno 1492. Afterwards he discovered and took possession of Hispaniola, and with much Treasure and Content returned towards Spain. Preferred for this good Service by the Kings themselves, first to be Admiral of the Indies, and afterwards to a Coat of Arms with this Inscription, For Castile and Leon Columbus habetogen a NEW WORLD ; and in conclusion into the Title of Duke De la Vega, in the life of Jamaica. News of this fortunate Discovery being sent to Pope Alexander VI. by the Kings of Castile, he very liberally bestowed upon them all those Countreys which they already had, or should afterwards discover in the Western World, advising them to use their Diligence and Endeavours for converting those People to the Faith : which was done accordingly. For the next year Columbus being furnished with 18 Ships for more Discoveries, and his Brother Bartholomew made Governour of the Countreys discovered by him, they took along with them one Bryl, a Benedictine Monk, as the Pope's Vicar-General accompanied with the learned Clerks which were to be Assistants to him in the converting of that People to the Christian Faith. In this second Voyage, he discovered the Islands of Cuba and Jamaica, and built the Town of Isabella ; afterwards better known by the name of Domingo ; in Hispaniola : from whence, for some Severities used against the mutinous Spaniards, he was sent Prisoner into Castile, but very honourably entertained, and absolved from all the Crimes imputed to him. In the year 1497. he began his third Voyage, in which he discovered the Countreys of Paria and Guayana, on the firm Land, with the Islands of Cubagua and Margarita, with many other Islands, Capes, and Provinces, which shall be touched upon particularly in their several places. In the year 1500 he began his fourth and last Voyage, in the course whereof, coming to Hispaniola, he was unworthily denied entrance into the City of Domingo, by Nicolas de Ovando, the then Governour of it : after which, scouring along the Sea-coasts as far as Nombre de Dios, but adding little to the fortune of his former Discoveries, he returned back to Cuba and Jamaica, and from thence to Spain, where about six years after ( that is to say, Anno 1506. ) he departed this Life, and was honourably interred at Sevil, where to this day remaineth this Epitaph on his Tomb, bald in it self, and otherwise exceeding short of so great a Merit. O which I must tell you by the way, that the Philip whom the Versifier ( I do not say the Poet ) called Philippus Hispanus, should rather have been called Philippus Austriacus, or Philippus Burgundicus, as being meant of that Philip of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, who had then married Jean, sole Daughter and Heir of the King of Spain, and after the death of Isabella succeeded in the Realm of Castile : or else the Epitaph must be written long after his death, and meant of Philip the II. Son of Charles the Fifth, who was not born until the year 1527. and came not to the Crown above twenty years after. Now for this Epitaph, such as it is, is this that followeth :

*Christopher genitum quem Genoa clara Columbus,
( Nuncius præfatus quo nescio ) primus in altum
Descendit Pelagus, Solon versibus cadentem
Dirisio crederet, nunc hædum addita Mendo
Littora detexit, Hispana partim Philippo ;
Addida binæ alis plura & majora reliquant.*

Which may be Englished in these Words :

1 Christopher Columbus, whom the Land
Of Genoa first brought forth, first took in hand,
I know not by what Duty incited,
To seek for Countreys never known before.
Crown'd with Success, I first deserv'd the Shore
Of the NEW WORLD, I then deserv'd to sustain
The future Toga of Philip Lord of Spain.
And yet I greater matters left behind,
For men of more Means, and a Braver Mind.

Dying he left two Sons behind himself which the young-est, called Ferdinand, did unmarried ; the eldest, called Diego, succeeded his Father in the Admiralty of the Indies, and the Dukedom of Vega, and married Mary of Toledo, Daughter of Ferdinand Duke of Alva ; but having ( as it seemeth ) no issue by her, he spent the greatest part of his Estate in founding the Library at Sevil, spoken of before, which he furnished with 12000 Volumes, and endowed with a liberal Revenue to maintain the same. But though his Family be extinct, yet his Fame shall live, renowned to all Posterities, as the first Discoverer of this New World, and consequently the greatest and most fortunate Advancer of the Spanish Monarchy ; though in his life time maligned by most part of the Spaniards, that Bobadilla, being sent into those parts for redress of Grievances, loaded him with Irons, and returned him Prisoner into Spain. Nor did they only kill after his death to deprive him of the honour of this Discovery ( attributing it to I know not what Spaniard, whose Charts & Descriptions he had seen ) but in his life would often say that it was a matter of no such difficulty to have found these Countreys ; and that if he had not doneit when he did, some body else might have done it for him. Who peevishness he confuted by this modest Artifice, desiring some of them, who insolently enough had contended with him touching this Discovery, to make an Egg stand firmly upon one of its ends. Which when they could not do upon many Trials, he gently bruising one end of it made it stand upright ; letting them see without any farther reprehension, how easie it was to do that thing which we see another do before us.

But to proceed, Columbus having thus led the way, was seconded by John Cabot a Venetian, the Father of Sebastian Cabot, in behalf of Henry the Seventh of England, who in the year 1497. discovered all the North-East Coasts hereof, from the Cape of Florida in the South, to Newfoundland, and Terra di Labrador in the North, calling the Roylets to turn Homagers to that King, and the Crown of England. Next after him succeeded Americus Vesputius, an adventurous Florentine, employed therein by Emmanuel King of Portugal, Anno 1501. on a design of finding out a nearer way to the Moluccas than by the Cape of good Hope, who though he passed not farther than the Cape of S. Augustine in Brasil, without so much as having a fight of the Great River of la Plata, which wathing the South parts of that Country ; yet from him ( to the great Injury and Neglect of the first Discoverers ) the Continent or Main Land of this Country hath the name of America ; by which it is still known, and most commonly called. Followed herein by divers private Adventurers and Undertakers out of all parts of Europe bordering on the Ocean. Ferdinand Magellan was the first that compassed the whole World, and found the South passage, called Fretum Magellanicum to this day : followed herein by Drake and Cavendish of England. Frobisher and Davis attempted a Discovery of the North-west passage : Willoughby and Burroughs of the North-east.

Touching the Original of this People, it is most probable that they descend from the Tartars; for which there are some Arguments of special weight. For first, it may be proved in the way of Negation, that they came not from Europe; as having no remainders of the Arts, Learning and Civilities of it. And secondly, that they came not from Africa; in regard they have no Black-men amongst them, except some few which dwell on the Sea-Coasts over against Guinea in the Land of the Negroes, from whence they are supposed to have been brought hither by some Tempest or other. Thirdly, that they have not the least token or Fiction of the Arts and Industry of China, India, or any civil Region on that side of Africa. The Affirmative Arguments prove first, That they came from Asia; next in particular from Tartary. That they came out of Asia, is more than manifest, in that the West side of the Country towards Asia, is far more populous than the East towards Europe; of which there can be no other reason assigned, than that these parts were first inhabited, and that from hence the rest was peopled. Next, the Idolatry of this People, and the particularities thereof, their Incivility and barbarous qualities, tell us that they are most like the Tartars of any. Thirdly, the West-side of America, if it be not Continuent with Tartary, is yet divided by a very small Strait, as may be perceived in all our Maps and Charts, as also in the Description of these Countries: so that there is thence into these Countries a very quick and easy passage. And fourthly, The People of Guinea, which of all the Provinces of America is the nearest unto Tartary, are said to follow, in the whole course of their Life, the Seasons and best performing of their Carrel, just like the Scythian Nomades, or Tartarian Hordes: an evident Argument of their Original Descent.

But from what Root Europe they did first descend, certain it is, that they had settled here many Ages since, and overpread all the parts and quarters of this spacious Continent: there being no place which the Spaniards, or any other Adventurers, found desolate or waste, and without Inhabitants. But their numbers are much diminished since these late Discoveries: the Spaniards behaving themselves most inhumanely towards this unarmed and naked People, killing them up like Sheep appointed to the Slaughter, or otherwise consuming them in their Mines and Works of Drudgery. And had not Charles the Fifth ordained with most Christian Prudence, that the Natives should not be compelled to work in the Mines against their will, but that the Spaniards should provide themselves of Slaves elsewhere; the Natives in a little longer time had been quite exterminated, to the great reproach of Christianity and the Gospel. For so exceeding barbarous and bloody were they at their first coming thither, that Hanby, a Nobleman amongst them, being persuaded to embrace the Christian Faith, demanded first what he should get by being of that Religion? and was answered, that he should get Heaven and the Joys thereof. Then would he know what place was destitute to such as died unbaptized; and was answered, That they went to Hell, and the Torments of it. Finally, asking unto which of these two places the Spaniards went, and being told that they went to Heaven, he renounced his Baptism: protesting that he would rather go to Hell with the unbaptized, than to live in Heaven with so cruel a people. The rest were driven unto the Font, like to many Horses to the watering place, and received into the Church of Christ without any jurisdiction: inasmuch that one old Friar (as himself testified to Charles the Fifth) had Christened 70000 of them, and another of that rank 300000; never acquainting them with any of the Articles of the Christian Faith, or points of Religious Conversation, (except it were to be obedient to their Pastors and Teachers.) Yet here I must confess, (for I am loth to defraud any man of his due) there hath been made great Improvement of Christianity: the number of Christians in this Country being thought by some learned men of the Church of Rome, to equal all those of the Latine Churches in Europe. And though perhaps constrained at first unto it as a new Religion, and of a stricter Rule than that which before they had; yet by long time and Education it is now grown more plausible and familiar to them. The Church heretofore is governed by the four Archbishops of, 1. Mexico, 2. Lima, 3. S. Foy, and 4. Dominico, who have under them 25 Suffragan Bishops, all liberally endowed and provided for.

When this New World came first acquainted with the Old, Isabel Queen of Castile would not permit any of her Husband Ferdinando's Subjects to be planted here, viz. Arrogians or Valentians, but licensed the Castilians, Andalusians, Biscainers, and the rest of her own people only, conveying the Wealth heretofore to the rest. When he was dead, Ferdinando licensed generally all the Spaniards, excluding only the Portugals. But so rich a Prize could not so warily be fenced, but that the Portugals, French, English, and now of late the Low-Country-men have had in their own Bays part of the Spaniards's Harvest; who well hoped to have had a Monopoly of so wealthy a Region, and to have enjoyed without any Rival or Competitor the possession (I cannot say the Love) of a Country so abundantly fruitful. For though some of the Kings of Spain have been used to say, that they loved the King of India as their Mistress only, in whose favour they could patiently enough endure a Rival; but esteemed America as their Wife, in whose love they could not break a Competitor without a foul dishonour: yet by his leave (or without it rather) some of his Neighbours have made bold with his Wife in these later times, though in the affections of his Mistress they have greater Interest. But these Attempts of the English and Hollanders have been an occasion of great strength to the whole Country. For whereas in our first wars with Spain, in Queen Elizabeth's time, our private Adventurers found the Sea-coasts almost naked of Defence, and thereupon made many a rich and prosperous Voyage to these parts: the Spaniards, upon light of that weakness and disadvantage, so strongly fortified their Havens and Sea-Towns, that towards the later end of the Reign of that Queen we were not able to accomplish that with great and Public Forces, which before had been performed by small and Private. Which caused our Captains and adventures, falling oftentimes in their Designs upon the Continent, to make up their Market on the Seas, in the return of Spanish Navies, as they yet do.

This New World is very plentiful of Spices, Fruits, and such Creatures which the Old World never knew; stocked with such store of Kine and Bulls, (brought hither out of Europe since the first Discovery) that the Spaniards kill thousands of them yearly for their Tallow and Hides only: blest with such abundance of Gold, that they found in many of their Mines more Gold than Earth's Metal which the Americans, not regarding it, greedily exchanged for Hammers, Knives, Axes, and the like Tools of Iron; for before they were wont to make their Canoes or Boats plain without, and hollow within, by the force of Fire. Other particularities shall be specified in the particular Descriptions of the several Countries. I shall now only take a brief View of such of their Beasts and Fowls, as either this Old World did not know, or knew not in such shapes and qualities as are there presented. Their Lions live in greatness than those in Africa, are said to be of colour gray, and so nimble as to climb Treesthree

Dogs

Dogs snouted like Foxes, but deprived of that property which the Logicians call Proprium quatuor pedum, for they could not bark; their Hogs with Talons sharp as Razors, and the Nails of their Bodies on the Ridge of their Backs: their Stags and Deer without Horns; their Sheep (they call them Lamas) not only profitable, as with us, for Food and Raiment, but accustomed to the carrying of Burthens, some of 150 pound weight. Amongst such strong Beasts as this Old World knew not, we may reckon that deformed one (whose name I find not) whose fore-part resembleth a Fox, the hinder-part an Ape, except the Feet only, which are like a Man's: be beneath her Belly a receptacle like a Purse, where the keeps her young, till they be able to shift for themselves; never coming thence but when they suck, and then in again. The Armadilla is in form like a barbed Horse, seeming to be armed all over, and that with artificial (rather than natural) Plates, which do shut and open. The Vicugna resembleth a Goat, but greater and more profitable; of the Fleec whereof they make Rugs, Coverings, and Suffs; and in the Belly find the Bezoar, sometimes two or three, a sovereign Antidote against Poisons and venomous Discales. A kind of Hare, resembling a Want in his Feet, and a Cat in his Tail; under whose Chin nature hath fastened a little Bag, which he hath also taught him to use as a Store-house; for in this, having filled his belly, he preserveth the remnant of his Provision. The Perigrina, a little Beast, (not so named for nought) which in fourteen days cannot go so far as a man may easily throw a stone. Then for their Birds, they have them there in such variety of Colours, that the Indians will perfectly represent in Feathers whatsoever they see drawn with Pencils: inasmuch as a Figure of S. Francis made of Feathers was presented to Pope Sixtus Quintus; whose Eye could not discern them to be natural Colours, but thought them Pencil-work, till he made trial with his Fingers. One called the Tomirio, of all colours, so little, that it seems no bigger than a Bee or Butter-fly, the mouth thereof no bigger than the eye of a Needle, yet yielding not to the Nightingale in the sweetness of its Note and Music; the Bird and Nett put into Gold-Scutes or many Colours, especially in the Neck and Breast, that the Indians make great use of them in their Father-pictures. Others as big as these are little. The Condors of such strength and greatness, that they will fall upon a Sheep or a Calf, open it and eat it. Like Miracles of Nature have they in their Fruits and Plants, more proper unto natural History than to this Discourse; and many medicinal Drugs of rare operation, which I leave to the consideration of the Learned Herbalists. I am too much a Fool to be a Physician, and therefore will not deal in such things as are out of my Element. Yet somewhat of this kind we may chance to meet with in the Description and Survey of the several Provinces into which this New World is divided.

The whole is naturally divided into two great Peninsulas; whereof that towards the North is called Mexicana, from Mexico the chief City and Province of it, supposed (for the most Northern parts of it are not yet discovered) to contain 130000 miles in compass. That towards the South hath the name of Peruana, from the great Country of Peru; the Circumnavigation whereof is reckoned to 170000 Italian miles. The Indian which joineth these two together is very long, but narrow; in some places not above 12 miles from Sea to Sea, in many not above fifteen. By the Spaniards it is called the Strait of Darien, from a River of that name in Peruana, near unto the Indian; and is so small a Ligament for two great Bodies, that some have thought of turning these two Peninsulas into perfect Islands. Certain it is, that many have motioned to the Council of Spain, the cutting of a navigable Channel through this small Indian, so to shorten their common Voyages to China and the Moluccas. But the Kings of Spain have not hitherto attempted it; partly, because if he should cut off few of them which in the work, he should lose those few of them which his people have suffered to live; partly, because the Slaves which they yearly buy out of Africa do but suffice for the Mines and Sugar-houses; but principally, lest the passage by the Cape of good Hope being left, those Seas might become a receptacle of Pirates. Which doubtless was a very prudent and politic consideration. Many times I have read of the like attempts begun, but never of any finished. Sesftris King of Aegypt, Darius of Persia, one of the Polonians, and a late capricious Portugal had the like Plot, to make a passage from the Red Sea to the Mediterranean. So had Cesar, Caligula, and Nero, Emperours of Rome, upon the Caribinian Indian. Another of the same nature had Charles the Great, to let the Rhene into the Danube: the like had Lucius Verrus, to join the Rhene and the Rhine: all which, in their peculiar places, we have already touched. Nicanor also, King of Syria, intended to have made a Channel from the Caspian to the Euxine Sea, an infinite Project. But neither he nor any of the rest could finish these works: God, it seemeth, being not pleased at such proud and haughty Enterprises. And yet perhaps the want of Treasure hath not been the least cause why the like Projects have not proceeded: besides the dreadful Noises and Apparitions, which (as we have already said) continually affrighted the Workmen.

Nor less observable than this great, but unsuccessful, Design of cutting a passage through the Indian, from one Sea to the other, was that notable, but alike unsuccessful Attempt of John Oxenham, an adventurous Englishman, to cut a passage over it by Land. This man being one of the Followers of Sir Francis Drake, arriving in a small Bark, with 20 of his Companions, a little above Norwich of Deer, the chiefest Town all the Indian, drew his Ship on Land, covered it with Boughs, and marched over the Land with his Company guided by Negroes, till he came to a River. There he cut down Wood, made him a Pinace, entered the South-Sea, went to the Isle of Pearl, where he stayed ten dayes; intercepted in two Spanish Ships, who feared no Enemy; on that side 60000 pound weight of Gold, 200000 pound weight in bars of Silver, and returned in safety to the Land. And though by the mutiny of some of his own Company, he neither returned into his own Country, nor unto his Ship: yet it is an Adventure not to be forgotten, in that never attempted by any other, and by the Spanish Writers recorded with much admiration.

But to return to the Division of this Country, and the two main parts thereof which this Strait uniteth, Mexicana, or the Northern Peninsula, may be most properly divided into the Continent, and Islands; the Continent again into the several Provinces of 1. Estadialta, 2. Nova Francia, 3. Virginia, 4. Florida, 5. California, 6. Nova Galicia, 7. Nova Hispania, 8. Guatemala; each of them branched into many Subdivisions and lesser Territories. Peruana, or the Southern Peninsula, taking in some part of the Indian, as before we did, hath on the Continent the Provinces of 1. Castilla Antea, 2. Nova Granada, 3. Peru, 4. Chile, 5. Paraguay, 6. Brasil, 7. Guiana, and 8. Paria; with their several Members, Parts, and particular Regions. The Islands which belong to both, dispersed either in the Southern Ocean, called Mar del Zur, where there is not any one of note but 1. Those called Las Ladroneas, and 2. The Islands of Solomon: or in the Northern Ocean, or Mar del Noard, reduced unto; 3. the Caribber, 4. Porto Rico, 5. Hispánola, 6. Cuba, and 7. Jamaica, in the Survey of which particulars we will begin with those which lie on the North-east of this great Continent, not possessed by the Spaniards; and passing through the plantations of such other Nations as have any footing in the fame, come by degrees to the Estates of the King of Spain, that we may lay them all together without interruption: beginning with Estotiland, the most Northern part, and that which (as some say) was discovered first.

ESTOTILAND.

ESTOTILAND, as under that name we comprehend those Regions of Mexicana which lie most towards the North and East, hath on the East the main Ocean: on the South, Canada, or Nova Francia; on the West, some unknown Tract not yet discovered; and on the North, a Bay or Inlet of the Sea, called Hudson's Straights, and called so from Henry Hudson an Englishman, who by this way endeavoured to find out a more commodious and quick passage to Cathay and China than had been formerly discovered. It comprehends, 1. Estotiland, specially so called, 2. Terra Corterialis, 3. New-found Land, and 4. the Isles of Bacalaos.

1. And first ESTOTILAND, specially so called, is the most Northern Region on the Eastside of America, lying betwixt Hudson's Straights on the North, and Terra Corterialis on the South. The Soil sufficiently enriched with natural Endowments is said to have in it Mines of Gold, and other Metals: but I doubt it lieth too much North for Gold, whatsoever it may do for Brass and Iron. The people rude and void of goodness; naked, notwithstanding the extreme cold of the Country; not having either the wit, or the care, to cover their Bodies with the skins of those Beasts which they kill by Hunting, though their bellies teach them to keep life by the flesh thereof: said by the first Discoverers to fow Corn, to make Beer, or Ale, and to have many Barks of their own with which they traded into Greenland; as also to have many Cities and Castles, some Temples consecrated to their Idols, where they first sacrificed Men, and after eat them. The Language which they speak is expressed in Characters of their own; but some knowledge of the Latin Tongue there hath been amongst them, and Latin Books in the Library of one of their Kings, undisturbed by few.

Such were the Reports made of this Country by the first Discoverers, who were certain Fishermen of Freeze-land, call'd by a Tempest on this Coast about the year 1350. Six of them only got on Land, where all died save one; who after a long wandering from one Prince's Court to another, found means to return into his own Country: the King whereof, called Zichmuni, being a great Adventurer in the feats of Arms, prepared for the further Discovery and Conquest of it. Animated therunto by the opportune coming of Nicola and Antonio Zeni, two noble Gentlemen of Venice, who desiring to see the Fashions of the World, furnished a Ship at their own Charges, and passing the Straights of Gibraltar held their course Northward, with an intent to see England and Flanders. But driven by Tempest on this Island, Ann, 1380, they were kindly welcomed by the King, then newly prosperous in a War against those of Norway, who liked Nicola so well, that he gave him a Command in his Navy, and under his good conduct won many Islands, discovered Greenland, and provided for the Conquest of Estotiland also. But Nicola in the mean time dying, the business was pursued by his Brother Antonio, the King in person making one in the Undertaking: who liked the Country so well being once possessed of it, that he built a City in it, and there determining to spend the rest of his days, sent back Antonio unto Freeze-land, with the most of his people.

This is the substance of the Story of the first Discovery, published long since by one Francisco Marcellino, out of the Letters of the Zeni: which had they been considered of as they might have been, we had not so long wanted the acquaintance of this part of the world. But whether it were that their Reports were esteemed as fabulous by the States of Europe, or that the time was not yet ripe for this great Discovery; was there nothing done in pursuance of it: Zichmuni never going back to his own Country, and Freeze-land not long after conquered by the Kings of Norway. So that the knowledge of it was quite lost again, till these latter days. Said, in the Letters of the Zeni, to be well stored with Fowl, and the Eggs of Birds, which they found there for their refreshment; the Haven where they landed to be called Cape Trin: the people to be of Irish stature, tearful, and to hide themselves in Caves at the sight of the Freeze-landers; that there was a Mountain always burning, or calling smoke; together with a certain Spring, whence issued a water as black as Pitch; but no such Cities, Ports, and Temples, as the Fishermen spoke of. The Country West from Freeze-land 1000 miles.

To give you the Face of it as it stands at the present, it is said to be well cultivated, fruitful of all Necessaries for the life of Man, and rich in Metals, but extreme cold; watered with four Rivers, which rising out of an high Mountain in the middle of the Country, disperse themselves over all parts of it. The people said to be more ingenious, of better judgments, and more skilled in most Mechanick Arts, than the rest of the Americans were at the first Discovery; which argueth some more Civil people to have been formerly amongst them. Their Garments of the skins of Beasts, or Sea-Calves, with which also they covered the out-side of their Boats, to keep out the water, and make them able to endure the Sea. What Towns they have, and whether the name of Cape Trin be still remaining, I am not able to discover; this Country lying still for the most part hidden in a Northern Mist. All we can say is, that some English names have been imposed of late on some Caves and Promontories lying on the Northern Shores hereof: towards Hudson's Straights, by Hudson and such others of the English Nation who pursued that Enterprize. Of which first are Prince Henry's Foreland, towards the East, almost at the entries of those Straights; and then proceeding towards the West, Cape Charles, Kings Foreland; and last of all Cape Walsingham, at the end thereof, where these Straights open into a large and capacious Bay, called Hudson's Bay. But of these more particularly in another place, where we endeavour the Discovery of such parts of the World as as yet unknown, and so within the compass of a Terra Incognita.

2. TERRA CORTERIALIS hath on the North Estotiland; on the South Canada, or Nova Francia. So called from Caspar Corterialis, who in the year 1500 left his name unto it. It is called also Terra di Laborador, both from the pains required of the Husbandman, and the great Recompence which it gives him: in the same sense as Campania in the Realm of Naples is named Terra di Lavoro. By the French, who succeeded in the possession hereof after the Spaniard had forsaken it, it was called New-Bretagne, with reference to Bretagne in France, their own natural Country.

The people at the first coming of Corterialis were found to be barbarous enough, well coloured, swift of Foot, and very good Archers: their clothing of Beasts-skins; their Habitations Caves, or some sorry Cottages, their Religion Paganism, or none; their Directions Sooth-fying. Not so forgetful of the Law which Nature had planted in them, as not to know the necessary use of Marriage; but extremely jealous. Better conditioned at the present than in former times, by their near neighbourhood to the French, and Commerce with Foreigners: affirmed to be very well disposed, to feed most generally on Fish, and to adorn themselves with Bracelets of Brass, or Silver. Their chief Towns, 1. Brest, 2. Santa Maria, 3. Cape Marso, of which little memorable.

The Country first discovered by Sebastian Cabot, the Son of John Cabot, before mentioned: who in the year 1497, at the Charges and Encouragement of King Henry 7. setting sail from Bristol, first made the Discovery of these parts as far as to the Latitude of 67 and an half, (which brings Estotiland within the compass also of his Discoveries.) The Land which he first saw he called Prima Vista, an Island lying before it he called S. John's, because discovered on the day of S. John Baptist. They found upon the Country plenty of White Beas, Stags greater than ours. Scut-fishes of a Yard long, and fish free of Cod-fish (which the Inhabitants called Bacalaos) that their multitudes sometimes stayed his Ships: hence the occasion of their name. Returning home, he found great preparations for War in Scotland; so that nothing else was done in this Discovery by the English Nation. But three years after, Caspar Corterialis a Portuguese, setting sail from Lisbon, fell upon these parts of Cabot's Discoveries, which since bear his name: from whence he brought the piece of a gilded Sword of Italian workmanship, left there most probably by one of the Cabots. Returning again the next year, he was no more heard of: drowned in the Sea, or slain by the Savages on the Land as was his Brother Michael in the year next following. Neglected after this, till the French having planted in Canada, or Nova Francia, cast an eye upon it; who gave the name of Brest to a Town hereof, (according to the name of a noted Port in Little Bretagne;) but whether they settled any Colony in it, or only did resort unto it in the way of Trading, I am not able to determine.

3. NEW-FOUND-LAND, (Terra Nova, as the Latines call it) is a great Island, lying on the South of Corterialis, from which parted by a Frith, or Strait, called Gulfus del Gajenex. So called from the late discovery of it, when discovered first, though it be some scores of years ago: as Wickham's College in Oxford hath the name of New College, though founded divers years past; because it was the Newsett when that Name was given.

The dimensions of the Country I have no where met with. But for the quality hereof, it is said to be better inhabited in the North-parts, than in the South; though the South the fitter of the two for Habitation. Furnished upon the Sea-coasts with abundance of Cod-fish, as also with Herrings, Salmon, Thornbacks, Smelts, Oysters, and Mussels with Pearls in them. Within the Land a goodly Country, naturally beautified with Rofes, fown with Pease, planted with stately Trees, and otherwise diversified both for pleasure and profit: the Air hereof never very extreme, more temperate in the depth of Winter than with us in England; the Brooks being never so frozen over, that the Ice is able to bear a Dog; and those little Frosts but (I hold) holding three nights together. The people of reasonable Stature, full-eyed, broad-faced, but beardless, their Faces coloured with Oker; their Houses, Poles set round meeting together in the top, and covered over with skins, an Hearth, or Fire-place in the midst: their Boats of Bark, twenty foot long, and four in breadth, not weighing above 100 pounds weight; every of which will carry four men, and is by them carried to all the places of their Removes.

Places of most importance in it, are the several Havens (of which it is conceived to have more and more commodious, than any one Island of the World for the big-ness of it): not beautified with Towns or Buildings, but yielding very safe stations to the greatest Ships. The chief whereof, 1. Renns, or Roigness, on the North of the Promontory called Cape de Raz, the South-east Angle of the Island: of most resort for Fishing, from several Countreys. 2. Portus Formosus, or Rain-Haven, three Miles North of the other; capable of great Ships, and bearing into the main Land above 40 Miles: situate in the Latitude of 40, and 40 minutes. 3. Thorn-Haven, by the Portuguese named Enfada Grande. 4. Trinity Bay, on the North of Cape S. Francis, by the Portuguese called Bahia de la Concepcion: a large Bay, five miles broad in the narrowest place; yet safe wharfe, and of very good Anchorage. 5. Bona Vista, the name of a Port and Promontory. 6. White-Bay, or Bay-Blanch, (as the French call it) safe and capacious, on the North of the Promontory of S. John. Betwixt which and Cape de Raz, on the North-east Angle of the Island, is no Port of Note. Then on the South-side of the Island, and the West of Cape de Raz, is 7. Port Trochiffaz, 8. Port Prefinaz, and 9. Port de Biquier (or the Bijcan Havens) and on the West-side, having doubled the Cape de Ray, in the South-west Angle of the Island, there is 10. S. George's Bay: all of them safe, capacious, and of great resort.

4. Before the Island, at the distance of 25 Leagues from Cape de Ray, lieth a long bank or ridge of Ground, extended in length a hundred Leagues, in breadth 24 Leagues where broadest, in other places but sixteen: and all about it certain Islands, which Cabot by one common name called BACAL AOS, (that name peculiar now unto one alone) from the great multitude of Cod-fish (by the Natives called Bacalaos) which swarmed hereabouts so numerous, that they hindered the passage of his Ships, as before was noted, and lay in such Shoals upon the Coasts, that the Beas caught them with their Claws, and drew them on Land. The Government at that time by Kings, before whom the people in the most formal expressions of Duty and Reverence used to rub their Noses, or stroke their Foreheads: which if the King observed, or accepted of, and meant to grace the party which had so adorned him, he turned his Head to his left Shoulder, as a mark of Favour.

The first Discoverers of this Country (but not known then then to be an Island) were the two Cabots, John and his Son Sebastian, employed herein by Henry the 7. 1497, as before was noted. The business being laid aside at his coming back, was afterwards revived by Thorn and Elton, two of Bristol; who taking a more perfect view of it than was took by the Cabots, ascribed to themselves the Discovery of it, and animated King Henry the 8. unto the Enterprize: which was done Anno 1527, but with ill success. In the mean time the Normans, Portugals, and Brazils of France had reported to it, and changed the names which by the English had been given to the Bays and Promontories. But the English would not so relinquish their Pretensions to the Premier Seclin. And therefore in the year 1583, Sir Humphry Gilbert took possession of it in the name of the Queen of England, interdicted all other Nations the use of Fishing; and intended to have settled there an English Colony. But being wrecked in his return, the fending of the Colony was discontinued till the year 1608, when undertook by John Guy a Merchant of Bristol, who most successfully performed it; the Colony so prospering in a little time, that they had Wheat, Rye, Turnips, Coleworts, of their own sowing, some probability of Metals, a certainty of Sables, Musks, and other precious Commodities, besides their Fishing; though that the great occasion of their settling there, Such plenty is there found of Ling and Cod-fish all about the Coasts, that ordinarily our men take 200 or 300 of them within four hours space, which they convey from hence to all parts of Europe.

OF CANADA.

CANADA is bounded on the North with Corterialis; on the South, with New England; on the East, with the Main Ocean: the Countreys lying on the West either not yet discovered, or not perfectly known. So called from the River Canada, the greatest, not of this Province only, but of all this Peninsula. A River which hath its Fountain in the undiscovered parts of this Northern Tract: sometimes enlarged into great Lakes, and presently reduced to a narrower Channel, with many great Windings and Reaches in it. Having embosomed almost all the rest of the Rivers of this County, it emptieth it self into the Great Bay of St. Laurence, over against the Isle of Assumption, being at the Mouth 40 Leagues in breadth, and 150 Fathom deep.

It is also called Nova Francia, from the French, who following the Tract of Cabot and Corterialis, made a further Discovery of these parts, and planted several Colonies in them. The business first undertaken by Jacques Cartier, Anno 1534, received here gladly by the Natives with Singing, Dancing, and expelling much sign of Joy: pursued by Monsieur Roberval, sent thither in the year 1542, by King Francis the first, not only to discover the Country, but to plant some part of it, who built there a fair Fortrefs for his greater safety; followed therein by divers others of that Nation, in their several times.

The nature of the Soil, and People, we shall best discover in the several parts of it, each differing from one another, and so not easily conformed to a general Character. Look we now only on the principal Rivers of the whole. 1. Canada, of which before. 2. Pontogenet, or Norminiegne, as some call it, of which more hereafter. 3. Quinbeque, falling into the Ocean as the others do. 4. Rio S. John, ending its course in a large Bay called, Bay Francoise interposed betwixt Nova Scotia and the rest of this Country. 5. Les Trois Rivières, which rising far North, and passing through two great Lakes, falleth into the Canada. 6. Saguenay, of the same Original, Course, and Fall. A River of it strong a Current, that it sufficeth not the Sea to flow up its Channel: so deep, that in many places it attaineth to 100 Fathoms; and though but narrow at the mouth, yet groweth it broader and broader upwards, and having received many lesser streams, loseth it self at last, where the other doth.

It containeth in it several Regions. 1. Nova Francia specially so called, 2. Nova Scotia, 3. Norminiegne, and 4. the Iles adjoining.

1. NOVA FRANCIA specially so named is situate on the South of Corterialis, and on the North of the great River of Canada, towards the East; but on both sides of it, in the Western and more In-land parts. The Country is naturally full of Stags, Bears, Hares, Martens and Foxes, whose flesh the people did eat raw, (till more civilized) having first dried it either in the smoke or Sun as they do their fish. They have also flocks of Conies, Fowl and Fish great plenty; one Fish more memorable than the rest, which they call Adoubel, whose Body and Head is like that of a Greyhound. But their greatest Jewels are their Chains of Esjurpie; a Shell-fish of the whitest colour, excellent for the fanching of Wood; which they fashion into Beads and Bracelets, and so wear; or sell them. Not very plentiful of Fruits, or fit for Tillage, yet it breedeth some Corn, or fit for good plenty. The Air more cold then in other Countreys of the River, which being wholly of fresh Water, and so large without all children the Air on both sides of it; partly because of the abundance of Ice, and those hills of Snow which the North-wind passeth over in the way to this Country.

The People, when the French first discovered them, were very rude and barbarous; a few of them furnished with Houses, but removing from one place to another, as their Food decayed; and carrying all their Goods with them (a thing easily done) upon those removes. Such as lived towards the Sea, or the greater Rivers, somewhat better housed. For in the day-time they fish in their Boats, which they draw unto the Land at night, and turning them upside down, sleep under them. As ill apparelled as housed; for they went all naked, except a little piece of skin before their Privities. Some of them had their heads quite shaven, excepting one Bunch of hair on the top top of the Crown, which they suffered to grow: to the length of an Horles Tail, tied up with Leather-strings in a knot. Each man allowed his two or three Wives apiece; and they so constant to their Husband, that they never marry after his death, but keep themselves continually in a mourning habit. A Vizard, as it were, made of Greafe and Coal-dust, which they spread over all their bodies. The women labour more than the men, both in fishing and husbandry; digging the ground instead of ploughing, with certain pieces of wood, where they sow their Maize (a Plant of which they make their Bread in most parts of America.) Idolaters in general before the coming of the French, as they are most of them at this day; the French and others which have planted in these Northern parts having added little more unto Christianity, than by the Colonies they brought with them. Yet in the midst of this darkness they law for much light, as to believe that when they dyed they went immediately to the Stars; from thence conveyed to certain green and pleasant fields, full of flowers and fruits. Plain Evidence that they believed the Immortality of the Soul; and that there was some place appointed for reception of it.

The chief Towns of it at that time, 1. Hochelaga, round in figure, compassed about with three Course of timber Ramparts, one within the others (tharp at the top, about two Rods high, with one Gate only to give entrance, and that well fortified in their kind with Piles and Bars. It had in it 50 great houses, in the midst of every one a Court, and in the middle of that Court a place which they made their fire on. Situate far within the Land, about six or seven Leagues from the banks of the River Canada, in the most pleasant part of the Country; and therefore made the seat of their King, whom they highly revered and carried him on their shoulders sitting on a Carpet of skins. 2. Stadacon, or Stadacone, which the French call Croix, on the course of the same River also; this last a Colony of the French. 4. Tadoussac, a safe but small Haven, not capable of above 20 ships, at the mouth of Saguenay. 5. France-Roy, a Castle built by Monsieur Roberval, when he came first into this Country. 6. S. Lawrence, designed for a French Colony by Monsieur de Champlain, Anno 1611, but never came to great effect: yet so much Champlain got by the undertaking, that he left his name to a great Lake of this Country (full of little Islands) in the Lands of the Unigenis, inhabiting on the South of the River Canada, into which it emptieth it self at the last.

2. NOVA SCOTIA, containeth that part of the Countreys of Canada, or Nova Francia, which the French call Acadie, or Cadie, (being a Peninsula or Demy-Island) with so much of the mainland as lieth between the River Canada, and the large Bay called Bay-Francoise, from the River of S. Croix upon the West, to the Isle of Assumption on the East. So called by King James, in the Grant of these Countreys to Sir William Alexander, after Lord Secretary of Scotland, and by King Charles, for his approved fidelity, most deservedly created Earl of Sterling. The Letters-Patents of which Donation bear date Anno 1621. What time the French having been out of their holds here by Sir Sam. Argal, Governour of Virginia, had abandoned the South-parts of Canada, and betook themselves more into the North, and the higher parts of the Course of that River. And in pursuance of this Grant, the said Sir William Alexander in the year 1622, sent a Colony thither: and having procured a New Map to be made of the Country, caused the Peninsula, lying on this side of the Bay Francoise, to be called Nova Caledonia, that on the North thereof, to be called Nova Alexandria, giving new names also unto most of the Ports and Promontories. For the better accomplishment of which business, he obtained also a Patent for advancing a certain number of persons to the hereditary dignity of Baronets, or Knights of Nova Scotia, as we call them commonly, distinguished from others by a Ribon of Orange Tawny, the money raised upon which Patent was to be wholly employed towards this Plantation. But being unable with those helps (as certainly Plantations are of too great burthen for a private person) or willing to employ his money to more profit, he held Port-Royal to the French, and after discontinued his endeavours in it.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Port-Royal, in Acadie or Nova Caledonia, on the Bay-Francoise; once made a Colony of the French, by Monsieur de Montm. An. 1604, continued with much difficulty till the year 1613, when destroyed by Sir Sam. Argal, then Governour of the English Plantations in Virginia, by reason that the Jesuits, whose neighbourhood he liked not of, had begun to melt there. Sold since again unto the French, as before is said, by whom till possessed. 2. S. Luke, Bay, by the French called Port au Monton. 3. Gaspé, a noted Port in New-Alexandria, opposite to the Isle of Assumption. 4. Cadapepe, on a fair Bay in the same Coast also.

3. NORUMBEGA hath on the North-East Nova Scotia; on the South-West, Virginia. The air is of a good temper, the soil fruitful, and the people indifferently civil; all of them, as well men as women, painting their faces. The men are much addicted to hunting, and therefore never give their daughters to any, unless he be well skill'd in that game also. The Women are here very chaste, and so well love their husbands, that if at any time they chance to be slain, the widows will neither marry, nor eat flesh, till the death of their husbands be revenged. They both dance naked, and for more mirth, sometimes stark naked. The Sea upon the Coasts so shallow and full of Sands, that it is very ill sailing all along these shores. The Towns or habitations rather, so differently called by the French, Portugals, and Spaniards, that there is not much certainty known of them. Yet most have formerly agreed upon Norminiegne, or Arnpsee, as the Natives call it; said to be a large, populous and well-built Town, and to be situate on a fair and capacious River of the same name also. But later observations tell us there is no such matter; that the River which the first Relations did intend is called Pempenet, neither large nor pleasant; and that the place by them meant is called Aggenet, so far from being a fair City, that there are only a few Sheds or Cabins, covered with the barks of Trees or the Skins of Beasts. Howsoever I have let it stand on the nil reports, it being possible enough that Town might fall into decay, deserted on the coming of so many several Pretenders, and that the Sheds or Cabins which the last men speak of may be only the remainders of it.

4. Adjoining to these Countreys of Canada, are several Islands not joined in any common name, but yet deriving some consideration in this place and time. The principal whereof, 1. NATISCOTEC, called the Isle of Assumption, situate in the very mouth of the River, was first discovered by Jacques Cartier, Anno 1534, in length 35 leagues, seven or eight in breadth. The Island very plain and level, of a fruitful Soil, beautified with Trees of several sorts, replenished with great plenty both of Fowl and Fish, and furnished with convenient Roads, though with no good Havens. Not hitherto inhabited, for ought I can find. 2. RAMEA, aerie of little Islands in the great Gulf of S. Lawrence on the South of Natiscote, first found out or frequented by the Citizens of S. Malo in Bretagne, Anno 1590, of great resort for the Morse-fishing, used upon the Coasts, which is here so gainful, that a French Bark in a very little time killed 1500 of them. These Morses (take this by the way are a kind of Sea-Horfe, or Sea Oxen ; with two Teeth of a foot long growing downwards out of the upper Jaw, fold dearer then Ivory, becaufe esteemed a fovereign Antidote againft poifons. They have alfo four Feet, no Ears, the Horns about half an ell in length ; the skin, when drefsed, twice as thick as that of a Bull ; their flefh, when young, as fweet and tender as Veal. So far and undoubt, that with the bellies of five of them, there is made ufual an Hogs-Head of Trainoil, as good as that of the Whale.

3. BRITON, a fmall Ifland on the South of the Ramee, about two leagues in length, and as many in breadth, of a rich foil, fat paffure, well fhaded with tall and lofty Trees ; and neighbored by a fmall Ifland called Ifle Blanche, of the like fertility.

4. BRITON, (Infula Britonum) fo named from Jacques Briton a French-man, in the time of Francis the firft, called alfo the Ifland of S. Lawrence, is fituate on the South-Eaft of the Ifle of Brian : in form triangular, in compafs about 80 leagues ; pleafant and fruitful, though for the moft part fwelt'd with Hills. Delitute of Rivers, but interlaced with great Arms of the Sea, well ftored with fifh ; and in the midit thereof a great Lake full of little Iflands : the Woods replenifhed with plenty of Deer, black Foxes, and a Bird called Penguin. Inhabited by the Natives only, though the Portugals did fometimes endeavour a Plantation in it ; but finding the air too cold for them, they again deferted it. The chief Haven is by the Engliff called Newport ; by the French Port aux Anglois, from the great refort of the Engliff to it, in regard of their fifhing.

5. ISLE DE SABEL, by the French fo called from the Sands which alfo high about it ; diftant from the Briton Ifle about 30 leagues to the South ; 15 leagues in compafs, but more long then broad, and of a fafe landing. The planting of it, in regard of the fafety of the place, attempted twice by the French and once by the Portugals ; but without fuccefs. 6. Others of lefs note, as Mongo, and Les Ifles des Oufans, I pafs over purpofely, there being nothing, nor but little, to be fpo- ken of them.

So it appears by this account, that though the French have given the name of Nova Francia, to all thefe Coun- treys ; yet they never had the honour of the firft difcovery, wherein the Engliff and Portugals had precedence of them : nor are poffeffed of any confiderable part thereof, the Scots putting in for a large fhare ; the Engliff Mafters of the beft Ports, and all the Iflands of the Coun- try in the hands of the Savages. Of thefe fome great and powerful Nations over-fove the reft. The chief whereof are the Troquois on the North-Eaft of Nor-umbega, neighbored by the Ochataquies, the Algon- quins, and the Nebicviers, the Sauriquis, and Etchimis of Acadia, and New Alexandria ; the Montagues, and the Antagvians, on the banks of the Canada. All of them ftout and hardy people, falfe of their words, treacherous in their practices, and mercilefs in their re- venges. So well acquainted with the Factions and di- vifions of Europe, that they know how to make ufe one Nation againft another ; and by that means to keep them- felves in their firft eftate, without being fubject to any. So that the footing which the Engliff, French, or Scots have obtained amongst them, ferves rather to fecure themfelves in the way of their Trading then to entitle them unto any poffeffion and command in the Country : the French being fhut up in a few weak Forts on the North of the Canada, the Scots pretending only to a Bay or two in the South of Acadia ; and the Engliff being only Tenants at the will of the Natives, for fuch convenience of fifhing as they have in the adjoining Iflands.

OF VIRGINIA.

VIRGINIA hath on the North Canada ; on the South, Florida ; on the Eaft, Mare del Noort ; the Western boundaries not known, or not well difcovered. So called in honour of Queen Elizabeth, that Virgin Monarch ; when difcovered (to any purpofe) by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1584. By the natural Inhabitants called Apalchen, from a Town of that name, one of the chief in all the Coun- try.

The Inland parts herof are mountainous and barren, full of thick Woods, a Receptacle for wild Beasts, and wilder Savages. Towards the Sea more plain and fruitful, as will appear by the Survey of its feveral Pro- vinces ; premiffing firft, that Virginia in the full latitude thereof extendeth from the 34 degree, where it joys with Florida, unto the 44, where it quartereth on Norumbega.

The firft Difcovery herof by the two Cabots, Father and Son, Anno 1497, did firft entitle the Crown of England to this Country. The Defign after fecoded by Mr. Haro, bringing thence certain of the petty Kings or Princes herof, who did Homage to King Henry the 8. then fitting in his Royal Throne in the Palace of Wefminfter ; but no thing farther done in purfuance of it. And though John Verazzani a noble Florentine, at the encouragement and charge of King Francis the firft, Anno 1524, difcovered more of the Country then Cabot did ; yet the French too much in love with the pleasures of France, or intangled in Civil wars amongst themfelves, looked no farther after it : Infomuch that the Country lying thus neglected, was re-difcovered, by the charges and direction of Sir Walter Raleigh, then Captain of the Guard, and in great power and favour with Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1584, who fending Mafter Philip Amadas, and Mafter Barlow upon this employment, did by them take poffeffion of it in Queen Elizabeth's names in honour of whom he caufed it to be called Virginia. The next year he fent thither a Colony, under the conduct of the noble Sir Richard Green- ville, who not fupplied with neceffaries for their fubfif- tence, returned home again. In the year 1587, a fecond Colony being undertaken only on a private Purfe, not owned as the Interest of the State, or of pub- lick mention, till the year 1606. In the mean time the North parts of this Country being more perfidly difco- vered by Captain Bartholomew Gifbold, Anno 1602. and the

the middle parts being taken up by the Hollanders not long after, that is to fay, in the year 1609. the whole became divided into thefe three parts : 1. New England, 2. Nor-umbega, 3. Virginia, ftrictly and fpecially fo called. To which the Ifles of the Bermudaz fhall come in for a fourth.

NEW ENGLAND hath on the North-Eaft Norumbega, and on the South-Weft, Norumbega. So called by the Adventurers by whom firft planted, not fo much becaufe oppofite to Nova Albion, as fome men con- ceive, as an intimation of the like adjuncts of diftinction given by the French and Spaniards to Nova Francia, Nova Hispania, Nova Galicia, Nova Granada, and the like.

The Country fituate in the middle of the Temperate Zone, betwixt the degrees of 41 and 44, equally diftant from the Arctick Circle and the Tropick of Cancer ; by confequence, naturally of the fame degree of heat with France or Italy. But by reason of the thick mists which arife from the Seas adjoining, thofe heats fo moderated, that the Air is found to be exceedingly agreeable to an Engliff body. The Soil not only fruitful of fuch Com- modities as grow there naturally, but alfo of all forts of Grain which were brought from England. Great ftore of Woods and Trees, both for fruit and building ; plenty of Deer within the Woods, of Sale and Filh upon the Shores ; and as for Turkeys, Partridges, Swans, Geese, Cranes, Ducks, Pigeons, fuch a full variety, as ferves not only for neceffity, but for Pride and Luxury. The Commodities of moft note for maintaining of Traffick, rich Furs, and many forts of Filh, fome Amber, Flax, Linnen, Iron, Pitch, Malts, Cables, Timber fit for Ship- ping : in a word, whatever comes to England by the way of the Sound, might at better rates, and with far lefs trouble be fupplied from hence ; at leaft if we be- lieve the Relations of it, publifhed in the year 1622.

The people for the moft part well enough difpofed, if not roughly handled ; hofpitale and more civil than the reft of their Neighbours. So tractable and docile in mat- ters of Religion, that liking well the Rites and Ceremo- nies of the Engliff, at their firft fettling there, Anno 1608, they would ufe to fay, that King James was a good King, and his God a good God, but their Tanto naught. Which Tanto was an evil Spirit, which did haunt and trouble them every Moon, and therefore they worffhipped him for fear. Which notwithstanding, I find not any great in- creafe of Chriftianity among the Natives : our Engliff Undertakers thinking it fufficient, if they and their families fore the Lord, without caring what became of the Souls of the wretched people, which hitherto have fate in dark- nefs and the fhadow of death, notwithstanding thofe New- Lights which have fhined amongst them. And as for thofe New-comers which have planted there, all Engliff, though fome immediately out of Holland I cannot better tell you of what train they were, than in the words of John de Laet, Nova Orbis lib. 3. cap. 8, where he obferveth, Primum bofe Colonos, mi & illos qui poftea accesserunt, primum aut omnia Jaffe ex eorum hominum Sedes, quas in Angli Brownifms & Puritanifms vocant, quales non pauci & in Belgium fuperftruitus annis fe repperunt, & hinc ad focios funt profecti. They were (faith he) either for the moft part, or altogether, of that Sect which in England are called Brownift or Puritan : many of which had formerly betaken themfelves to Holland, but afterwards went thence to joy with their Brethren in New-England.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1. Tamofet, where our men found Oysters of nine Inches long. 2. Nafick, a River of the Tarentines, one of the chief Nations of this Tract. 3. Sagadahoc, of moft note and defervedly too, a mild and flat broad at the mouth or influx, and fo upwards for the fpace of a days journey, where it maketh a large Lake three days journey broad, with fix Iflands in it ; boundeth with two large Channels, the one from the North-Eaft, the other from the North-Weft, each of them rifing from a Lake ; the leaft of which being of lefs note, 4. Apanawepick, 5. Kaniffick, 6. Albam- baga, &c.

The Country on the Sea-fide full of notable Havens, populous, and very well inhabited, infomuch as Captain Smith reckoned in the fpace of 70, 500 or 1000 fall ; moft of them fheltered from the fury of Winds and Sea, by the interpofition of fome Iflands, of which about 200 lie upon that Coast. In the fpace of 70 miles he reckoneth 40 Villages of the Barbarous people, the chief of which are, 1. Maccadaet, 2. Segodet, 3. Ponmaguif, 4. Nifconet, 5. Kennebeque, &c. all being called by the name of fome Brook or water, upon which they were fited. Since called by the Engliff, 1. S. George's Fort, the firft Plantation of the Engliff, built by them at the mouth of the River Sagadahoc, in a Demi-Ifland, Anno 1607. 2. New-Plimouth, feated in a large and capacious Bay at the firft building (Anno 1620.) confifting of nineteen families only, but in fhort time improved to an handfome Town : which as it was the firft Town, fo it was the firft Church which was fetled there, modelled according to the form of Mr. Robinfon's Church in Holland, (that notorious Separatifts) ; and after made a pattern to the reft of thefe Churches : each abfolute and independent in it felf, with- out fubordination unto any fuperior. For my part, I be- hold the Epifcopy as the Primitive Government of the Church of Chrift. But if there were no other Pretenders to that Presbytery and Independency, I fhould as foon look for the Scepter and Throne of Chrift (as they please to phrase it) in the Concordation of New-England, as in the Presbytery of Geneva, or the Kirk of Scotland. 3. Bryfton, upon the Seafide alfo, but more North than Plimouth, 4. Brownifick, fo called with reference to a noted Sea-town of that name in Devoynshire as is Bayton, with like reference to that name in Lincolnfhire, 6. Quintipack, on the Bay of Maffachufetts ; a Town of an old name, but a new Plantation.

This part of Virginia, firft difcovered by Captain Gifbold, Anno 1602. and the next year more perfectly furveyed by fome of Britiff, was by King James Anno 1606, granted unto a certain Corporation of Knights, Gentlemen, and Merchants, to be planted and difpofed of for the Publick : Sir John Popham, then Chief Juftice of the Common Pleas, being one of the chief alfo in that Commiffion. By his encouragement, and principally at his Charge, a Colony was fent thither, Anno 1607, under the Prefidency of Captain George Popham, and Raleigh Gilbert, who built the Fortrefs of S. George at the mouth of Sagadahoc. But the Piccadilly dying the next year, and not long after him the Chief Juftice alfo, the Colony, difpairing of good fuccefs returned home again. Succedingly again attended Anno 1614. the Undertakers were refolved to make farther trial of their fortune ; and in the year 1620, fent out eight Ships more : but it never fetled into form till the year 1610, when by the building of New-Plimouth, and fome encouragements fent thence to bring others on, it grew in very fhort time to fo wight a growth, that no Plantation for the time ever went beyond it. The growth of Old Rome and New-England had the like foundation ; both Sanctuaries, Ad que turba omnis ex finitimis gentibus novarum rerum cupida confluit, as Livy telleth us of the one ; referred to by fuch of the neighbouring Nations as longed for Innovations in Church and State.

2. NOVUM BELGIUM, or NIEU- NEDER-

DERLANT, hath on the North-east New-England's on the South-west, Virginia specially called. So named from the Netherlanders, who began their Plantation in it Anno 1614. the Country being then void: and consequently open to the next Pretender, according to that Maxime in the Civil Laws, Quia nullius in bonis, dantur occupanti. And yet they had some better title than a bare Invention, having bought Hudfon's Charts and Maps, and otherwise contended him for the charge and pains of his Discovery, An. 1609, of which more anon.

This part of the Country extended from the 38. degree and an half, to the 41. 15. of a good temperature both of Air and Soil: fruitful of those things which the Earth brought forth of its own accord: abundance of wild Grapes, Nuts, and Trees of great height and bulk for shipping; plenty of Herbage, store of Plants, the effects of nature: and where the people did their part, such increase of Mizee (a plant of which they make their Bread) as shewed their care and industry to be well bestowed. Since the planting of the Hollanders there, abundantly well furnished (within their command) with Wheat and other sorts of Grains as also with Flax, Hemp, and such other Commodities as were brought hither out of Europe. The Woods replenished with Deer, and the Plains with Fowls: the Rivers not inferior to any in Sturgeon, Salmons, and other the best sort of Fish which can swim in the water.

The people, though divided into many Nations, and of different Languages, are much of the same disposition with the other Savages: clad in Beasts-skins, for the most part without certain dwellings: dwelling together many Families of them under one poor roof, made of Poles meeting at the top, and covered with the bark of Trees. Their Household-stuff a Broom-Pipe, a wooden dish, and an Hatchet made of a broad flint: & their weapons, Bow and Arrows, but their Arrows made or headed with the bones of Fishes, their Religion Idolatry, or worse: their chief God the Devil, whom they worship under the name of Monette; but with less Pomp and Ceremony than is used in Africa. Of manners, fearful and suspicious (not without cause) wonderfully greedy of revenge; but if well used, tractable and obedient unto their Superiors: fickle, but very faithful unto those who trust them; conceived to be inclinable to the Christian Faith, if they had fallen into the hands and command of those who had studied Godliness more than Gain.

Rivers of note they have not many. That want is supplied by many large and capacious Bays, all along the Coast. The principal of those that be, 1. Mahabets, by some called Nassauins, but by the Dutch commonly Norfolk Rivers, which falleth into the Sea at May-point, so called by Cornelius Mry, the Master of a Ship of Holland, at their first Plantation: another Channel of it, which from the noise thereof they call Hell-gate, emptying it self against an Island called the Isle of Natur. The River about 15 or 16 fathom deep, at the mouth thereof affordeth a safe Road for shipping, but of difficult entrance. 2. Zuid River, so called, because more Southerly than the others; as fair as that, but hitherto not so well discovered.

Towns here have few either of the old or new Plantations. The natural Inhabitants live together in Tribes, many Families of those Tribes under one Roof, as before was said: but those Families far remote from one another, that their Habitations are not capable of the name of a Town, and hardly of a scattered Village. Nor do I find, that either the Hollanders or the English (who now divide the whole among them) are much given to building: the Title of the Dutch being subject unto some disputes; and the Possession of the English not confirmed and settled. Hudfon an English-man had spent some time in the Discovery of this Country, and given him name to one of the Rivers of it. With him the Hollanders, Anno 1609, as before is said, compounded for his Charts and Maps, and whatsoever he could challenge in the right and success of that his Voyage. But they were hardly won in their new Habitations, when Sir Samuel Argal, Governour of Virginia specially called, (having dispossessed the French of that part of Canada now called New Scotia, Anno 1613.) disputed the possession with them; alleging that Hudfon, under whose sale they claimed that Country, being an English-man, and licensed to discover those Northern parts by the King of England, could not alienate or dismember it (being but a part, or Province of Virginia) from the Crown thereof. Hereupon the Dutch Governour submits himself and his Plantation to his Majesty of England, and the Governour of Virginia for and under him. But a new Governour being sent from Amsterdam in the year next following, not only failed in paying the conditioned Tributes, but began to fortifie himself, and entitle those of Amsterdam to a part of the propriety. To which end he gave unto the Country the name of New-Netherland, conferred new Names on all the Bays and Rivers of it, and possessed himself of a little Island near that Branch of the Noordt River which themselves called Hell-gat: where he laid the foundation of a Town, called New-Amsterdam; and built a Fortris by the name of Orange Fort, which he garisoned, and planted with five pieces of Canon. Complaint whereof being made unto King Charles, and by him represented to the States of Holland: it was declared by the said States in a publick Instrument, that they were no ways interested in it, but that it was a private undertaking of the West-Indian Company of Amsterdam; and so referred it wholly to his Majesty's pleasure. Which being declared, a Commission was forthwith granted to Sir George Calvert, Lord Baltimore, to plant the Southern parts thereof, which he next Virginia, by the name of MART-LAND: the like not long after to Sir Edmond Pleydon, for planting and possessing the more Northern parts, which lie towards New-England, by the name of New Allion. And though the Hollanders did then seem willing to be gone, and leave all they had there for the Sum of 2500 l. yet taking advantage of the Troubles which not long after followed in England, they have not only raised their demands to a greater height, but furnished the Native Indians with Arms, and taught them how to use their Weapons. A most mischievous and wicked Act, as not only tending to the damage and discouragement of the present Adventurers, but even unto the extirpation of all Christians out of all these Countreys. But the best is, they were the first that sinned by it. The Savages, thus armed and trained, fell foul upon them, destroying their Farm-Houses, and forcing them to betake themselves to their Forts and Fastnesses. What hath been since done, (for the giving of new names to some of the old places, I look on as a thing of nothing) either in getting out the Dutch, or planting Colonies of the English, I can hardly say: but I fear that little will be acted, or to little purpose, till it be made a work of more publick interest.

3. VIRGINIA, specially so called, hath on the North-East, Nieu-Nederland; on the South-west, Florida: the name restrained to this part only, since the two last Plantations, which before was common to the whole. The Country lieth extended from the 34. to the 38. degree of Northern Latitude: and by consequence the Air is inclined unto heats, if not refreshed and moderated by a constant gale of Eastern winds, which they call the Breeze, and the blasts driving on it from the open Seas. Diversified most pleasantly into Hills and Valleys; the Mountains clothed with woods, and the Fields with fruits. The Soil so fruitful, that an Acre of Land well ordered will return return 200 Bushels, or 25 Quarters of Corn. Said also to be rich in Veins of Allom; as also Pitch, Turpentine, store of Cedars, Grapes, Oyl, plenty of sweet Gums; several sorts of Plants for the Dyers use; some Mines of Iron and Copper; of Timber Trees almost infinite numbers; as also great abundance of Cattle, Fish, Fowl, Fruit, and of Maize no scarcity. Some Crystall is found amongst the Mountains, on the those more Pearls. Nothing deficient either in the Soil, or Air, for the encouragement and reward of a thriving Nation.

The people are but few in number for so large a Country, and those as divided in size as in speech or manners. Some of them, whom they call Sagoyes-humoi, of so vast a greatness, that in comparison of the English they seemed as Giants: clad with the Skins of Bears and Wolves in so strange a manner, that the head of the Beast hung before their Breasts instead of a Jewel: their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and a Club. Some on the other side, whom they call Weygonimoi, of so low a stature, that in relation to the other they appear as Pigmies. But generally they are all of tall stature, well limbed, for the most part without Beards, and the one half of the head kept shaven, clothed in loose Mantles made of the Skins of Deer, with an Apron of the same to hide their nakedness; the rest of their Bodies painted over with figures of Serpents, or of some other Creature of as horrid shape. Strong and accustomed to the cold, which they patiently endure, or feel not: wavering and inconstant, crafty, and somewhat more industrious than the rest of the Savages; but given to anger, and as greedy of revenge as any. Gods they have many, for they worship all things (and them only) which are like to hurt them: as Fire, Water, Lightning, Thunder, &c. So that it may be said of them, as once Lucianus said of the Ancient Romans, (did not the ignorance of these poor Wretches render them excusable, and make them fitter Objects for our Prayers and Pity, than our Lords) Dignissimi homines qui Deos suos semper habere presentes. One Devil-God above all the rest, (they call him Ok) whom they worship, as themselves confess, more for fear than love. Nor yet converted from these horrible and gross Idolatries by the long Neighbourhood of the English; accused in that respect most justly by those of Rome.

No Country, for the bigness of it, can be better watered, or yield fairer Rivers. The principal of which are 1. Powhatan, (so called by the name of the petit Royelet, whose Territory it passeth through) which having run a course of a hundred miles, and navigable all that way by smaller Vessels, is at his fall into the Sea about three miles broad. 2. Apamattuck, 3. Nampanomok, and 4. Chickahominy: all Tributaries to Powhatan. 5. Pamunkey, fourteen miles more North than Powhatan, but of lesser note. 6. Topotomock, navigable 130 miles. 7. Patawomek, passable by Boat 140 miles, and six or seven miles broad where it falleth into the Sea; is increased by many lesser streams which come out of the Mountains, and generally well filled with Fish. 8. Potomacum, of a shorter Race, but a deeper Channel, than most of the former; 16 or 18 fathom deep; and of more choice of Fish than the others are.

Along the Banks of these Rivers dwell their several Tribes, scarce any of which make up an hundred men, (that of Patawomek excepted, which is able to arm after their manner 160.) many not yielding above 50, and some not so many. Their habitations, not consisting above ten or twelve houses apiece, but in those houses sundry particular families, are for the most part covered with the Barks of Trees: so placed, that the common Market-place standeth in the midst, at an equal distance: the houses of their Worshippers, (or the Chiefs of their Tribes) and that which serveth them for a Temple, being somewhat finer than the rest. And of these habitations, some are preferred to us by the names of 1. Oaumke, by the English called the Blind Town, 2. Powoke, 3. Slycock, said by my Authors to be Civitas Amplia, a large City; but we must understand him with Relation to the rest of this Country. 4. Chomamuck, 5. Secatun, 6. Mattunke, 7. Weygonimok, 8. Pyghohumok, said to be inhabited by none but Wom-men, 9. Chopano, 10. Mescommunge, both upon the Sea: most of them called by the name of those several Tribes which inhabit in them.

In reference to the English, and their Plantations, we are to know that they made choice of the South-side of a large and goodly Bay for the place of their dwelling. A Bay which thrusting it self a great way up into this Country, and receiving into it many of the Rivers before-mentioned, is by the Natives called Chesapeake, and yieldeth the only safe entrance into this part of the Country: the Capes thereof for that cause fortified by the English; that on the Southern point being called Cape Henry, and the other Cape Charles, according to the names of the two young Princes. Towns of most note, which have been either since built, or frequented by them: 1. James-Town, (Jenepolis) so named in honour of King James, on the South-side of that Bay, not far from the River Chickahominy: first founded in the year 1606, at what time it was treacherously burnt, and some Ordinance planted on the Works. 2. Henric Town, (Henricopolis) so named in honour of Prince Henry, the Elderly Son of King James, built in a convenient place more within the Land, 12 miles from James-Town, 3. Doris-city, so called, because built and planted at the charge of Sir Thomas Dale, An. 1610, 4. Bermudas, an open Burrough five miles from Henricopolis, 5. Kentington, a noted and frequented Port in the Bay of Chesapeake, very much traded by the English. 6. Wicomico, the chief Town of Powhatan, one of the Royalests of this Country; much courted by the English at their first settling here, and a long time after: a Crown being sent him by King James, with many other rich Presents, the better to sweeten and oblige him; but for all that he proved a treacherous and unfaithful Neighbour.

The sum of the affairs of this last Plantation is, that the business being returned in the year 1606, and a Commission granted to certain Noblemen and Merchants to advance the works they fell in hand by the Council and encouragement of Captain Smith, with the building of James-Town, (having first fortified Cape Henry) in which Town he fixed a Colony of 100 men. These, being almost consumed by Famine, and other miseries, were the next year recruited with 120 more, brought by Captain Newport: but a Fire having casually consumed their Houses, once again discouraged them. But the Houses being re-edified, and a Church added to the Houses, by the industry of Smith their Governour, the Colony began to flourish, and to increase in reputation among the Savages: especially having made (as they believed) a friend of Powhatan. In the year 1609, the Lord De la Ware was appointed Governour, and Smith commanded to return, who left here 450 persons, (and of them 200 expert Soldiers) 3 Ships, 7 Boats, 24 great Guns, 300 Muskets, with Victuals and Ammunition necessary; and 59 of their Worshippers, or Petit-Kings, Tributaries and Contributors to the Town. Sir Thomas Gater, and Sir George Sommers first thither with 9 Ships, and 500 men, lost a great part of their numbers in the Isle of Bermudas, the rest, not well according with the old Plantation, were at the point of returning home, when happily the Lord De la Ware arrived with three Ships more, An. 1610. But falling into a desperate sickness, and come home to Eng- land, he recommended the estate of the English there to Sir Thomas Dale, who furnished them with Men, Cattle, and other necessities: after whom came Sir Thomas Gater with 300 men, and some Heads of Cattle. And then the Government hereof being conferred on Hony Earl of Southampton, the Affairs here began to settle in a prosperous way: when unexpectedly in the year 1621, the Savages falling on them (fearing no such treachery) killed 340 of their men; and had then also surprized Jamestown, if one of the Savages who had received the Christian Faith, had not discovered their intention. Since that, recovered of that Blow, it went happily forwards, and might by this time have been raised to some power and greatness, if the English by diverting on some by-Plantations, and by employing indigent and neccitious persons in so great a work, had not discouraged the design. For certainly one might say of this Plantation, as the Scripture doth of the Camp of David in the time of Saul, that few folk or none were sent unto it (except the Principals, but such as were in distress for debt, or some way or other discontented; men never likely to advance and pursue a business of such publick Interest. Commendable howsoever in this particular, (though perhaps that commendation do belong to their Governors) that being here, they kept themselves constantly to those Forms of Worship which were established and observed in the Church of England.

As for the Natives of the whole, they were divided (as was said) into several Tribes, every Tribe under the Command of their several Chiefs: which Chiefs, though many in number, and of little Power, knew well enough how to keep their State under their Subjects, and to shew it also unto Strangers. For when Pemberton was pleased to give Audience unto Captain Newport, and the rest of the English sent from Smith, they found him upon a Bed of Mats, his Pillow of Leather, imbroided with white Beads and Pearl, attired with a Robe of Skins like an Irish Mantle: at his head and feet an handsome young woman; on each side of the Room twenty others, with their necks and shoulders painted red, and about their necks a great Chain of Beads: his principal men sitting before them in like manner. Yet notwithstanding this great state, (and great it was indeed for such petty Princes) he and the rest became so subject to the English, that in Smith's time they did not only pay their Tributes, or Contributions, but at his Command would send their Slaves and Subjects to Jamestown, to receive Correction for wrongs done to the Colony. And it is probable enough, that those of New-England, being the greater and more powerful Plantation, (as followed with the stronger real, and carried on by the United Purposes of a prevalent Faction) were of like influence also among the Natives, though I find it not prefixed to in many particulars.

4. The Isles of BERMUDAZ, many in number, (some five 400 at the least) are situate directly East from Virginia, from which they are distant 500 English miles; 3300 of the same miles from the City of London. So called from John Bermudez, a Spaniard, by whom first discovered. Called also the Sinners Islands, from the Shipwreck of Sir George Summers upon that Coast; so much delighted with the fadnets of the misadventure, that he endeavoured what he could to settle a Plantation in it.

That of more fame and greatness than all the rest, to which the name is now most properly ascribed, is situate in the Latitude of 32 and 30 minutes. Well stored, when first discovered, with plenty of Hogs, divers Fruits, Mulberries, Palmettes, Cedars; as also of Silks-worms, Pearls and Amber, and such rich Commodities: of Fowl so infinite an abundance, that our men took a thousand of one sort, as big as a Pigeon, within two or three hours. The Air hereof very found and healthy, found by experience (the best argument in such a point) to be agreeable to the body of an English-man; yet terribly expofed to Tempests of Rain, Thunder and Lightning. For which, and for the many shipwrecks happening on the Coasts thereof, and want of other Inhabitants to be said to own it, the Mariners have pleased to call it the Island of Devils. The Soil affirmed to be as fertile as any; well watered, plentiful in Maize, of which they have two Harvests yearly: that which is sowed in March being cut in July; and that which is sowed in August being mowed in December. No venomous Creature to be found in all the Island, or will live brought thither. And besides these Commodities, of so late a being, so known about Rocks and Illets, that without knowledge of the passages, a Boat of ten Tuns cannot be brought into the Haven; yet with such knowledge there is entrance for the greatest ships. The English have since added to these firebrands of Nature such additional helps, by Block-houses, Forts and Bulwarks in convenient places, as may give it the title of Impregnable.

It was first discovered (but rather accidentally than upon design) by John Bermudez, a Spaniard, about the year 1522, and thereupon a Proposition made in the Council of Spain, for settling a Plantation in it, as a place not to be avoided by the Spanish Fleets, in their return from the Bay of Mexico, by the Strait of Bahama. Neglected notwithstanding, till the like accidental coming of Sir George Summers, sent to Virginia with some Companies of English by the Lord De La Ware, An. 1609. Who being shipwrecked on this Coast, had the opportunity to survey the Island; which he so well liked, that he endeavoured a Plantation in it at his coming home, Anno 1612. The first Colony was sent over under Richard Moore, who in three years erected eight or nine Forts in convenient places, which he planted with Ordnance, Anno 1616. A new supply is sent over under Captain Daniel Tucker, who applied themselves to sowing, Cutting of Trees brought thither from other parts of America, and planting that gainful Weed Tobacco, Anno 1619. the business is taken more to heart, and made a matter of the Publick, many great Lords and men of Honour being interested in it; Captain Butler sent thither with 500 men, the Isle divided into Tribes or Canneds, to each Tribe a Barrago; the whole reduced to a settled Government both in Church and State, according to the Law of England. After this, all things so succeeded, that in the year 1623, here were said to be three thousand English, ten Forts, and in those Forts fifty pieces of Ordnance, their numbers since increasing daily, both by Children born within the Island, and supplies from England.

FLORIDA.

F L O R I D A is bounded on the North-East with Virginia; on the East with Mare del Nord; on the South, and some part of the West, with the Gulf of Mexico; on the rest of the West, with part of New Galicia, and some Countries hitherto not discovered. Extended from the River of Palma in the 25 degree of Latitude, to Rio de Seco in the 34, which evidently speaketh it for a Country of large Dimensions.

It was first discovered by the English under the Conduct of Sebastian Cabot, Anno 1479. afterwards better searched into by John de Ponce, a Spaniard, who took possession of it in the name of that King, Anno 1527. and by him called Florida: either because he landed there upon Palm-Sunday, which the Spaniards called Pascua de Flores, or Pascua Florida; or else quia Florida erat Regio, by reason of that fresh Vendure and flourishing Estate in which he found it. But by the Natives it is said to be called Jaguala.

This Country lying parallel to Castile in Spain, is said to be of the same temper both for Air and Soil, but that is abundantly more fruitful: the heart of the ground not being here worn out by continual Tillage, as perhaps it may be in the other. For here they have great abundance of Maize, (the natural Bread-corn of the Country; which they sow twice a year: viz. March and June, and reap in the third Month after, laying it in some publick Barns, and thence distribute it to the Necessities of particular persons. Well stored with several sorts of Fruit, as Mulberries, Cherries, Chestnuts, Grapes and Plums, of both excellent taste and colour: Beasts wild and tame, of all kinds which these Countries yield; and of like sorts of Fowl. The Woods and Forests full of the largest Oaks, and the loftiest Cedars; some Cypress Trees, and Bays, of a large proportion: with great plenty of that Wood, which the Inhabitants call Paume, and the French name Salsifius, the Bark whereof is Medicinal against some Diseases; and another Tree which we call Espinie, affirmed to be a Sovereign and present Remedy for the French Disease. It is also said to be enriched with some Mines of Gold and Silver; neglected by the Natives, till the coming of the Spaniards and French put a price upon them; and to have in it Emeralds of great worth and beauty, with many Turquoises and Pearls. Others report, that all the Gold and Silver which they have amongst them came from some Ships which had been wrecked upon those Coasts: contrary whereunto it is said by the Natives, that in the Hills which they call Apalachee, there are found great Veins of a reddish Metal, which the French concluded to be Gold, though they wanted time and opportunity to search into them.

The people are of an Olive colour, great stature, and well proportioned; naked, except their Privities, which they hide with the Skins of Stags: their Arms and Knees stained with divers paintings, not to be washed off, their Hair black, and hanging down as low as their Thighs. Cunning they be, and excellent in the Arts of Diffimulation.

So stomachful, that they do naturally love War and Revenge; so insomuch that they are continually in War with one or other. They are crafty also, and very intelligent, as appeareth by the Answer they gave to Ferdinando Soto, a Spaniard, who was here among them, Anno 1524. For when he went to persuade the people that he was the Son of God, and came to teach them the Law: Not so, replied a Floridan; for God never had the world and slay, and work all kind of mischief against us. The Women, when their Husbands are dead, use to cut off their Hair close to their Ears, and strew it on his Sepulchre, and cannot marry again till their Hair be grown long enough to cover their shoulders. Hermaphrodites are here also in great plenty, whom they use as Beasts to carry their luggage, and put them to all kind of drudgery. They have all a gross belief of the Souls Immortality, but are otherwise Idolaters.

Mountains this Country hath not many, as being generally plain and level; the chieftest, those called Apalachee, before-mentioned, supposed by the Inhabitants to be rich in Mines of Gold. Rivers of most note; 1. Rio Seco. 2. Rio Grandes. 3. Serrevahi. The two first named by the Spaniards, and the last by the Natives. 4. Ganama. 5. Ligeri. 6. Azuza. 7. Sequana; and 8. Charente; so called by the French, according to the names of the best Rivers in France: both French and Spaniards having had severally and successively the possession of it. Here are also 9. Rio de Flores, or the River of Flowers. 10. Rio de Nieves, or the River of Snow: And 11. Rio de Spiritu Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghost; all of them falling into the Bay of Mexico. A particular description of these Rivers, their Rise, Course, and Greatness, I find not in any of my Authors. Only Mercator telleth us of a swiftest River, called Porte Riale, reckon'd the chieftest of this Country, the Mouth whereof is three miles broad; where it openeth into the Sea betwixt two Promontories, the one towards the West, and the other pointing to the North. Some of these Rivers are affirmed to be haunted with Crocodiles: a Creature dangerous alike both by Land and Water.

The Country, not so well discovered and planted hitherto, as to be divided into Provinces, is commonly distributed into several Tribes, as were all Nations of the World at their first Discovery. The principal of these they reckon the Quevenes, Mianets, Cunagadi, Cannoi, Avanar, and Malicane, the Susiles, Guinnes, and other names not usual unto us of Europe's, though these more passable than many which have gone before; mollified perhaps by the French and Spaniards, and not presented to us in their natural roughness: all governed by their Paracassis, or several Chiefs, and those at deadly Feuds and continual Wars with one another. Some have advanced on the names of particular Provinces, as Panama, Avanar, Abandusia, Jogaxia, Apalache, Amibia, Sasmania, Colas; but they acquaint us neither with their Site nor Bounds; except it be that Panama lieth on the borders of Hispania Nova, beyond the large and spacious Bay of the Holy Ghost; and Calas near the Cape called Cabo de Florida. Others distinguish it by the names of the several Roylets, which varying with the change of the person, makes that division to be very variable and uncertain also. But it is generally agreed, that the Península which pointeth on the Isle of Cuba hath the name of Treglia, or Florida (specially so called; the name of Florida being first given by Columbo unto this part only, though afterwards communicated unto all the rest of this Country. A Demy-Iland, stretching in length, from the South to the North, 100 Leagues; in breadth, where broadest, 30 Leagues, and in some places 20 only. Well known by the Cape of Martyrs, looking into the Isle of Cuba, the River of the Holy Ghost, and three goodly Bayes, the chief whereof, that intituled to S. Jaspis, all opening into the Gulf of Mexico, or the Bay of New Spain. The whole invironed about, save where it is joyned unto the Continent with Bars of Sands, and scattered Islands, which serve unto it as the Out-works to some notable Forts.

Chief Towns herof, 1. S. Helen, on or near a Promontory so named, where this Country bordereth on Virginia, once fortified and possessed by the Spaniards, but not long since abandoned. 2. Fort de Charles, Arc Carolina in the Latine, built by the French upon the Banks of the River Mato; and so called in honour of Charles the Ninth, in whose time the Conquest of this Country was undertaken; but ruined by the Spaniards in the War between them. 3. Port-Royal, a well frequented Haven, on the mouth of the River of that name; but whether there be any Town now remaining, I am not able to say. More in the Land (for there lie all upon the Borders towards Virginia) Apalache, supposed to be a place of great consideration, in regard of the opinion which was had of the Wealth thereof; (but found to be a small Town, of but 40 Cottages;) and therefore first attempted and took in by the Spaniards, in their Invasion of this Country under Pamphilus de Narvaez, Anno 1528. Recovered by the Natives after his departure. 5. Anc, an open Burrough, nine days journey from Apalache, where the Savages gave the Spaniards a sharp Encounter, and slew many of them; but being vanquished at the last, they forsook the Town, of it self not Tenable. 6. Ocalis, an unwall'd Town, but consisting of 600 Sheds (for I dare hardly call them Houses) the chief of the Kingdom of Aucua. 7. Osabile, the chief Seat of the King so called; and 1. Pitacachum, a Burrough of 200 Cottages, the principal of the Kingdom of Pitacachum: both taken by the Spaniards at the same time also. 9. S. Matthews, on the Eastern shore of the Demy-Iland above-mentioned, possessed and fortified by the Spaniards. 10. S. Angustines, on the same shore, but more South than the other, situate at the mouth of a small River so named, fortified by the Spaniards with many a strong Castle: but for all that taken by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1585; there being found in the Fort of S. John, in which the strength of the Town consisted, 15 Brass Pieces, and 20000 Picors in ready Money, for the pay of the Garrison. Repaired afterwards more strongly than ever formerly. The Spaniards have also Garrisons in two other places of this Country, viz. S. Philip, and S. Jago; but I cannot say distinctly in what part they are.

The Government of this Country is of one kind only; though managed by several persons: the Supreme Power residing in the Chiefs of their several Tribes; at such continual Enmity with one another, that they very seldom joyn together in any Councils wherein the publick is concerned. So that the Spaniards may affirm of the present Floridians, as the Romans did of the ancient Britains; Nec quicquam adversus validissimas gentes utilis nobis fuit, quam quod in commune non consulebant; The not communicating of their Councils hastened on their bondage. Yet in the Government of these Chiefs there was somewhat of the Parliamentary way used with us in Europe: For as in all matters of Concernment those Chiefs advised with their Council; so if it were a business which concerned the Publick, their Priests and others of most note for Gravity and Wisdom were admitted to the Consultation. But being feverally too weak for a strong Invader, and never joyned together to defend themselves, they made themselves an easy prey to the French and Spaniards; Et sic dum singulis pugnabant, universi vincuntur; by trusting to their single Forces, they were all subdued. For in the year 1512. John Ponce, a Native of Leon in Spain, setting fail with three Ships from the Island of Porto Rico, on Palm-Sunday fell on the Península before described; and for that cause, or from the flourishing Veridure of it, called it Florida; but did no more than four along upon the Coasts, and give new names to such of the Promontories and Rivers as he had discovered; and having only a slight skirmish with some of the Savages, returned back again. The business eight years after was again revived by Vesputius de Aylen, who setting fail from the Haven of Plata, in Hispánola, attained unto the North-east parts of this Continent, bordering on Virginia, where he left names unto the Promontory of S. Helen, and the River of Jordan: and having treacherously inflamed some of the Natives, (whom he had invited to a Feast) prepared for Spain; where he obtained the Kings Patent for a new Plantation. But his periodicalness could not prosper: For in the year 1524. coming with his Ships upon this Coast, one of them perished on the Rocks, and 200 of his men being killed at their landing, he gave over the Enterprise: the Spaniards hitherto making no more use of these Discoveries, than wickedly to enrich themselves by stealing men, whomas wickedly they sold for Slaves. Nor had the Voyage of Pamphilus de Narvaez, Anno 1528. any better end; though undertaken with a Band of 400 Foot, and 80 Horse. For having took possession of the Country in the name of his Sovereign Charles the Fifth, finding some hopes of great Treasures to be had at Apalache, (distant above a Months Journey from the place of his Landing) he would needs march thither. In which Action, though he got that and some other Towns, yet he lost himself, few of his men returning safe into their Country, and they not knowing what became of their General. As fruitless, but more famous, was the Enterprise of Hernando de Soto, begun in the year 1538. and continued till 1543. who with a little Army of 350 Horse, and 90 Foot, over-ran a great part of the Country, and brought many of the Petit Princes under the Command of Spain. But making only a depredatory War of it, to enrich himself, and waste the Country, without settling any Colony, or building any Fortifications in it to make good his gettings, the Action ended with his Life, which he lost by a Fever: the remnant of his Souldiers, whom the War had spared, under the Conduct of Ludovico Melisso di Alvarado, recovering Mexico not without great difficulties.

And so the Spaniards leave the Stage, and the French enter; sent on this Voyage by Gaspard Coligny, Admiral of France, Anno 1562. under the Conduct of Ribault: who falling on that part of the Continent which lieth on the East-side of the Península, gave the first Promontory which he touched at the name of Cape Franc, and after running Northward along that Coast, new-named the Rivers thereof by the names of the Saine, the Loire, the Somme, the Garonne, and others of most note in his own Country. Coming as far North as the great River of Porto Royal, he there built a little Fort, which he called Fort-Charles, where he left 26 of his men to keep possession, and returned for France: his Souldiers following not long after, as well as they could; destitute of Supplies from home, and not able with so small a number to command them there. The Admiral reinforced about two years after, under the Conduct of Landottier, who had accompanied Ribault in the former Voyage; by whom some further progress was made in this Undertaking, and a little Town built on the Banks of the River Mato (so called by Ribault, because in that Month discovered by him) which he named Charles Fort, Arc Carolina in the Latine. But a Mutiny happening amongst his men, and some Complaints made of him in the Court of France, he was called home, and Ribault sent again to pursue the Enterprise: who entering on his Charge in August, Anno 1565, was presently set on by the Spaniards, both by Sea and Land; his Ships forced violently upon the Rocks, the New Town sacked, the Colony put unto the Sword, very few escaping; Ribault himself murdered in cold blood by the Enemy, after Faith given him for his life. It was thought that above 600 French were slain in this Action. So ended the French hopes in Florida, the King being then preparing for a new Civil War, and loth to engage himself against the Spaniards, till the year 1627. when at the charge of Dominicus Gorgius, a private person, out of an honest zeal to the honour of his Country, and to cry quittance with the Spaniards for their treacherous cruelty, it revived again. And though he found the Spaniards, after the defeat of Ribault, had repaired and fortified Arc Carolina, and raised two Castles more on the Banks of the Mato, which they had furnished with such Pieces as they took from the French, and garrisoned with 400 Souldiers; yet giving a courageous Onset, by the aid of the Savages, (to whom the name and Neighbourhood of the Spaniards was exceeding odious) he forced them all, demolished the Works, and hanged all such of the Souldiers as the Sword had spared, and so returned into France; where, instead of honour and reward for so great a service, he was in danger of losing both his Life and Fortunes, compelled to lurk among his Friends till the times were changed. The Spaniard after this, to keep some kind of possession, though not finding in it Riches answerable to their greedy desires, fortified S. Matthews, and S. Angustines, on the East-side of the Demy-Iland, with the Castles of S. Philip, and S. Jago, in other parts of the Country towards the North-East; thinking himself so strong in the Gulf of Mexico, that no Foreign Forces durst appear on that side of the Country. So that it seems he plays the part of Aepus's Dog in the Manger, neither resolved to plant there himself, nor willing that any others should.

Soul-

Having thus taken a Survey of the Main Land of Florida, let us next take a view of such Islands as lie dispersed up and down in the Seas adjoining; called by one general name LUCAIOS, or LUCALIE IN-SULÆ, many in number, but reducible to these three Heads: 1. The Tortugas. 2. The Martyrs. And 3. The Lucaios specially so called.

1. The TORTUGAS are seven or eight little Islands, lying on an heap at the South-West point of the Península, called the Cape of Florida, in the height of 25 Degrees; distant from the Port of Havana, in the Isle of Cuba (opposite unto which they lie) about six Leagues. Well known among the Sailors, because much avoided, or rather avoided because known; the danger of their Company making their farther Acquaintance thinned.

2. The MARTTRES, called also the Caior, are 1 three great Rocks rather than Islands, covered with a white Sand, and full of Buttes; the middlemost of the three the greatest: situate over against the South-East Promontory of the said Península, called from hence Cabeza de los Martyres; or, the Cape of Martyrs. Denominated thus by John Ponce the Spaniard, in his first Discovery of this Country, because they seemed afar off to have some resemblance to men impaled upon Stakes, as many of the Martyrs were in the Primitive times. Infamous for the many Shipwrecks which have since there happened; but of great observation amongst Sea-faring men, because they know by leaving these Rocks or Islands on the left hand of them, that they are already entered in the Streights.

3. The LUCAIOS, specially so called, lie dispersed on the East of the Península, many in number, and so called from Lucanisque, the greatest and most Northern of them, situate in the 27 degree of Latitude; of more length than breadth, but hitherto known by name only. Of greater note, though not so big, is that called 2. Bahama, in the middle way betwixt Lucanisque and the Península; in length 13 Leagues, and eight in breadth; memorable for giving name to the violent Current interposing betwixt it and the Demy-Iland, called the Streights of Bahama; yet not so freight, but that they are 16 miles in breadth, though of so forcible a Course, that many times neither Wind nor Oars can prevail against it. 3. Guanabani, the most famous of all these Islands, because the first that was discovered by Columbus, being then almost out of hope of proceeding farther, who thereupon caused it to be called S. Saviour. Well shaded at that time with Trees, full of fresh Springs, and very plentiful of Cotton, now overgrown with Shrubs and Buttes. 4. Guanima, by Columbus, when first discovered, called S. Maria de Concepcion; begirt about with Rocks and Quick-fans, but otherwise of a pleasant and fruitful Soil, full of delicate Springs. Others there are, to the number of 24, or thereabouts, whose names occur in many of our larger Maps: but being we had nothing of them but their very names, I shall not trouble my self with the Nomenclature.

Of all in general it is said, that they obeyed their King so strictly, (for a King they had) that if he commanded them to leap down from a high Rock, they performed the same; though he gave no reason but his Will. The Women of so perfect Beauty, that many of the bordering Nations forsook their own Countries to enjoy their Loves; their Shape and Beauty the more discernable, in regard not suffered to wear any thing till their Purgations; nor after that, but Nets of Cotton filled with Leaves of Herbs. But now, and long since, there are neither Men nor Women to be found in any of them; the people being long since waited by the Spaniards in the Mines of Cuba and Hispánola, or consumed by Famine and Dificals, or otherwise made away in Prisons, and by several Torments, to the number of a Million and two hundred thousand, as some have told us. And so we pass unto the other side of those Northern Countries, opposite to Nova Francia, Virginia, and the Main Land of Florida; that when we fall into the Countries now possessed by the Spaniards, we may not wander out of them till this Work be finished, except it be to take a Progress into some of the Islands, which cannot otherwise be visited, but by such a Start.

OF CALIFORNIA.

CALIFORNIA, in the large and general acceptance of it, containeth all those Provinces of Mexicana; which lie on the West-side of that Northern Peninsula, beyond Nova Galicia, and New Spain: though in the stricter, limited to that Province only which lieth on the other side of a long and spacious Gulf, called Mer Vermiglio, and from hence the Bay of California. But taking it in the largest sense, it hath on the West New Spain, and New Gallicia, and so on to those undiscovered parts which lie farthest North, to the Straights of Anian. So witnesseth John de Laet, lib. 6. cap. 11. CALIFORNIA communiter dicitur quicquid terrarum Novae Hispaniae atque Galliciae ad Occidentem obijcit, ad extremos Americae Septentrionalis terminos, & Frisium quod vulgo Anian vocant. Limited in the stricter sense and acceptance of it to an Island (as it is now generally conceived to be) extended in a full length from North to South, on the West hereof. So that for our more regular proceeding in the Chorography and Story of it, we must divide it into the Continent, and the Island: the Continent subdivided into the two large Provinces of 1. Quivira; and 2. Cibola; the Island into 3. California, specially so called; and 4. Nova Albion.

And first the Continent of this part which we call California, hath on the East some parts of Nova Galicia; and besides that, those vast and undiscovered Countries which lie on the West-side of Canada and Virginia; on the opposite shore: bounded on the North with the unknown parts of this Mexicana; on the North-west, with the Straights of Anian, if such Straights there be; on the West, with the Sea interposing betwixt it and the Island, called Mer Vermiglio; on the South and South-west, with the rest of Nova Galicia, from which parted by a great River called Rio del Noordo. A River which rising in the 40 degree of Northern Latitude, first parteth Tigues, a Province of Quivira, from that of New Mexico, one of the Provinces of Nova Galicia; and after a long course falleth into the Sea, called Mer Vermiglio, above Cinola, another of the Provinces of that Division. Divided, as before was said, into the two great Provinces of 1. Quivira and 2. Cibola.

1. QUIVIRA, taking up the most Northern parts of this side of America, is said to be very plain and level, of few Trees, not many Houses, nor much store of people; quite destitute of Fruits and Corn, and yielding nothing for Mans life but the flesh of Beasts, which they eat raw, and swallow down in great bits without any chewing. The men apparelled in Bulls skins from the head to the feet; the women, though in a cold Country, with no other Garment than their Hair, which they wear so long, that it forceth them instead of a Veil to hide their nakedness. They live in Bands and Companies, on the verity of a better Fortune, most of them being plain in the sight, and the rest red under the Horrific face, or crowned in passing over the River. Yet would not these few which were left give up the Town, till it diffant from it) it is supposed that the Inhabitants first came, and from hence by degrees peopled all America.

The Country, being full of Herbage, breeds great flocks of Cattle, differing not much in bigness from those of Europe, but that they have an high Bunch betwixt their shoulders; bristled upon the back like Boars, with somewhat which resembleth the Mane in Horses, and the Beard in Goats; their Legs short, and clad with Fetlocks, their Horns short, but sharp: the whole Beast of an aspect so horrid, that an Horse will not venture near them, till well acquainted. Yet in these Beasts lie all their Riches, these being to this people, as we say with us of our Ale to Drunkards, Meat, Drink, and Cloth, and more too. For the Hides yield them Houses, or at least the covering of them; their Bones, Bodkins; their Hair, Thread; their Sinews, Ropes; their Horns, Maws and Bladders, Vessels, their Dung, Fire; their Calves-skins Budgets to draw and keep water; their Blood, Drink, and their Flesh, Meat. There is thought to be some Traffick from China, or Cambay, hither: for when Vasquez de Coronado conquered it, he saw in the farther Sea certain Ships, not of common making, which seemed to be well laden, and did bear in their Prows the figure of Pellicans; which could not be conjectured to come from any Country but one of these two. I know, some place this Country more within the Land; and others are so far from letting it look towards any part of the Sea, that they have laid it close unto the back of Virginia. For my part, I have laid it along the Coasts, upon good Authority, though I deny not but that some parts hereof may be more remote. Or else to reconcile the difference, it may thus be ended; that the Maritime parts being known by other names, the In-lands might retain more specially the name of Quivira, as we have seen in many other Countries before described.

And this I am the rather inclined to think, because I find mention of three Provinces on the North of Cibola, but in the way unto Quivira: the one called Sao, the other called Cicnie, and the third Tigues, which I look upon as the Maritime parts of the same one Country, but better peopled and frequented than the Islands are, because lying in the way of Traffick. The principal Towns of which Provinces are: 1. Ara, or Acon, a small Town, but situate in a strong and defensible place, about which growth some store of Cotton, which from the place the Natives call by the name of Acon. 2. Tigues, on the Banks of a River so called; inhabited by a stout and courageous People; who being refused not to fall alive into the hands of the Spaniards, when beleagued by Vasquez de Coronado, after they had held out above six weeks, laid all their Household-stuff and Treasure in an heap together, which they set on fire; and taking their Wives and Children into the midst of their Banks, made a desperate Sally on the Enemy. A Reliance on the verity of a better Fortune, most of them being plain in the sight, and the rest red under the Horrific face, or crowned in passing over the River. Yet would not these few which were left give up the Town, till it fired about their ears, and no longer Tenable: the Spaniard buying this Victory (notwithstanding the great odds of their Arms) with the loss of most of their Horses, the death of seven of their men, and the wounding of 80. 3. Cicnie, a small Burrough, but the chief of that Province, four days journey from Tigues; from whence the whole way unto Quivira, specially so called, being 90 miles, hath in it neither Stone nor Tree, nor any Land-mark, inasmuch as the Spaniards were fain to make heaps of Cow-dung to serve for their direction in their coming back.

The first discovery of this Country is to be attributed to the diligence of Antonio de Mendoza, Vice-Roy of Mexico, who desirous to get Wealth and Honour by some new Adventures, employed in the discovery of these Northern parts Fray Marco de Niza. By him, and by a Negro which he had for his Guide, there was some light gotten of Cibola, the next Province to this; but so disguised in lies, and wrapt up in Fictions, that that light was little more than darkness. Yet by that glimmering, Francisco Vasquez de Coronado, in the year 1540, undertook the business; and sped so well, that having made his way through Cibola, he took the Town of Tigues, as we heard before, and laid his way open to Quivira. Moved to a further journey by the report of the Savages, (who desired to hasten him out of their Country) (telling him of the Wealth of Tanaras, who reigned in the In-land parts of Quivira; a Bearded Man (those of this Country wearing none) of a white Complexion, and one who in his Chappell worshipped a Cross, and the Queen of Heaven; on went the Spaniards towards Quivira, and found out the Tanaras, a poor naked Priest, Master of no more Treasure than a Brazen Plate hanging on his Breast, and without any sign of Christianity as they did expect. So frustrated of all their hopes, and having got nothing but their labour for their pains, and the Honour of a new Discovery, with the loss of many of their men, they returned to Mexico, Anno 1542. Some Frysars made bold to stay behind, but were all slain by the people of Quivira, except only one, who like Jab's Messenger was left to carry news of the Murder; the Spaniards never looking into these cold Countries, where nothing else was to be gotten but Blows and Hunger.

2. CIBOLA hath on the North Quivira; on the South and South-east parts, New Gallicia, from which divided by the River called Rio del Noordo, as before was said; the West-side of it washed with the Mer Vermiglio, interposed betwixt it, and the Island, or California specially so called. By the Natives it is called Zuni.

The Air hereof indifferently temperate, if not too much subject in the Winter to Frosts and Snows. The Country for the most part level, rarely fawled with Hills, but those very Rocky. No Trees that bear them any Fruits few Trees at all, except it be a Wood of Cedar, from which abundantly supplied both with Fowl and Timber. Plenty of Maize, and small white Pease, which they make their Bread of; great store of Venison, but they kill it only for the skin: some quantities of Sheep, known for flesh by their Fleeces only, but otherwise as big each of them as an Horse, or Oxe, some of their Horns weighing fifty pounds. Of Lyons, Bears, and Tygers, to great a number, that they have more than enough for themselves, and could well spare them to their Neighbours.

The people generally well limbed, and tall of stature, ingenious in respect of some other Savages; and though naked except their Privities only, or covered only with a Mantle, yet those Mantles wrought in divers colours; which, with some quantity of Cotton which they have amongst them, (none of it growing in their Country) shew them to be an industrious Nation, and to maintain a course of Trade with some of their Neighbours. A farther Argument of which is those painted Skins which they have from Cicnie, or some other Country which lies towards the Ocean, my Author telling that they travel for them eight days journey towards the North: and probably enough may be some of those Commodities which the Inhabitants of the Maritime Provinces of Quivira do receive from Cathay, or China, with which they are supposed to Traffick, as before was said. Little industry is noted in the Women also, one of which will grind and knead more Maize in a day, than the Women of Mexico do in four. In other things not differing from the rest of the Savages.

This Country was first made known to the Spaniards by the Travels of Frier Marco de Niza, employed on new Discoveries by Antonio de Mendoza, as before was said. Leaving Cathacan, the most Northern Province of Nova Galicia, he overcame a tedious Desert four days journey long; at the end of which he met some people, who told him of a pleasant Country four days journey farther, unto which he went. And staying at a place called Nacapa, he dispatched the Negro, whom he took with him for his Guide, to search towards the North, by whom he was advertised after four days absence, that he had been informed of a large and wealthy Province called Cibola, a Months journey thence; wherein were seven great Cities under the Government of one Prince; the Houses of which were built of Stone, many Stories high; the Lintels of their Doors adorned with Turquoises; with many other strange reports of their Markets, Multitudes and Riches. But neither the Fryer nor the Negro had the hap to see it; the Negro being killed on the very Borders, and the Fryer so terrified with the news, that he thought it better to return, and falsified the Vice-Roy with some handsome Fiction, than put himself upon the danger of a further journey. To that end he enlarged and amplified the Reports which the Negro sent him, gave to the Defarts in his way the name of the Kingdoms of Tanaras, and Merita; ascribed unto this last a great City called Abacan, once well inhabited, but at that time destroyed by Wars; to the other a more civil and well-cultured People than in other places. Inflamed with which Reports, Vasquez de Coronado undertook the Action, but found the Fryer to be a Fryer; nothing of moment true in all his Relations: the Kingdom of Merita to be found only in the Fryers brains; Tanaras to be nothing but a great Lake, on whose Banks had once been many Cottages now consumed by Wars. And as for the seven Cities of flesh Wealth and bigness, he found them to be seven poor Burroughs, all situate within the compass of four Leagues; which made up that far famed Kingdom, which the Fryer dreamt of. The biggest of them held about 500 Cottages; the rest of them not above half that number. One of them, left he might be fain to return without doing something, he beleagued and took; but found it such an hot piece of service, that he was twice beaten down with Stones as he scaled the Rampiers; but having taken it at the last, he found in it great plenty of Maize to refresh his Army, and caused the Town, consisting of 200 Houses, (or thereabouts) to be called Granada, for some resemblance which it had to that City in Spain. Such as have since endeavoured the Discovery of this North-west part, and failed along the shores hereof on Mer Vermiglio, have added hereto the names or some Points or Promontories, known in the Maps by the names of 1. Puerto de S. Clara, not far from the Mouth or Influx of Rio del Noordo. 2. San Pablo. 3. S. Michael. 4. Rio de Teron. 5. Lagos del Oro. wondering on Quivira.

vina's and 6. Roy Coronado, on the East of that.

Between this Region and Quitira, specially fo called, lieth a Country, which the said Vesputz names Tucayna, memorable for the famous River of Huancu on the Banks whereof, for the space of 20 Leagues, stand 15 Burroughs well built, and furnished with Stoves, (if he hath not in this part of the Story out-ried the Fryer) as in other cold, but more civil Countries, against the extremities of Winter. This Region, stretching seven days journey to the River of Cienick, I reckon to belong to the North-east parts of Cibola. As I do also the fruitful Valley of Ania de Corazon, which they passed in their way hither from Coutiliana; with the Town and Territory of Cibiltica-la, and the Valley of Nusfra Senora, or our Ladies Dale, in the South parts of it: not knowing otherwise what Province to refer them to.

Proceed we now unto the Island, the other general part of this Division, parted from Cibola and New Gallia by a narrow Sea called Mer Vermiglio, and by some the Gulf of California, environed on all other parts by the Main Ocean. Extended in a great length from the 22 degree of Northern Latitude to the 42, but the breadth not answerable. The most Northern point hereof called Cabo Blanco, of which little memorable. The most Southern, called the Cape of S. Lucas, remarkable for the great Prize there taken from the Spaniards by Captain Cavendish, in his Circumnavigation of the World, Anno 1587. Supposed in former times to have been joynd in the Northern parts of it, above the Latitude of 27, to the rest of the Continent; and so described in most of our later Maps, till the year 1626, and after that in the Chart or Map of Juhn de Laet, Anno 1633, which I wonder at; himself affirming, that in many of the old Maps it was made an Island, lib. 6. cap. 11, and that he had seen a Map in Parchment, a very fair and ancient Draught, que Californiam, in ingenuis Indis modum, a Contineute divideret, in which it was expressed for a spacious Island, lib. 6. cap. 17. The reason of the Error was, that those who first endeavoured the discovery of it, failing up the Sea of Mer Vermiglio, found it to grow narrower and narrower towards the North, till it seemed to be no bigger than some mighty River; but that of such a violent Current, that no Boat was able to pass upwards with Wind or Oar, unless haled up with Cords by the strength of men. And taking it to be a River, they gave it the name of Rio de Bona Guis; known by that name, and continued in the Opinion of being a River, till the year 1620, or thereabouts. At what time some Adventurers, beating on these Coasts, fell accidentally upon a straight, but violent passage, on the North hereof, which brought them with a strong Current into Mer Vermiglio: discovering by that Accident, that the Waters falling into that Sea was not a River, as formerly had been supposed, but a violent breaking in of the Northern Ocean; by consequence, that this part of California was not a Demi-Island, or Pennisula, but a perfect Island. And looking on it as an Island, we have divided it into Nova Albion, and California, specially fo called.

And fifth, 3. CALIFORNIA, specially fo called, containeth the Southern parts hereof, as far as to the Latitude of 38, where it bordereth on Nova Albion. Of which Country, though fo near to New Spain, and New Gallia, and though discovered so long since, we yet know but little: the Spaniards either wanting new for new Plantations, or finding small encouragements here to invite them to it. Furnished on the Sea-coasts with great plenty both of Fish and Fowl, which they find in great Islands of Weeds floating on the Seas; and more within the Land, with a kind of Beasts haired like a Goat, and with Teats like a Cow, but otherwise resembling Deer, which they kill with their Dogs. Some Mountains in it are said to call Fire-athes, which the Spaniards for that reason call Cacofogo. The people are numerous, and thick set, inasmuch that on the Banks of the supposed River of Bona Guis were numbered three and twenty Nations, all of several Languages. In their persons like the rest of the Savages, but of different Dresses. Some of them painting their Faces all over, some half way only, others with painted Vizards, resembling Faces: Holes in their Noftrils for their Pendants; the tips of their Ears loaded, if not over-loaded with the bones of Fishes hanging at them; a Girdle about their Waite, to which they tatten a bunch of Feathers that hang down behind them like a Tail: the Women using the like Bunches before them also. Their chief God the Sim, (as that of Cibola is the Water) which they most affectionately worship, as the cause of the increase of their Fruits and Plants. Joynd in Communion with their Gods, they were taught by Alarcon a Spaniard to worship a wooden Crofs (the more irrational Idolatry of the two) which he caused to be erected at his coming away, with instructions to kneel before it every morning, at the first rising of the Sun: so teaching them to worship their two Gods at once, or translate their Devotions from the Sun, a Creature of God, to a plain Wooden Crofs (of which they knew nothing, but the form) the work of a Carpenter. It is also told us of this People, that each Family is ordered by the Father of it, without other Government: yet so well managed, that they allowed but one Wife to a man, and punished Adultery with death; the Maids not suffered to converse or talk with men before their Marriage, but to abide at home and work: the Widows not to marry again, till they had mourned at least half a year for the death of their Husbands. Matters more favouring an Utopian Commonwealth, than a Californian.

Places of most observation in it; 1. The Capes of S. Clara, and S. Lucas: the first on the South-east point of the Island, towards new Gallia; the other on the South-West, towards Asia. 2. S. Croffs, (Sinus S. Crucis) a capacious and convenient Haven near the Cape of S. Clara; so called, because discovered upon Holy-Road day, 3. Cabo di las Pluiss, more within the Bay; so named, because the shore shewed in little Hills, without Grass or Shrubs; the Spanish word signifying as much. 4. Cabo Bazo, towards the bottom of the Gulf, (from whence the Land on the other side may be easily seen) in the Latitude of 29. 5. S. Andrews, a convenient Haven, and not far off an Island of the same name, with some Cottages in it. 6. S. Thome, an Island of 25 Leagues in compass, at the mouth of the Gulf; rising towards the South in an high Mountain, under which is a convenient Road for shipping the Sea being thereabouts 25 fathoms. Then on the other side towards the Sea, we have 7. S. Ad-bad, a convenient Haven, surrounded with a Country which seemed rich and pleasant. 8. Cape Trinidad, a Promontory well known to Sea-men. 9. Cape de Cedros, fo called from the Cedars growing near it, in the Latitude of 28 and 15 minutes; with an Island not far off of the same name also. 10. Cape Engano, in the Latitude of 31. 11. Puebla de las Comas, fo named from the multitude of Boats (by themselves called Camar) which the people used, four degrees more Northward than that Cape. And 12. Cabo de Galera, fo named from the resemblance, which it had to an Har, in the Latitude of 36. But these two are placed by Juhn de Laet within the Country of Seyu, one of the Provinces of Quitira. Understand here, that these are only the names of Places, not of Towns or Villages, (for whether there be any such, I am yet unsatisfied); and that there are many other Promontories, Bays, Rivers and Islands on both sides of this Region, which I did not name for.

The first Discovery of this Country we owe to Ferdinando Cortez, (of whom more hereafter) who in the year 1534, furnished out two Ships from the Haven of S. Jago, on the Western Shores of Hispania Nova, to search these Seas: who making some small progress in it, encouraged him the next year to pursue it in person; and passing up the Gulf, as high as to the River of S. Peter, and S. Paul, (so called, because discovered on the 29 of June, the Annual Feast of those Apostles) for want of Victuals and other necessary Provisions, he returned back again. The business having slept a while, was in the year 1539, awakened by Francisco de Ulla, one that had accompanied Cortez the time before: who did not only search to the bottom of the Gulf, but having thoroughly canvassed all the Eastern Shores, he turned his course, and made as fortunate a Discovery also of the Western Coasts. Landing, he took possession of the Country with the wonted Ceremonies, for the King of Spain; and in the place set up a Crofs to serve as a Remembrance of his being there. After him followed Ferdinando de Alarcon, who discovered many Leagues up the course of the supposed River of Bona Guis; where Naguanicus, one of the Chiefs of their Clans or Tribes, did submit unto him: advancing so far towards the North, that at the last he heard news of Cibola; but was unprovided at that time for a Journey thither. And on the other side, Roderico Cabrillo, in the year 1642, coasting along the Western Shores of this Country, discovered two small Islands beyond Cape Galera; the one of which he called S. Luke's, and the other the Island of Paffion; and beyond them a fair Haven, which he called Sardinas. But yet not finding what they looked for, which was Gold and Silver, and hungry Honour yielding but a poor subsistence; the farther Search of these Countries was quite laid aside, almost as little known now, as before Columbus first fell upon new Discoveries.

4. NOVA ALEION, formerly conceived to be a part of the Continent, hath of late times been found to have taken up but some part of this Island; lying about the 38 degree of Latitude, and so Northwards as far as to Cape Blanco, as they call it now. Discovered by Sir Francis Drake in his Circumnavigation of the world Anno 1577, and by him named Nova Albion, in honour of England his own Country, which was once called Albion.

The Country is abundantly replenished with Herds of Deer, grazing upon the Hills by thousands: as also with a kind of Conies in their Feet somewhat like a Want, and on each side a Sack, where they keep such Victuals as they cannot eat. The Flesh of these Conies serves the people for Food; and of their Skins the Kings or Chief of their several Tribes make their Royal Robes. The Men go quite naked, the Women with a piece of Mat instead of an Apron; chaste, and obedient to their Husbands. Their Houses made of Turf and Oiler, fo wrought together, as serves to keep them from the cold in the middle whereof they have an Hearth, where they make Fire, about which they lie along upon Beds of Bull-rushes. What Towns they have, or whether they have any or not, and by what names called, if they have any, must be referred to a farther Discovery: there being nothing to that purpose delivered hitherto. And yet not feared to far North, but that it may be capable of a farther light, if any Noble Undertakers would adventure on it.

The English were no sooner landed, but the Inhabitants presented themselves before the General with presents of Feathers, and Galls of Network made of Bull-rushes; which he received, and requited with great humanity. The News of their Arrival being carried farther, one of their Kings thought fit to betow a visit on them: A Person of a goodly stature, attired in Cony-Skins, with many tall men attending on him; one going before him with a Mace, at which hanged three Crowns, with as many Chains; the Chains of Bone, but the Crowns of Knit-work, made of Feathers, very ingeniously composed. After him followed many of the common sort, every one having his Face painted white, black, and some other colours; and every one with some Precinct or other in their hands, even the very Boys. Being brought into the General's Presence, the Mace-Bearer made a long Speech, which might be well meant, though not understood; and that being ended, the King caused the Crown to be put upon the General's head, and the three Chains about his Neck; the common people offering Sacrifices about the Field in great solemnity. Not to be interdicted those Superstitions, though the English (whom they took for Gods) seemed to be offended at them. Finally, after much kindness expressed on both sides, the General promising in the Name of the Queen of England to take them into his Protection, he caused a Pillar to be erected in the place; on which he fastened the Arms of England, the Queen's Name, and his own; and so returned unto his Ships. But the Country lying so far off, that no benefit could redound by it to the English Nation, but the honour of the first Discovery; the name of Nova Albion by little and little was forgotten, and at last quite left out of the Maps or Charts; only a Point or Promontory, by the name of Po. de Francisco Drake, being left unto us to preserve his Memory. And though we have called the name of Nova Albion to be restored unto the Maps, as it was before; yet we must let the Reader know, that the name of Nova Albion hath been given lately with as much propriety, but more hopes of profit and advantage, to that part of Virginia which lieth betwixt Mary-Land and New-England, as before was noted.

Opposite to Cape Blanco, and the extreme North parts of America, the supposed Kingdom of ANIAN, from whence the Straight of Anian, which are thought by some to part America from Asia, do derive their Name, is conceived to lie. Supposed, and supposed only, for not certainly known: the very being of such a Kingdom, and such Straights, being much suspected.

NOVA GALLICIA.

NOVA GALLICIA is bounded on the East and South with Nova Hispania, or New Spain; on the West, with Mer Vermiglio, better known heretofore by the names of the River Buena Guiz, and the Gulf of California; the Countreys beyond it on the North not discovered hitherto. So called because of some resemblance which it was thought to have to Gallicia, a Province of Spain in Europe; the word Nova being added to it for distinction sake.

It is situate between the 18 and 28 degrees of the Northern Latitude, which measured from the Port of the Nativity, (by the Spaniards called Natividad, and contractedly Navidad) where it cometh on New Spain, to the most Northern border of Cinaloa, makes 300 Leagues: the breadth hereof so much as is possessed by the Spaniards, being but an hundred only. But taking in New Biscay and Nova Mexicana into the Account, the breadth will be greater than the length.

The Air hereof is generally very temperate, but more inclined to heat then cold; many times subject unto Thunders and great Storms of Rain, but for the most part so found a Constitution, that the Inhabitants attain to a good old Age; contagious Diseases seldom known amongst them. The Ground by consequence somewhat of the diet, if not moistened with the morning Dewes, which fall very frequently; and whether by the temperature of the Air, or Soil, apt to produce a kind of Gnat, (which the Latines call Cimices) affirmed to be as big as a Bean, which by their stings do very often plague the people, and raise Blisters on their Bodies as big as Walnuts.

The Countrey more Mountainous than Plain, and in most parts Sandy. Quarries of Stone in many places, but little Marble, or any other Stone of value. Good store of Mines of Brass and Silver, few of Gold or Iron; and amongst all their Metals a great mixture of Lead. The Soil so rich, that it yields 60 measures of Wheat for one; and for one of Maize, and woods two hundred: The Rivers plentiful of Fish, and the Woods of Beasts: great store of Bees without stings which make their Honey in the Forests without other Hives. And as for Apples, Pears, Citrons, Figs, Malcatoons, and other European Fruits, they thrive better here than they do in Spain, except the Cherry and the Olive: of which the last is most an end determined by Emnets; and the first thrives out such a Harvest of Leaves, occasioned by the natural Rankness of the ground, that they seldom come to their perfection.

The People are wavering and inconstant, apt upon any discontent to forsake their Houses, betake themselves unto the Woods, and many times to return to their Ancient Barbarism: Crafty and docile even in matters which concern Religion; but slothful and impatient of any labour, to which not to be held but for very great wages. Much given to singing, Dancing, and sometimes to Drinking; and were it not that they loved their Liquor, few of them would betake themselves to the cares of Husbandry. Of Stature reasonably tall; their Garments for the most part a Shirt of Cotton, with a Mantle over it, fastened with two Buckles about their shoulders. They dwell in Villages and Towns, according to the greatness of their several Tribes: those Tribes commanded by their Chiefs, who succeed hereditarily; but subject to the Judges and other Officers of the King of Spain. As for the Spaniards who here dwell, they betake themselves generally to Merchandize, and the search of Metals; some few to Husbandry and grazing, but make not the best use which they might of the Countrey: for though here be great plenty both of Sugar-Canes and of Cochinell, yet they neglect to refine the one, or attend the ordering of the other; finding perhaps an easier or a greater profit in the other Commodities.

The Mountain of most name in all this Countrey is that betwixt Gudalajara and Zacatecas a League in height, but of such a Precipice withal, that no Horse nor Cattel can ascend it: their other Hills rocky, but clothed with Woods full of vast Pines, large Oaks, and great store of Wolves. The River of most name is that called Reyes, which, rising out of the Lake of Mechuacan in Nova Hispania, falls down a Cataract about four Leagues from Gudalajara of Ten Fathoms deep, and so runneth into Mare del Zur: in no place fordable, nor having any passage over it but on Reeds and Rafts, on which the Passenger sitteth with his Commodities, his Horse swimming by; nor safe at any time, and at most times dangerous. Some Lakes here be of 20, some of 12 Leagues compass: environed with rich Pastures on every side. Those of less note shall be remembered in their proper places.

It comprehends the Provinces of 1. Cinaloa, 2. Concilicac, 3. Xalisco, and 4. Gudalajara, on the Western Shores; 5. Zacatecas, 6. New Biscay, 7. Nova Mexicana, more within the Land. Of all these somewhat shall be said, though of each but little.

1. CINALOA is the most Northern Province of New Gallicia, bounded upon the West with the fuppiced River of Buena Guiz, and some part of the Bay of California on the East, with a long chain of Mountains, called the Hills of Tepestan; on the North, with the South parts of Cibola; on the South with Concilicac.

The Air for the most part clear and healthy, the Soil fat and fruitful, productive of Maize, Pulse, a sort of long Pease, which the Latines call Phaseoli, but we have no proper English name forso which abundantly plentiful. Great store of Cotton-wool, wherewith both Sexes are apparelled. Well watered with the Rivers, 1. Petatlana, 2. Tamobula, 3. Pajolma, 4. Taquim; of no long course, all of them rising from the Hills of Tepestan; and those but 36 leagues distant from the Sea-shores. By reason of these Rivers, here are very rich Pastures, which breed great store of Kine, Oxen, and other Cattel.

The People are generally tall, higher than the Spaniards by an hand-breadth, warlike and strong; not conquered by the Spaniards without great difficulty; their Arms a Bow and poisoned Arrows, with great mally Clubs. Their Garments for the most part of Cotton-wool; their Hair nourished to a great length, which they tie up in a Knot, Knot, but the Women suffer to hang down to the full length of it. Both Sexes at the first coming of the Spaniards thither, without Cloaths at all, but to hide their flames most miserably poor; worshippers of the Sun, and not a few Cannibals amongst them.

Chief Towns herof 1. S. Philip and Jacob, situate on the Bank of a River, about 42 Leagues from the Town of Concilicac, but of no great note. 2. S. Johns de Cinaloa, a Colony of the Spaniards, planted here long since, and re-inforced by a Supply brought thither in the year 1554, by Francisco de Tharras; scarce able to defend themselves from the old Inhabitants, who ever and anon disturb them with a fresh Alarm. Besides these, here are onely some scattered Villages, and those not many: the Spaniards finding only 25 old Forts in all the Countrey, when they first made themselves Masters of it, under the Conduct of Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1542. People everywhere submitting without any resistance, or if they gathered to an Head, found dispersed again. For what could naked men do against an Army?

2. COTULACAN, or CULUCAN, lieth on the South of Cinaloa, coasting along the Bay of California, which it hath on the West, and part of New Biscay on the East. The Countrey well provided of Fruits, incited unto none for all sorts of Provisions and not without some Mines of Silver found out by the Spaniards. The chief Rivers of it, 1. Rio de Mueban, or the River of Women, in the North part of the Province; so called, because the Spaniards found there more Women than Men, occasioning the opinion that it was inhabited by Amazons, 2. Rio de Sal, a goodly River, both sides whereof are very well peopled. 3. Piahta, more towards Xalisco.

The People not much different from the rest of Gallicia; save that their Women were more handsome, more for Dress and Personage; all clothed in Garments of Cotton Wool, when first known to the Spaniards; and yet the men not free from the sin of Sodom. Their Houses neatly thatched with Straw, and over the Lintels of the Doors some Paintings, as shameless as the very foulest of Arcine's Postures. Ignorant of Gold, which they had no Mines of; but of late times acquainted to their craft with Silver, which they are compelled to dig and refine for the Spaniards.

Chief Towns herof, 1. Piahta, on the River so called, about a days Journey from the Sea, well built, and artificially contrived in respect of others; never recovered of that blow that it had from the Spaniards, who in the Conquest of this Countrey waited all before them. 2. Quimola, near Rio de Mueban, an old Town, but new named by the Spaniards, because it consisted of four parts. 4. El Leon, an old Burrough, which from a Lion there found had this new name also. 5. Concilicac, on a River so named, once the chief of this Province. 6. S. Michael, on the River of Women, built by Nonnez de Guzman, in the Latitude of 25; but afterwards deserted, or removed rather to a fitter place; and now fixed in the Valley of Harroba, two Leagues from the Sea, in a flourishing, and wealthy Soil both of Corn and Pasturage. The whole Countrey conquered by the Spaniards, Anno 1551, under Nonnez de Guzman, most barbarously burning down the Towns, and destroying the people; as if they came not to subdue, but root out the Nation.

3. XALISCO, or GALESCO, as some Writers call it, hath on the North Concilicac, on the South, New Spain on the East, the Province of Gudalajara; on the West the large Bay of California. So called from Xalisco, the chief Town of it, when subdued by the Spaniards.

The Soil hereof very fit for Maize, which it yields good store of, but not often Herbage good for Cattel, which is reckoned for their greatest want. The North parts, called Chimetta, of the two most fruitful, and better peopled; having in it store of Wax and Honey, with some Mines of Silver. The people formerly Man-eaters, and much given to quarrel; from which reformed since their Conversion to the Gospel. Tenacious still of one of their ancient Customs, which is, to carry the smallest Burthen upon their Shoulders, and not under their Arms; which to do, they think very much ill-becoming.

Chief Rivers herof, 1. S. Sebastian, 2. Rio de Spiritu Santo; and 3. the great and famous River of Barana, spoken of before. Upon the Banks of which are situate their most principal Towns, viz. 1. Xalisco, giving name to the whole Province, and to a large Promontory, called by the Spaniards Sierre de Xalisco, thrusting it self into the Bay of California, over against the Islands called The Three Maries: the City taken and destroyed by Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1550. 2. Compostella, now the chief City of the Countrey, and a Bishop's See, founded by the said Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1551, when he had fully conquered the Countrey: by whom peopled with Spaniards, and by him called Del Spiritu Santo. But founded in so ill a place, and so bad an Air, destitute both of Food for Men, and Grass for Horses, as plainly showed him to have better judgment in Soldierly than in Architecture. 3. Purification, a small Burrough on the Sea-side, and in the extremity of this Countrey towards Nova Hispania, near the Port of Natividad. 4. S. Sebastian in Chimetta, on the River so called, first built by Francisco de Tharras above mentioned; who having found hereabouts some rich Mines of Silver, brought hither in the year 1554, a new Spanish Colony, and building Houses for his Miners in convenient places, occasioned the whole Tract to be called Tharras.

4. GUADALAJARA hath on the West, Xalisco on the East and South, some parts of Nova Hispania on the North, the Province of Zacatecas. Well watered with the River Barana, which runneth through the midst thereof, some of his by-rites moistening the other parts. The Countrey very wealthy in Mines of Silver, plentiful of Maize, and fortunate in the production of Wheat, and such other Fruits as were brought hither out of Europe. The Character of the People we have before, applied in general to all the Natives of New Gallicia, but most peculiar unto this.

Chief Towns herof, 1. Gudalajara, so called with reference to a Town of that Name in New Castile, and giving name unto the Province, situate on the Banks of the River Barana, or some branch thereof, in a sweet Air, and a most rich and pleasing Soil; there founded by Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1551, when he had perfected his Conquest: better advised in the choice of the place, then in that of Compostella before mentioned. A City of so good esteem, that it passeth for the Metropolis of all New Gallicia; honoured with the Courts of Judicature, the Residence of the Kings Treasurers, and a Bishops See, removed hither from Compostella, Anno 1570. Beautified on this last occasion with a fair Cathedral, a Convent of Franciscans, and another of Angeline Friars. 2. Del Spiritu Santo, built by the said Nonnez in that part of this Countrey which is called Tapone; but not else observable. 3. Santa Maria de la Laguna, built by the same Founder, 30 leagues on the East of Gudalajara; and the best defence of all this Province against the Chichimecas, a barbarous and untamed people on the North and East parts of this Countrey, who harbouring themselves in the thickets of the Woods, and some unknown Caves, do many times prey upon the Country; which they would utterly destroy, if they were not thus repressed.

5. ZACATECAS is bounded on the South with Guadaluara; on the North, with New Biscaya on the West, with Calcanan and some part of Xaltipa on the East, with Panuco, one of the Provinces of New Spain.

The Country is still a different nature. In the West parts, called properly Los Zacatecos, rich in Mines of Silver (no one Province more) but destitute of Wheat, Maize, Water, and all other Provisions; as if it were designed for some wealthy Miser, who could live upon the sight of Treasure. The Eastern parts, properly called Uxipita, not so well furnished with Silver, but most abundantly provided with all sorts of fruits; their Woods replenished with Deer, their Fields with Corn, and every Tree giving Entertainment to some Bird or other: In a word, nothing wanting in it either for Necessity or Pleasure. Of the people I find nothing singular, but that they are affirmed to be more indolent than the most of their Neighbours, whether by force or nature, (the Spaniards compelling them to drudge in their Silver-Mines) I determine not.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Los Zacatecos, neighbored by most wealthy Mines, 40 Leagues on the North of Guadaluara; is inhabited by about 500 Spaniards, who have here a Convent of Franciscans, 2. S. Martin, 27 Leagues from Zacatecos, the Mines whereof were first opened by Francisco de Tharra, before mentioned; who with many Slaves, and all things necessary for a War, was sent upon that Errand by Lewis de Velasco, then Viceroy of Mexico, Anno 1554. The Town inhabited by a Colony of 400 Spaniards, besides Women and Children, 3. S. Lopez, and 4. De Avila, not built amongst Mines as wealthy as those before, by the fame De Tharra; as also was 5. Erena, a small Town, but of the fame Estate for Silver; distant from Zacatecos 25 Leagues towards the North-west, 6. Nombre di Dios, in the most Northern parts of this Country, 68 Leagues from Guadaluara, the foundation of the fame De Tharra. Who having conquered the Natives, and quieted them after some rebellions by gentle usage, built this Town in a pleasant and fruitful Soil: and having got the Government of the Country which he had discovered, drew hither so many of the Spaniards and chief men of the Natives, by granting them the propriety of some Silver Mines, that it became the chief and best peopled Town of all this Province. 7. Durango, in the Valley of Guadaluara, about eight Leagues distant from Nombre di Dios, peopled by a Colony of Spaniards, conducted thither by Alonso Pacheco, at the appointment of De Tharra, to whom the Spaniards are indebted for all this Treasure. 8. Xerez de Fuentera, first built for the suppressing of some of the Savages, who used to infest the Borders towards Guadaluara, during the Regency of the Marquess of Villa Murrique, who then commanded in New Spain.

As for UXITIPA, it belonged once unto the Province of Panuco, subdued by Lopez de Mendoza, employed therein in by Nommez de Guzman, Anno 1529, at that time Governour of that Province. Disinherited from it since the Conquest of Zacatecos, and made a Member of the Prefecture of New Gallicia. The chief Town of it is called S. Lewis, built in a pleasant Valley by the said Pacheco, and by him peopled with a Colony of Spaniards: The Town not distant from Panuco above twenty Leagues.

6. NOVA BISCAYA, or New Biscaya, hath on the South Los Zacatecos; on the West, Cinaloa; on the North, Nova Mexicana; the Country towards the East not discovered hitherto. So called by Francisco de Tharra, by whom it first subdued, from the near Neighbourhood which it had unto Nova Gallicia, of which it hath been always since reckoned for a part.

The Country is subject in the Winter to great Frosts and Snows; but notwithstanding well provided of all things necessary, and wonderfully enriched with Mines of Silver. They have also some of Lead, which serve very fitly for the melting and purifying of the others used to this purpose not alone in these Mines of New Biscaya, but in those also of New Spain. The people resolute and stout, not conquered at the first Attempt, nor won so much by Force, as by fair Persuasions.

Places of most observation in it, 1. S. Barbara, and 2. S. John's, about three Leagues distant; built only for the benefit of the Mines adjoining. 3. Ende, the farthest Town which the Spaniards have towards the North, of whom a Colony was there planted; by reason of the adjoining Mines by Rodrigo del Rio, who did also fortify it by the direction of De Tharra, under whom a Colonel. Distant from S. Barbara and S. John's about 20 Leagues, and 120 Leagues from Los Zacatecos. More North by 70 Leagues at least, and within this Region, but not within the power of the Spaniards; are said to be those four great Towns which the Spaniards call Las Quatro Ciudades; but I have nothing of them certain.

This Country was first subdued by Francisco de Tharra, who after he had built Durango in the North parts of Los Zacatecos, & assured that Province, advanced with a Troop of 150 Horse for the Discovery and Conquest of his Northern Neighbours. Encountered at the first more with hunger and thirst, than with any opposition of the Inhabitants, inasmuch that they were fain to eat their Horses: and afterwards by the Rebellion of the Natives, who killed the greatest part of such Horses as were left uncastrated. But not discouraged herewith, nor with the many difficulties which he found in his way, being compelled to hew his passage through the Woods by the Swords of his Soldiers, he prevailed at last; and having settled it in peace, returned by the way of Cinaloa, which he also conquered, and planted there a Colony in the Town of S. John; as was said before.

7. NOVA MEXICANA is bounded on the South with New Biscaya; on the West, with Quivira; the Country on the North and East, not discovered hitherto, though some extend it Eastwards as far as Florida. Extended 250 Leagues from the Town and Mines of S. Barbara, and how much beyond that, none can tell; the Relations of this Country being too uncertain, and indeed incredible, that I dare say nothing positively of the Soil or People, but much less of the Towns and Cities which are said to be in it. So named by Antonio de Egeiza, Citizen of Mexico in New Spain, by whom discovered and subdued.

For first, they tell us of the People, that they are of great Stature, and that like enough is not to prove that they have the Art of dressing Chamois and other Leather, as well as the best Leather-dresser in all Flanidez; or that they have Shoes and Boots so well worked and soaked, that no Shoe-maker in all S. Martin could do it better.

Then for their Towns, that they are very fair and goodly, the Houses well built of Lime and Stone, some of them four Stories, and in most of them Stoves for the Winter season. The Streets even, and ordered in an excellent manner. Particularly, they tell us of a Town called 1. Chita, one of the five chief Towns of the Province of Cameles, which is said to contain eight Market-places, and all the Houses to be plastered and painted in most curious manner. 2. Of Acma, that it is situate on the top of a Rock, a great Town, yet no way unto it but by Ladders; and in one place a pair of Stairs, but exceedingly narrow, hewn out of the Rock; exceedingly well for-fortified by Nature, (they say true in that, if any things are true which they tell us of) and all their Water kept in Cisterns, (but no body can tell from whence they have it.) 3. Of Combar, on a Lake or Lagoon, the City seven leagues long, two broad; (a second Nimue) but the Houses (scarcely built amongst Hills and Gardens, which take up a great deal of the Room: Inhabited by a People of such strength and courage, that the Spaniards once faced it, and to wear away. Much of this stuff I could afford you, but by this Tale we may conjecture of the rest of the East.

The Country was first discovered by Augustino Rayaz, a Franciscan Friar, Anno 1580, who out of zeal to plant the Gospel in the North accompanied with two other Friars of that Order, and eight Souldiers, undertook the Adventure. But one of the Monks being killed by the Savages, the Souldiers paid the Peltrons, and gave over the Action. On their return, Betram, a Friar of the same Order (from whose mouth we must have the former Fictions) desirous to preserve the Lives of his Fellows which staid behind, encouraged one Antonio de Egeiza, a Native of Cordoba, but a Citizen of Mexico, to engage in such an holy Cause: who raising a Band of 150 Horse, accompanied with many Slaves and Beasts of Carriage, undertook the business. I omit the many Nations of the Conchs, Pajungater, Tobosi, Parrashyer, Tarrabumacer, Tepanuer, and many others as hard names, which he passed through in his way. But coming at the last to a great River which he called Del Noordo, there made a stand; caused the Country on both sides of it to be called Nova Mexicana, and a City to be built which he called New Mexico, situate in the 37 degree of Northern Latitude, and distant from Old Mexico five hundred Leagues: the name since changed to that of S. Poy, but still the Metropolis of that Province, the Residence of the Governour, and a pretty Garrison consisting of 250 Spaniards. Some other Towns he found at his coming thither, viz. 2. Sacarra, so called by the Spaniards, because of that Succour and Relief they found there for their half-starved Soldiers. 3. Seneca, 4. Plalaba, and 5. Sevillata; old Towns, but new Christened by the Spaniards, when the Inhabitants thereof did embrace the Gospel; each of them beautified with a Church, 6. S. John, built afterwards in the year 1599, by John de Oñate, who with an Army of five thousand followed the fame way which Egeiza went, and having got a great deal of Treasure, laid it out in this place, that it might be no incumbrance to him in his Advance. This is the most I daresay on for this Country. And this hath no such Wonders in it, but what an antic Fate may give credit to: Though I had rather believe the Friar's whole Relations, than go thither to disprove any part thereof.

OF NOVA HISPANIA.

NOVA HISPANIA is bounded on the East with a fair and large Arm of the Sea, called the Bay of New Spain, and the Gulf of Mexico; on the West, with parts of Nova Gallicia, and Mare del Zur; on the North, with the rest of New Gallicia, some part of Florida, and the Gulf; on the South with Mare del Zur, or the South-sea only. So called with relation to Spain in Europe, as the chief Province of that Empire in this New World; with reference to which, the Kings of Spain call themselves Rexes Hispaniarum, in the plural number.

It extendeth from the 15 degree of Latitude to the 26 exclusively, measuring it on the East-side by the Bay of Mexico to the North of Panuco; but six degrees less, measuring it on the West side to the Port of Natividad, where it joyneth with Gallicia Nova. Or making our account by Miles, it is in breadth from Panuco unto Mare del Zur, 200 Spanish Leagues, or 600 Italian miles; but hardly half as much on the other side. The length hereof, from the East point of Tucuman to the borders of Gallicia Nova, 1200 Italian miles, or 400 Leagues; which is just double to the breadth.

The Air exceedingly temperate, though situate wholly under the Torrid Zone; the heats thereof much qualified by those cooling Blasts which fan it from the Sea on three sides of it; and by those frequent Showers which fall continually in June, July, and August, the hottest seasons of the year. Abundantly enriched with inexhaustible Mines of Gold and Silver, some of Brass and Iron; plenty of Coe-

Nuts, of which we have spoke before; great store of Cashu, such a wonderful increase of Cochineal, that 5670 Arrobas of it (each Arroba containing 25 Buils of our English measure) have been shipped for Europe in one year. Where by the way, this Cochineal groweth on a small Tree or Shrub, having very thick Leaves, which they call Arroz; planted and ordered by them as the French do their Vines: out of the Seed whereof ariseth a small Worm, at first no bigger than a Flea, and the greatest not much bigger than our common Lady-Cows, which they much resemble; which feeding on the Leaves, and over-spreading all the ground in which they are, are gathered by the Natives twice a year, filled with Althes, or with Water, (but this last the best) dried to a powder in the shade, and so transported unto Europe. Here is also great plenty of Wheat, Barley, Pulse of all sorts, and of all such Plants and Roots as we set in gardens for the Kitchen: Pomegranates, Oranges, Limons, Citrons, Malacatoes, Figs and Cherries, even to superfluity; Apples and Pears in less abundance; few Grapes; and those few they have not fit for Wine; plenty of Maize, and other plants unknown in Europe; Birds and Beasts wild and tame of all sorts, and of each so farcely. Not thus in all places of it, nor in all alike; but some in one, some in another, according to the constitution of the Soil and Air; which is so different in this Country, that in such parts heretofore as are hot and dry, their Seed-time is in April or May, their Harvest in October; but in such places of it as are low and moist, they sow their Corn in October, and reap in May; thus having two Harvests in a year, and yet but one.

The People more ingenious than the rest of the Sava-

Ess, exquisite at some Mechanick Arts, especially in the making of their Feather-Pictures; and so industrious withal, to patient both of Thirst and Hunger, that they will sit at it an whole day without meat or drink turning every Feather to the light, upwards and downwards, every way, to see in which posture it will best fit the place intended to it. No better Goldsmiths in the World, nor men more expert any where in refining Metals; curious in painting upon Cotton whatsoever was presented to the Eye. But yet so barbarous withal, that they thought the Gods were pleased with the blood of men, which sometimes they sacrificed unto them. So ignorant, that when they first saw the Spaniards on Horse-back, they thought the Horfcs and Man to have been one Creature and would ask what the horfcs said, whet they heard them neigh. So careless of the worth of Gold, that they would part with great quantities of it for Knives, Glafs Beads, little Bells, and such petit Trifles. But whatsoever they once were, is not now material: the Spaniards having made full havock of this wretched People, that in 17 years they destroyed above six millions of them, roasting some, plucking out the Eyes of others, confining them in their Mines, and mercilessly casting them amongst wild Beasts, where they were devoured. As for those who do remain, besides their own natural ignominities, they have since learned the Civilities and Arts of Europe. What else concerns this Soil and People, we shall here more particularly; if we find it necessary, in their proper places.

Amongst the Rarities of this Country, (though there be many Plants in it of a singular nature) I reckon that which they call Maguey, or Malt, said to be one of the principal: a Tree which they both plant and drefs, as we do our Vines. It hath in it 40 kind of Leaves fit for several uses. For when they are tender, they make of them Conerves, Paper, Flax, Mantles, Mats, Shoes, Girdles, and Cordage: upon them there grow certain Prickles, so strong and sharp, that the People use them instead of Saws. From the top of the Tree cometh a Juice like Syrup; which if you seeth it, will become Honey; if purified, Sugar: they may make also Wine and vinegar of it. The Bark of it roasted maketh a good Plaster for Hurts and Sores; and from the highest of the Boughs comes a kind of Gum; which is a sovereign Antidote against Poysons.

Nor is it less a Rarity, though less useful to the good of Mankind (except it be to keep them in continual mind of the Fires of Hell) that they have a Mountain in this Country called Pompeumetepe, (situate in the Province of Mexico) which vomiteth Flames of Fire like Ætna; and another in the Province of Guaxaca, which sendeth forth two burning fountains, the one of red Pitch, and the other of black; a fit resemblance of those Fountains of Fire and Brimstone. Though they have many other Mountains, yet these are most memorable. And as for Rivers, though very well provided of that watery Commodity; yet here are none remarkable for length or greatness, but Panuco only, of which more presently. The want thereof is supplied by some famous Lakes, and the neighbourhood of the Gulf of Mexico. Amongst the Lakes, the principal are those of Mexico, (whereof more anon) and that of Chapala, bordering upon Gallicia Nova; which for its greatness hath the name of Mare Chapaleum, out of which there is made yearly great abundance of Salt. But that which is of greatest beauty is the Gulf of Mexico, the greatest and goodliest of the World: in form completely Circular, in compass no less than 900 miles; environed with the main Land, the Peninsulas of Florida and Jucatan, and the Isle of Cuba. Two only passages in and out, and both well fortified: the one betwixt the point of Jucatan and the Isle of Cuba, where the Tide with a violent Current entreth; the other betwixt the said Island and the Cape of Florida, where it makes as violent an Exit: the sea fo beady in the middle and yet safe enough, that ships are not to fail in it directly forwards, but must bend either towards the North or South, as their Journey lieth. Upon this Gulf the King of Spain hath always some Ships in readiness, by which he more affureth his Estates in this part of America than by all his Garrisons.

It comprehendeth the Provinces of 1. Panuco, 2. Mechuacan, 3. Mexicana, 4. Tlafcala, 5. Guaxaca, 6. Jucatan. Some others of less note, but reduced to these.

1. PANUCO, the most Northern Province of all New Spain, by some called Gusfapan, is bounded on the East with the Gulf of Mexico; on the West with Uxiatapa, a Member of the Province of Zacatecas in New Galicia; on the North, with Florida and some Countreys not yet discovered, from which parted by the River of Palm; so on the South-west, with Mechuacan; and on the South with Mexicana. So called from Panuco the chief River of it, which rising out of the Hills of Tepehuacan, bordering upon Cinatlao and Comitlan, and dividing New Biscay from the Province of Zacatecas, passeth through the middle of this Country, and so at last into the Gulf.

The length hereof is reckoned to be 90 Leagues, and the breadth as much. Divided into three Provinces. That towards Mexicana, called Azotlan, of a fruitful Soil, and not without some Mines of Gold; once very populous, till in the year 1522 a dispeopled in a manner by Ferdinando Cortez in his War against them. The other called Chila, less fruitful, but piously for want of people to improve the Land; for being formerly of a flouring courageous nature, and trusting overmuch to their Fens and Painfeels, they put the Spaniards to such trouble when they warred upon them, that the Conquerors so secure themselves from all future dangers, endeavoured to root them out, and destroy them utterly. The third lieth towards the River of Palm, inclined to barrenness, and unpleasant; but the name I find not.

Chief Towns hereof, at the coming of the Spaniards hither, 1. Las Casas, 2. Tixienym, 3. Nachapan, 4. Taquimier, 5. Tuzeteco, desolate and laid waste by the cruel Spaniards. Of most note now, 6. Tlanepala, and 7. Tlanepala, two small Burroughs in the Province of the River of Palm, (for so I call it) inhabited by the Natives only. 8. S. Kallap, another small Town, but in the Province of Chila, inhabited by a few Christians, with a Convent of Angolian Friars: sacked by the Savages in the year 1571. 9. Tampico, or S. Lewis de Tampico, a Colony of the Spaniards situate on the North Banks of the River Panuco, and at the very mouth thereof; where it hath a very large Haven, but so barred with Sands, that no Ship of great burthen can make use of it: the River otherwise so deep, that Vessels of 500 Tun might full 60 Leagues at least in it against the Stream. 10. S. Steven del Puerto, on the Southern side of that River, in the Latitude of 23, about 65 Leagues on the North of Mexico, from the Sea eight Leagues; now the Metropolis, and Town of greatest Trade in all this Country. Built by Ferdinando Cortez in the place where formerly had stood Panuco, once the chief City of the Province, but by him destroyed. Opposite hereto, on the other side of the River lie great flocks of Salt-pits, out of which the people of this Town raise their greatest profit. 11. S. Jago de los Valles, or S. James in the Valleys, 25 leagues Westward (but inclining to the South west) from S. Steven del Puerto; situate in an open Country, and therefore fenced about with a Wall of Earth: To the Inhabitants whereof (all Spaniards, as in that before) the King of Spain hath granted many fair possessions, to defend thoſe parts (then being the borders of his Estates) against the Savages.

This Country first attempted by Francisco Garza, but the Conquest of it finished by Cortez, as before is said: each striving, as it seemeth, who should most deface it, and be enrolled for the greatest Man-killer of the two. But having carried on the course of their Victories almost as far as to the River of Palm, they desisted there; either because already glutted with humane Blood, or that the conquest of those parts would not quit the charge. Inasmuch as in all that Country, from the River of Palm to the Cape of Florida, though lying all along on the Gulf of Mexico, the Spaniards have not one foot of ground: secure enough, because it lieth all along that Gulf, that no other Nation can possess it.

2. MECHUACAN hath on the North-East Panuco, on the East, Mexicana; on the South, part of Tlafcala, on the west, the main Ocean; and on the North, the Province of Xalisco in New Galicia. So called from the abundance of Fish, which the Lakes and Rivers did afford them; the word in their own Language signifying Locum Piscium, or Country of Fish.

The breadth hereof on the Sea-coast is 80 Leagues, in the borders towards Mexicana but sixty only. The length I find not yet agreed on. Blest with an Air so found and sweet, that sick Folks come hither out of other Countreys to recover their Health. Well stored with Rivers, some Lakes, innumerable Springs of Running Water, and here and there some hot Baths issuing from the Rocks. The Soil so plentifully productive of all sorts of Grain, (even to admiration) that in some parts hereof four measures of Seed have brought forth 600 measures of the same Grain in the following Harvest. Well wooded, and by reason of its Springs and Rivers, full of excellent Pastures; and yet not yielding unto any part of all America for Medicinal Herbs and Plants, of very sovereign nature for the Good of Mankind. It affordeth also store of Amber, Mulberry-Trees, Silk, Wax, Honey, and such other things as chiefly serve for Pomp and Pleasure.

The people tall of Stature, but strong and active; of a good Wit, and skilled in many excellent Manufactures. They speak four Languages of their own; but that most generally used is by the Spaniards called the Tlafcalan Tongue; which though it be an elegant and copious Language, yet most of them speak the Spanish also. More pliant to the Manners and Apparel of that Nation, than the rest of New Spain, (the Mexicans excepted only) and so inclinable to the Gospel, that they are almost all gained from their old Idolatries. Inasmuch that the whole Country being divided into fifty Parishes, every Parish hath its several Priests and inferior Ministers, who in the Language of the place do instruct the people in which they preach to them, and hear their Confessions: besides many Convents of Dominicans and of Angolian Friars.

It containeth in it upwards of 150 Towns of Burroughs, besides scattering Villages: ninety of which have Free Schools in them, and almost every one a Spittle for relief of the Sick. The Principal thereof, 1. Zincunze, the Seat of the old Kings of Mechuacan; in the first Times of Christianity in this Country made a Bishop's See, till removed to Pascuar. The first Bishop Vladimir de Quiriga, 2. Pascuar, of no great note at present, but that the Bishop's See was removed thither, because nearer to Mexico; in that distant 47 Leagues. 3. Valledor, now the chief City of this Province, and the Bishop's See, removed hither from Pascuar, and here finally settled in a Fair Cathedral, Ann 1544. situate near a large Lake, (said to be bigger than that of Mexico) which doth not only afford the City great store of Fish, but yieldeth them the opportunity of several fisheries which they take in Boats upon the Water. The Lake and City by the Natives called Guanayacaro. 4. S. Michael, in the way from Mexico (to which distant about 40 Leagues) to the Silver Mines of Zacatecas, built built by Lewis de Velasco, then Vice-Roy of Mexico, to defend the People of this Province from the Chichimecas, a barbarous, and hitherto an unconquered People, who terribly molest the Nations upon whom they border. 5. S. Philip, built at the same time by the said Velasco, 6. Concepcion de Saylas, 17 Leagues from Valledor, 35 from Mexico; of the foundation of Martin Enriquez, the Vice-Roy, Ann 1570. to be a Stage for Travellers in their Journeys Northwards, 7. Guacanatlan, bordering on Panuco, and not far from S. Jago de los Valles, rich in Mines of Silver. Then on the Sea we have, 8. Acatlan, on the borders of New Galicia, two miles from the Ocean; a Town of not above 30 Houses, with a little Church; but neighboured by a large and safe Road for Shipping; (by the Spaniards called Malacca) which makes it seldom without the company of Sailors, who their Lido, (or Portus Navium) a noted and convenient Haven, from whence they commonly set sail to the Philippine Islands; pillaged and burnt by Captain Carandish in his Circumnavigation of the World. 10. S. Jago, (or S. Jago de Buena Esperanza) a little on the South of Natividad, the Shores whereof are said to be full of Pearls. 11. Colima, ten Leagues from the Sea, but more South than the other; built in the year 1522, by Gonzalo de Sandoval. 12. Zacatlan, by the Spaniards called Concepcion; situate on the Banks of a large (but nameless) River, which rising about the City of Tlafcala, passeth by this Town, and thence with two open mouths runneth into the Sea.

This Province, at the coming of the Spaniards hither was a distinct Kingdom of it self; not subject nor subordinate to the Kings of Mexico, as were most of the Princes of these parts: the Frontiers of the Kingdom fenced with Stakes of Wood like a Palizado, to hinder any sudden Incurſion of the Mexican Forces. The last King, called Tanguayan Bimbicha, submitted of his own accord to Cortez, Ann 1522. and willingly offered himself to Baptism. But the Spaniards were not pleased with either, because deprived thereby of the Spoil of the Country. But at last, Nunez de Guzman, then President of the Courts of Justice in Mexico, picked a Quarrel with him, accused him falsely (as is said) by the very Spaniards) of some practices against his King, burnt him alive with most barbarous and unheard-of Cruelty, and so confiscated his Estate.

3. MEXICANA is bounded on the East with the Gulf of New Spain; on the West, with Mechuacan; on the North with Panuco, and some part of New Galicia; on the South, with Tlafcala and part of the Southern Sea. So called from Mexico, the chief City not of this Province only, but of all America.

It is in breadth from North to South, measuring by the Bay of Mexico, 130 Leagues; thence growing narrower, in the midland parts hardly above fifty; and on the Shores of Mare del Zur not above fifteen. The length hereof extendeth from one Sea to the other; that is to say, from the Point of Lobos in the Province of Papantlan, on the Gulf of Mexico, to the Haven of Acapulco on the Southern Ocean; but the determinate number of Miles I do not where find. But measuring it from 17 degrees and an half of Latitude, unto the 22, and allowing something for the slope, we may conclude it to be much of the same length as it is in breadth, that is to say, about one hundred and thirty Leagues.

The

The Country is inferior to Peru in the plenty and purity of Gold and Silver, but far exceeding it both in the Mechanical and Ingenious Arts which are here professed, and in the abundance of Fruits and Cattel: of which last here is fish there, that many a private man hath 40000 Kine and Oxen to himself. Fish is here also in great plenty; that only which is drawn out of the Lake whereon Mexico standeth, being reported worth 20000 Crowns yearly to the Kings Exchequer. The people for the most part witty and industrious, full of Valour and Courage; good Handicraftsmen, if they stoop low as to Trades and Manufactures; rich Merchants, if they give themselves to more gainful Traffick; and hardy Soldiers, if trained up and employed in service. Their Ancient Arms were Slings and Arrows; since the coming of the Spaniards practised on the Harquebuse. In a word, what was said before of New Spain in general, as to the Soil and People of it most applicable to this.

Chief Rivers herof, 1. Los Topes, which parteth this Province from that of Tlaxcala. 2. Chala, and 3. Mita, both running Eastward towards the Gulf. 4. Papagani, in the way from Mexico to Acapulco with a fair Bridge over it. 5. La Balsas, of a violent course, and in biggness equal unto Tago in Spain; passable only by a Bridge made of Rafts and Reeds, not very fitly joined together. 6. The River of S. Francis, both large and swift, but in some parts fordable. Mountains of note I find not any which require a more particular consideration; and so pass them over the more easily.

Towns of most note in it, 1. Mexico, the Seat of an Archbishop, and of the Spanish Vice-Roy; who hath the power to make Laws and Ordinances, to give Directions, and determine Controversies; unless it be in such great Causes which are thought fit to be referred to the Council of Spain. This City was first situate in the Lakes and Islands, like Venice; every-where interlaced with the pleasant Currents of Fresh and Sea-waters; and carrying a face of more Civil Government than any of America, though nothing, if compared with Europe. But the Town being destroyed by Cortez, it was built afterwards on the firm Land on the edge of the Lake, and bordering on a large and spacious Plain. The Plain on which it bordereth is said to be 70 Leagues in compass, environed with high Hills, on the tops whereof the Snow lieth continually. In the middle of which Plain are two great Lakes, the least of them forty miles in circuit, the one salt, and the other fresh: that of the one salt, and the other flowing up into the other. On the Banks of the salt Lake standeth the City of Mexico, which many other goodly Towns and stately Houses; on which Lake also 50000 Wherries are continually playing. The Town in compass is six miles, and containeth 6000 Houses of Spaniards, and 60000 Indians. It is a by-word, That at Mexico there are four fair things; viz. The Women, the Apparel, the Houses, and the Streets. Here is also a Printing-house, an University, and a Mint, the Cathedral Church, ten Convents of Nuns, several Houses of Jesuits, Dominicans, Franciscans, Augustinians, and other Religious Orders; some Colleges, many Spittles and Hospitals, and other publick buildings of great state and beauty. By the Natives it was anciently called Tenchtlan, the name of Mexico being given on a new occasion, of which more hereafter. Most noticeably undamaged by the breaking in of the Waters, Anno 1629, which swelled so high, that they not only overwhelmed the meaner Houses, but the Vice-Roy's Palace; drowned many thousands of the People, and destroyed the Household-stuff of the rest. Occasioned by the Avarice of the Kings Ministers, who had inverted the Money to their private use, which should have fortified the Banks. But being a rich and wealthy City it soon recovered of that Blow, attaining in short time to such infinite Riches, that generally the Merchants, Trades-Men and Artificers, do brave it in a greater State and more splendid Equipage than any people under Heaven of the like condition. 2. Tezcuco, situate on the same Lake, but six leagues from Mexico; heretofore twice as big as Sevilla; and for the beauty of the Streets, and elegance of the Houses, not inferior to any. Served with fresh Water from the Hills, brought in Pipes and Conduits, though seated on the brink of a salt Lake. 3. Guanaxaca, built wholly in the Lake, like Venice, and therefore by the Spaniards called Venezuela; a City of 2000 Households: the way unto it over a Causeway made of Plinths, half a League long, and about twenty Spans in breadth. 4. Uxatlapala, half in the Lake, and half without, with many Ponds of fresh Water, and a beautiful Fountain. A City of 10000 Households, six Leagues from Tezcuco, and two from Mexico. 5. Mexicatzingo, a Burrough of 4000, and 6. Cuycan, one of 6000 Families; both upon the Lake: bountied in the Times of their Paganism with many Temples, so gorgeously set out to the Eye, that after off they seemed of Silver; most of them now converted into Monasteries and Religious Houses. 7. Chulula, the finest of all the Lake, scarce excepting Mexico, with which it anciently contended both for state and biggness: said to contain 20000 Families, and to be bountied with so many Temples, that their Towers equalled the number of the days of the year. The people so addicted unto their Idolatries, and so barbarous in their bloody and beastly Sacrifices, that no fewer then 6000 Indians of both Sexes were yearly murdered on their Altars. 8. Mitatlan, seated on a high Hill, begirt about with most pleasant Groves and shady Woods. A Town of about 30000 Inhabitants, the Villages about the Hill being reckoned in: situate 14 Leagues or two days Journey from Mexico, in the way to the Province of Panuco, the Highway on both sides set with fruitful Trees, to the great comfort and refreshment of the way-going man. 9. Guadalupe, twenty Leagues from Mitatlan, a Manor to which 40000 of the Natives do owe Suit and Service. 10. Antequera, on the South of the City of Mexico, at the foot of the Mountain Popocatepetl; a Town belonging to the Marquels of Valia, and seated in the most delicious place of all New Spain. 11. Acachula, on the North-east of Mexico, betwixt it and the Gulf, bordering on the Province of Papantla. 12. Acapulco, an Haven-Town of the South-sea, situate on a safe and capacious Bay at the entrance of a large broad, and in the body of it full of convenient Stations and Docks for Shipping: so that it is accounted the fairest Haven of all those Seas. At the bottom of it towards the West stands the Town and Castles the Castle opportunely seated on a little Portland, both to command the Town, and secure the Port: well walled, and fortified with four very strong bulwarks, on which are planted good store of Ordnance; the Garrison consisting ordinarily of 400 Souldiers: throughout the rather in regard of the usual intercourse which is betwixt this Port and the Philippine Islands.

The original Inhabitants of this Country (as far at least as their Records are able to reach) were the Chichimecas, now the most rude and barbarous Savages of these parts, together with the Omteques, somewhat more Civil than the rest, but yet rude enough. By these possessed till about the year 902, as it is conjectured from their Annals, when vanquished and dispossessed by some new Comers, whom they called by one Name Nauatlans: sitting, as it is conceived, from those parts of Gabriel Nova, which are now called Nova Mexicana, Anno 920, or thereabouts, but lingering in their March, and walling all the Countreys as they lay before them. Of these there were were seven Tribes in all, i.e. the Sachimilts, the Chalcs, the Tapanecs, the Culucs, the Tlaxcalas, the Tlaxcalucas; all of them ferled in these parts, and the five first about the Lake, before the coming of the seventh Tribe, which was that of the Mexicans, so called from Mexi, their chief captain; who much delighted with the situation and conveniences of Tenchtlan, then a ruined Town, caused it to be re-built and beautified, by the name of Mexico. This Town from that time forwards was reputed the Head City of their Common-wealth; the six Tribes governing in common, or the Chiefs rather of those Tribes in the names of the whole, after an Aristocratical manner. But weary at the last of this equal power, which the prevalency of some Tribes had made very unequal; the Mexicans, one of the weakest of the Tribes, oppressed by the rest, resolved to separate themselves, and to commit the ordering of their Affairs to a King of their own, at first elected by themselves, but afterwards, when once they had conquered most of the other Tribes, the choice was entrusted unto fix, one for every Tribe, (the Tlaxcaltecs, which was the seventh of their Tribes, and the Founders of Tlaxcala, governing themselves long before as a State apart: who in their choice had an especial eye on those which were strong and active, and fit for Military employments; the People holding it a commendable meritorious act to kill their Kings, if once they were reputed Cowards. The Policy and Insinuations of this Mexican Kingdom I forbear to write of, farther than as they lie before me in way of their Story, digested by the Government and succession of their several Kings, whose names and actions do occur in the following Catalogue of

B. Ch.

The Kings of MEXICO.

- 1222 1. Acamapitzli, Nephew to the King of Culiacan, but of the Mexican blood by the Fathers side, elected for the first King; who joynted Culiacan and Tongancan unto his Estate, and settled that Kingdom at his death in the way of election.
- 1273 2. Vitzcoitzli, Son of Acamapitzli, subdued the Tribe of the Sachimilts, and others of the neighbouring Nations.
- 1394 3. Huizacotl, Son of Vitzcoitzli, conquered the Tribes of the Chalcs and Culucs, with many other Nations of the old Inhabitants.
- 1415 4. Chimalpahuac, Son of Huizacotl, won the Town of Tehuacan, and reduced the rebellious Chalcs under his Command.
- 1425 5. Jichau, Brother of Huizacotl, by the Valour of his Cousin Tlaxcaltec freed himself from the yoke of the Tapanecs, to whom the Mexicans had before that been Tributaries, and added their Dominions unto his Estate, conquering all the Nations round about him. After whose death the Elctors by a joint consent chose Tlaxcaltec for their King, as a man of whose Vertue they had formerly made trial. But he very nobly refused it, saying, that it was more convenient for the Commonwealth that another should be King, and that he should execute that which was for the necessity of the State, than to lay the whole burden upon his back; and that without being King, he would not leave to labour for the Publick, as well as if he were. Upon this generous refusal they made choice of Moctezuma the first.
- 1458 6. Moctezuma, one of the Brothers of Chimalpahuac, brought in the Custom of using no other Sacrifices at their Coronations, but of such Prisoners as the new King should first take in the Wars. By the Valour and good Fortune of Tlaxcaltec he subdued so many of the Nations, (whose names I hold unnecessary to here repeat) that he extended his Estate from one Sea to the other.

- 1467 7. Ayazacati, the Nephew of Jichau by his Son Tezomacuilapetl, enlarged his Empire by the Conquest of Tenchtlan 200 miles from Mexico, to fit himself with Sacrifices for his Coronation; and brought the Lord of Tlaxcala, who rebelled against him, to so hard a freight, that he was forced to break his neck from the top of a Temple.
- 1479 8. Tenchtlatzi, the Son of Ayazacati, added twelve Cities with their Territories to the Mexican Empire.
- 1484 9. Aluicazotl, Brother of Tenchtlatzi, extended his Borders to Guatemala, repaired or rebuilt a great part of Mexico, and brought thither a Channel of fresh Water.
- 1502 10. Moctezuma II. Son of Ayazacati, before his Coronation conquered 44 Cities. He ordained that no Plebeian should bear any Office in his Court, and in the 18. year of his Reign was subdued by Cortez.

As for this Cortez, to whom the Spaniards stand indebted for the Kingdom of Mexico, he was born in Medina, a Town of Extremadura, 1485; and in the nineteenth year of his Age employed himself in the Trade and business of America, for the improvement of his Fortunes, Anno 1511. he went as Clerk unto the Treasurer for the life of Cuba; where he husbanded his Affairs so well, by carrying over Kine, Sheep and Mares, and bringing Gold for them in Exchange, that in short time he was able to put in 2000 Capitanes for his stock, as Partner with Alondro de Dure, a wealthy Merchant. Growth richer, he was taken to be Partner with Juan Velazquez, in the Discovery of Tehuacan and the parts near Tezcuco, Anno 1518. And now resolved to venture all his stock both of Friends and Money, he furnished himself of eleven Ships, and with 550 Men, set sail from Spain, and arrived at the Island of Azuclama, (now called Santa Cruz) and failing up the River of Tehuacan, sacked the Town of Panuco, the Inhabitants refusing to sell him Victual. After this by the help of his Horse and Ordnance, he discomfited 40000 of the naked Savages, gathered together to revenge themselves for the sack of that Town; and received the King thereof in Vassallage to the Crown of Spain. Being told that Westward he should meet with fine Mines of Gold, he turned his course for the Haven of S. John de Ulva; where landing he was entertained by Tenchtlatzi, Governour of the Town and Country for the King of Mexico: who understanding of his coming, and that he was the Servant of so great an Emperour, (of which Tenchtlatzi had informed him by especial Messengers) sent him many rich Presents both of Gold and Silver. Inflamed at the sight hereof, he resolved to go unto the place where such Treasures were, took possession of the Country in the name of Charles the fifth, King of Spain and Emperour, and building there the Town of La Vera Cruz, left in it 150 of his men. Attended by no more than 400 Foot, 15 Horse, and six pieces of Ordnance, he pursued his Enterprize; by practice gained unto him those of Zempallan and Tlaxcala; whom he undertook to be ill-affected to Moctezuma: assisted with whose Forces he passed on for Mexico, sacked the Town of Chulula (a Town of 40000 Households) in his march: kindly received into Mexico by the frightened King, whom he caused to acknowledge himself a Vassal to Spain, and to present him, in the name of a Tribute, with so much Treasure as amounted to 160000 Castellans of Gold. A Quarrel growing not long after, Moteczuma, the voluntary King was by one of his own Subjects killed in the public market; and the Spaniards driven out of the Town. But aided with the whole Forces of the Tlascalans, and a Recruitment of more Spaniards, (first thither on a Design against him) he made up an Army of 100000 Savages, 500 Spaniards Foot, 80 Horse, 17 pieces of Ordnance; and having with great diligence made ready a Navy of 13 Gallies, and 6000 Canoes or Boats, laid siege unto the City both by Sea and Land. After a Siege of three months, the City is taken, sacked and burnt August 13. 1521. But afterwards rebuilt more beautifully than it was before. Thus fell this mighty Kingdom into the hands of the Spaniards by the valour and good fortune of Cortez, a private Adventurer; endowed for that good service by Charles the fifth with the Town and Territory of Tecotepecque, in the Province of Guaxaca, and many other fair Estates in the Province of Mexico, and dignified with the Title of Marquess of Valle.

As for the Kings of Mexico, they are said to have worn a Crown resembling that which is now used by the Dukes of Venice. His Coronation was held with great Pomp, but most bloody Sacrifices. His Revenues thought to be almost infinite, raised out of all Commodities, and paid in kind, whether Natural, or Artificial only: the King participating of the fruits of all mens Labour, and sharing with them in their wealth: some paying in Cups full of powder of Gold, of two handfulls apiece; some Diamonds, and Beads of gold; Plates of Gold of three quarters of a yard long, and four fingers broad; Turquoise stones, Golden Targets, rich Feather-Pictures, &c. not to say any thing of matters of inferior value. All which in such a wealthy and large Estate, must needs afford him a Revenue equal to the greatest Monarch. And for the encouragement of his Soldiers and Men of War, here were ordained three Orders of Knighthood, (or at least such distinctions of personal merit as had resemblance to such Orders): the first distinguished by a Red Ribband, the second called the Lion or Tiger Knight, and the third the Grey Knight: all privileged amongst other things to be clothed in Cotton, wear Breches, to adorn themselves with Gold and Silver, and to have Vessels gilt or painted; a high point; and not permitted unto any else. But it is time that I proceed to the rest of the Provinces.

4. TLASCALA lieth betwixt Mexicana and Guaxaca, extended from one Sea to the other. The length hereof from Sea to Sea an hundred leagues; the breadth along the Shores of the Gulf reckoned 80 leagues, on the South Sea not above eighteen. So called from the abundance of Maize which they make their Bread of: the word in that Language signifying Lesser Panis, or the Place of Bread, the same with Babibow in the Hebrews.

The Country is very plentiful both of Corn and Cattle, full of rich Pastures, and wonderfully stored with Maize; Level and plain, except towards the Sea, where occur a large Chain of craggy Mountains. The richer in the fruits of Nature for those fair and pleasant Rivers wherewith it is watered. The principal of which, Rio de Grigalea, so called from John de Grigalea, who first discovered it; imployed herein by James Velasquez, the adventurer of Cortez. 2. Rio de Zempol, so called from the Town of Zempollan, about which it rifteth. 3. Zabante, which makes its way through the Chain of Mountains before mentioned, and falleth with the former into the Gulf. 4. Rio di Zactacila, a River of the longest course in all this Province: rising near Tlascala, and falling many leagues off into Mare del Sur. The people much of the same nature with those of Mexico, though upon jealousies of State their most bitter enemies; of which the Spaniards made good use to advance their Conquests on that Kingdom.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Tlascala it self, which gives name to the Province: in former times governed after the form of a Common-wealth, according to the Democratical Models. Situate on a little Hill betwixt two Rivers, and in the middle of a large, but pleasant Plain, 60 miles in compass. So populous at the coming of the Spaniards hitherto, that it contained 300000 Inhabitants, now scarce 50000. It had four Streets, (or rather Quarters) each of them governed by a Captain in time of War: and in the midst a Market-place, so fair and spacious, that 30000 persons might assemble in it to buy and sell, or for any other business. 2. Puebla de los Angeles, (the City of Angels) but most commonly Angos: built by Sebastian Ramirez, Anno 1531. in the way from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico, from which last 22 leagues distant. A Bishops See, and thought to contain in it 1500 Families. 3. Zempollan, on the River so named, the Inhabitants wherof did great service to Ferdinando Cortez in his Conquest of Mexico. 4. Napulica, of great resort for a Fair of Cattle; and such a kind of Court for ordering the Trade thereof, as we call the Pie-powder. 5. Guaxacoingo, a pleasant and well-peopled Town, situate at the foot of the burning Mountain before mentioned, by the ashes and embers wherof the Fields are many times annoyed. 6. Segura, or Segura de la Frontera, in the Region of Tehuacan, built by Cortez the next year after the Conquest of Mexico, with fair Streets and handsome Houses; by whom people with Spaniards. 7. Vera Cruz, the first Town built in this Country by the said Cortez, now a Bishops See: situate near unto the Gulf, and a great Thorough-fare from thence to the City of Mexico, from which distant about 60 leagues. 8. S. John de Ulloa, the most noted Port of all this Province; fenced with a Peer against the fury both of Winds and Sea; defended naturally by Rocks and Quick-sands lying before it, and by two Bulwarks well fortified and manned on both sides of the entrance. 9. Medellin, built by Cortez, Anno 1525, and planted with Spaniards: so called in memory of a Town of the same name in Extremadura, in which he was born: situate on the banks of the River Almeria.

The Tlascalans were originally one of the seven Tribes which drove the Chichimecas out of their possessions; and either finding no room left for them on the banks of the Lake, or else willing to submit alone, withdrew themselves from the rest, founded the City of Tlascala, and there erected a Democratical Estate. Stomached for this by the other Tribes, and many times invaded by those of Mexico, after they had subdued the rest, they still maintained themselves against all Attempts; and in the end assisted Cortez in the destruction of that Kingdom, they so deadly hated. Privileged for that reason by the Spaniards, and exempted from all kind of Tribute, (except he a handful of Wheat for every person) and suffered to live under his Protection in the former Government. The Province given us by this name is said to contain 200 good Towns and Burroughs, 1000 Villages and upwards; and in them 150000 of the Natives, besides Spanish Colonies. Distributed into 36 Claffes or Rural Decanies for Ecclesiastical Government, in which are thought to be 30 Convents and Religious Houses.

5. GUAXACA is bounded on the West with Tlascala; on the East with Jucatan and Chiapa, one of the Province of Guatemala on the North, with the Bay of Mexico; and on the South, with Mare del Sur. Extended tended on the South-side to the length of an hundred miles, but on the Bay to 50 only: in breadth from Sea to Sea, where it bor'eth on Tlascala, 120 leagues; not above 60 where it cometh on Chiapa. So called from Guaxaca, once the chief Town of these parts, now named Antequera.

The Air hereof is very found and sweet, and the Soil as fruitful: plentiful not only of those Commodities which are common with the other Provinces of this Country: but of such quantities of Silks, and store of Mulberries, that the Natives paid their Tithes as the Spaniards do, that very Revenue, would suffice to endow five Bishopsricks, as good as that which they have already. Scarce any River of this Country but hath Sands of Gold: such plenty of Cochineo, (a rich Grain used in dying Scarlets, of which before) as all of Calffa, Gold, Silver, and other Metals; that if the people did but add some industry to the wealth of the Country, they might be the richest men in all America. But being naturally slothful, and impatient of labour, they lose all opportunities of gathering Riches and live but from hand to mouth, as we use to say. Docile enough, and so indulgent unto those who take pains to teach them, that here are reckoned 120 Convents of Dominican Friars, besides other Schools: these last conceived the greater number.

It is subdivided into many particular Provinces, (we may call them Wapentakes or Hundreds): 1. Miltepa. 2. Tlaxtepec. 3. Zapoteca. 4. Guaxacualco. 5. Guaxacatl. and the 6. Valle of Guaxaca, this last most memorable, in that it gave the Title of Marquess of Valle to the famous Cortez. Towns of most observation, 1. Tecozapalan, once the chief Town of Zapoteca, and the Seat of their King. 2. Guaxacatl, of great note for a Labyrinth not far off, hewn out of the Rock, but by whom none knoweth. 3. Antequera, in the Valley of Guaxaca, a stately City and beautified with a fair Cathedral: as that is with Marble pillars of great height and thickness. 4. S. Yldefonso in the Province of Zapoteca. 5. S. Jago in the Valley of Nexcala, seated upon a lofty Hill. 6. San Spiritus Sant, distant about three leagues from the shores of the Gulf, in the Province of Guaxacualco, the foundation of Gaspar de Sandoval, Anno 1526. 7. Aguatulco, or Guatulco, a noted and convenient Port on the South Sea, much used by those which trade from Vera Cruz, Mexico, and from Mexico to any Port of the Southern Seas. By consequence rich, and therefore plundered to the purpose both by Drake and Cavendish, in their Voyages about the World. 8. Tecotepecque, a Port of the same Sea also, but of far less note. Burroughs and Villages in all 650, inhabited by 150000 of the Natives liable to Tribute, besides Women and persons under Age; not reckoning the Spaniards in the number.

6. JUCATAN, environed on three parts by the Sea like a Demi-Iland, is said to the Continent only where it meeteth with Guaxaca, the farthest point of it opposite to the Isle of Cuba. Discovered first by Fernandes de Cordova, imployed therein by Don Christopher Morante, Anno 1517, and called Jucatan, not as some conceit it, from Jutan the son of Hobos, who they think came out of the East, where the Scripture placeth him, (Gen. 10. 30.) to inhabit here; but from Jucatan, which in the Language of the Country signifieth, What say you? For when the Spaniards at their first coming thither asked the name of the place, the Savages understanding what they meant, replied, Jucatan, that is, What say you? whereupon the Spaniards always after called it by this name.

The compass of it, taking the Province of Tabasco into the account, is said to be 500 miles, or 300 Leagues. The Air hot, and the Country destitute of Rivers, not otherwise provided of Water but by Pits and Trenches, which abundantly supply that want. Sufficiently barren, the Soil not bearing Wheat, or any European Fruits, nor many of the growth of America in other places. Nor have they Mines of Gold or Silver, or any other Metal, to enrich the people; who must either live by Trades and Labour, or else beg their bread. Nothing remarkable in the Country, but that here seemed to be some remnants of Christianity at the Spaniards first coming thither: the people constantly observing a kind of Baptism, which they call in their own Language a second birth, expelling by that word a Regeneration; not suffering any one to marry until so initiated. And possible enough it is, that this may be the Country upon which Madeo or Owen fell; who though he might by some good fortune be brought back to Wales, yet that he should make any such second Voyage hither as is said in their Chronicles, I by no means grant.

Towns of most observation in it, 1. Merida, almost in the Navel of it, situate in the 20 degrees of Latitude, the ordinary Seat of the Governour, and the See of a Bishop, 7 distant from the Sea on each side about twelve Leagues; and called thus from a Town of that name in Spain, with which it is thought to have some resemblance. 2. Yalladolid, 50 Leagues from Merida, beautified with a most famous Monastery of Franciscan Friars. 3. Campche, (or S. Francisco, as the Spaniards call it) situate on the Shore of the Gulf. A Town, when first known to the Spaniards, of 3000 Houles, and beautified with such Monuments of Art and industry, as shewed that there was somewhat in this people which was not barbarous: since that no more observable then for being suddenly surprized by Parker, an English Captain, Anno 1596, who carried away with him the Governour, the wealth of the Town, and many Prisoners; & besides a great Ship full of Gold, Silver and other the like precious Commodities, designed for the King of Spain's own use. 4. Tabasco situate in the best part of this Country, so different from all the rest, that it is made by some a distinct Province from it. By the Spaniards called Villa de Nuestra Señora de la Victoria, most commonly Yucatan only; and that in memory of the first fortunate Victory which Cortez had upon this people, arming themselves against him for the Seizing of Pontombon, 5. Pontombon, sacked by Cortez for daring to supply him with Victual. 6. Salamanca, so called with reference to a Town of that name in Spain.

Along the Coast of this Country lie many Ilands; viz. 1. La Yuca. 2. Delosombrado. 3. Triangulo. 4. Permita. 5. Las Negritas. 6. Las Alacenas, all within the Gulf. Without it, 7. Zaratán. 8. Panama. 9. Lamany, 10. De Madres, or the Isle of Women, 11. Cazamit, by some called Acaumit. This last the biggest is 15 Leagues long, 5 broad; and the most remarkable, as being the usual way which the Spaniards travelled in their Discoveries of this Country from the Isle of Cuba. For here first landed Ferdinando de Cordoba, Anno 1517, who pailing over to Jucatan (but four Leagues distant) brought back nothing but Stripes. Here the next year arrived John de Grigalea, in the same pursuit; who pailing by Jucatan to the Province of Guaxaca, left his name behind him to a River. And finally here landed the most fortunate Cortez, who, coasting about the Demi-Iland, landed near Tabasco, and there first handled his good fortune with a notable Victory. Yet neither the Iland nor peninsula were discovered perfectly till the year 1527, when both subdued by Francisco de Manico to the Crown of Spain. The Iland is now called Santa Cruz.

GUATIMALA.

GUATIMALA is bounded on the North by Jucatan and the Gulf of Honduras; on the South, with Mare del Zur; on the East, (or the South-east rather) with Castilla Andra; on the West, with New Spain. Extended 300 Leagues in length, upon the Coasts of Mare del Zur; but measuring by a straight line, not above 240, the breadth thereof 140 leagues where broadest; in most places narrower. So called from Guatemala the chief Province; as that from the prime City of it, honoured with the Seat of the Governor, and the Courts of Justice.

The nature of the Soil and People (if differing in any material thing from those before) we will consider in the View of those several parts into which this Country is divided. The principal whereof, 1. Chiapa, 2. Verapaz, 3. Guatemala, specially so called, 4. Honduras, 5. Nicaragua, 6. Yucatan. The rest of less note easily reduced thence.

1. CHIAPA hath on the West New Spain; on the East, Verapaz; on the North, part of Jucatan; and Mare del Zur on the South. Extended 40 leagues in length, not much less in breadth; and anciently inhabited by four Nations, all of several Languages.

The Soil not very natural for Corn or fruits, though Pot-herbs brought from Spain thrive well as do Beans and Lentils; yet Vines and other richer Fruits seldom come to good. Wood-Vines they have, which yield a very pleasant Pulp; and if well ordered, might be brought to afford more profit. Their Trees most of them greater than in other places, as Pines, Oaks, Cedars, and the Cypress; whose Woods of Walnuts, but the Nut not so big as those of Europe. Some of their Trees yield Rofin, some such precious Gums as in other places are not usual; and some there are whose leaves being dried unto a powder, afford a sovereign Plaster for excoriating Sores. And they have need too often to make use of these Plasters, the Country being full of Snakes and other venomous Creatures; (some of the Snakes no less than 20 foot in length) whose poison, being strong and deadly, doth require such helps. Of the people nothing singular that I have met with, but that they are more musical and exact in Painting than the rest of the Natives.

Towns of most note in it, 1. Ciudad Real, built by the Spaniards in the Country of the Chiapense, at the foot of an Hill; situate in a round Plain, encompassed about with Mountains like an Amphitheatre; afterwards made a Bishop's See, and privileged by the Kings of Spain to be governed by such City-Magistrates as they call Alcaldes. 2. Chiapa, in a Vale adjoining; before the building of the other, of most note in this Province, yet till before it in regard of its situation, this Valley being better fraught with Pears, Apples, Wheat and Maize, than all the rest of the Country. 3. Tecpatlan, once the chief of the Zaque, possessed of 25 Villages in this Province; now beautified with a Monastery of Dominican Friars. 4. Copanacasta, the principal Town of twenty five that the Quetzils held in this Tract; remarkable for nothing but a Convent of the same Dominicans. 5. S. Bar- tholomeus, another Town in the Territory of the same Quetzils; near which is said to be a great Pit, or opening of the Earth, into which if any man cast a stone, though never so little, there presently followeth a loud and fearful noise like a clap of Thunder. 6. Guevetlan, built by Pedro de Alvarado when he was Governor of these parts; the chief Town of a little Provincially called Soomfo, 7. Cafapualca, a small Burrough, but memorable for a Well in the Fields adjoining, the Waters whereof are noted to rise and fall as the Ocean doth flow or ebb, and at equal distances of time. Of thirteen Townships which the Zeletas were possessed of, I find no one named; though painted all of them, and set forth to the Eye of the Traveller, with Cochinel, of which their Territory hath good plenty.

And now I am fallen upon the Rarities of Nature, I cannot but take notice (though somewhat out of my Method) of a River by the Spaniards called Rio Blanco, which runs Wood to Stones: of a Spring in the Centred of Tafica, which in the Summer is full of water, in the Winter dry; of another in the same Centred, which for one three years, though it rain never so little, is full of water, and the next three years hath none at all; and so successively by turns: and finally, that the chief River of the Province, having received into it many lesser streams, is swallowed up near a Village of the Chiapense, called Oztutan, never after seen. None of them famed for Golden Sands, as are those of Guatemala; though it be thought there be some Veins of Gold and Silver, but hitherto neglected for want of Slaves to work in the Mines.

2. VERAPAZ is bounded on the West with Chiapa; on the East, with Guatemala and Honduras; on the North, with Jucatan; and on the South, with the Territory of Soomfo. In Latin called Provincia Vera Pacis, by the Spaniards, Verapaz; because not conquered by the Sword, but won to the obedience of the King of Spain by the preaching of the Dominican Friars.

The Country is 30 leagues in length, and as much in breadth, full of high Hills and deep Valleys, but no fruitful Plains; generally overgrown with Woods, very large and thick, which so hinder the free passage of the Winds, that the Air hereof is very stowry: insomuch that for nine months in the year they have always rain, not altogether free from it in the other three. By reason of this moisture much annoyed with Mosquito, a kind of Gnats very injurious to their Fruits, with which otherwise (as with Fish and other necessities) they were well provided. No Mines of Gold or Silver discovered hitherto, though the Spaniards have many times in vain attempted it. In stead whereof some of their Trees drop a kind of Amber, which they call Liquid Amber; some Melick, and some others Guazuma, that called China-Wood, and many others.

The people tractable and conform to the Spanish Government, except the Leandones and Pachucos, some Remainers of the ancient Savages; who, keeping in the Mountains and craggy Rocks of this Country, have hitherto thero retained both their native Freedom and their old Idolatries. No Towns herein possessed by the Spaniards, and but fourteen Villages in all, in which they live mingled with the old Inhabitants. The principal of these S. Auguftin, not so much memorable in it self, as for the neighbourhood of a Cave betwixt two Mountains from which the Rain descending turns into Alabaster, naturally fashioned into Pillars and other Pourtraitures. Into which also many Springs do convey their waters, which there being joynted into a body make an handsome River, able almost at the first appearance to bear a Boat. A Port they also have at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, called Golfo Dulce; but of so little use and trading, that I find no name for it, unless it should be that Tezapa which Horrea speaks of, by whom it is placed in Guatemala.

3. GUATIMALA specially so called, is bounded on the West with Verapaz, from which parted by the River Xicalapa; on the East, with Nicaragua; on the North, with Honduras; and on the South, with Mare del Zur, or the Pacific Ocean. Extended 30 leagues from the North to the South, and on the shores of Mare del Zur not above seventeen. But reckoning in Tezcala, Chaluteca, and S. Saviour, three adjoining Regions, by some made Provinces distinct, the dimensions of it must be much greater both for length and breadth.

The Country is Mountainous, but withal very full of Rivers; by consequence commodious both for Filling and Hunting. Fruitful of Wheat, Maize and other Provisions, but those Fruits not lasting. Not so much subject unto Rain as they are in Verapaz, but more troubled with Winds. Full of rich Pastures, and those Pastures of great Heads of Cattel: good store of Cotton-wool, some Kassum, and other Medicinal liquors; also of the best Sulphur, and many Apothecaries Drugs, which I have no skill of. The People pusillanimous and fearful, greater Proficients in Christianity and Civility than most of the Savages; but that it is thought they would relapse again to their ancient Paganism, and revive again their old barbarous Customs, if not held in by the bridle of Fear and the curb of Power. The men affirmed to be good Archers, and the Women good Spinners.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. Guacapa, a River of a course but of 13 leagues, yet of great depth, and navigable half the way, which falleth into the Mare del Zur. 2. Lompas, watering the Burrough of S. Saviour; which hath its rise from a great Lake, and his fall into the same Sea also. Here is also said to be a Lake near the Village of Titepeque, of the Waters whereof are made both Sulphur and Alum. And here is said to be a Volcano, or burning Mountain, which though it hath vomited no Fire of late, the matter of it being spent, yet the sad Monuments of his Furies do remain among them: another not far off which till calls out smoke.

Towns of most note, 1. Guatemala, or S. Jago de Guatemala, the chief Town of the Province, situate in a little River betwixt both Potomac; by one of which most terribly washed, Anno 1541. But being re-edified, it hath since exceedingly flourished, by reason of the Bishops See, the residence of the Governor, and the Courts of Justice. 2. S. Acazotlan, 40 leagues Eastward from Guatemala, by the 4 Natives called Guazuma; situate on the River Guacapa, seven leagues from the Sea, and neighbored by a great Lake of five leagues compass. 3. Acazotlan, at the mouth of the same River, the Port Town to S. Saviour. 4. S. Trinidad, by the Natives called Semfinate, the most noted Empory of this Country; the place of Battery betwixt the Inhabitants of New Spain and those of Ferri. 5. S. Michael, two leagues from the Bay of Fonseca, which serves unto it for an Haven. 6. Xerez de la Fontana, the chief Town of the Centred of Chub- lutean, (by which name it was formerly known) situate on the Frontiers towards Nicaragua, and to the South-east of the Bay of Fonseca: that Bay so named in honour of Rodericus Fonseca Bishop of Brage, and President of the Council for the Indies, Anno 1532. by Giles Gonzales de Avila, who first discovered it. About and in this Bay are ten little Islands, four of them inhabited, and plentifully furnished with Wood, Water, and Salt.

4. HONDURAS hath on the South Guatemala, specially so called, on the West, the Bay, or Arm of the Sea, called Golfo Dulce, by which parted from Verapaz; on the North and East, the Sea called Mare del Nord; on the South-east, Nicaragua; on the South, Guatemala specially so called. In length from East to West by the banks of that Sea 150 leagues, and about 80 leagues in breadth from North to South. The name of Honduras, or Fonduras, imposed upon it from the depth of the Sea about the principal Head-land of it, called the Cape of Honduras.

The whole Country is either Hills or Valleys little Champain in it; fruitful of Maize and Wheat, and of very rich Pastures; made so by the constant overflowings of their Rivers about Michuelan, which do not only foil their Grounds, but water their Gardens. The principal of them, 1. Hongara, 2. Chamalucan, 3. Ulnas all neighboured by fertile Fields and pleasant Meadows. Some Mines of Gold and Silver are conceived to be here, but not yet discovered; the people being so slothful and given to idleness, that they rather live on Roots, than take pains in tilling of their Lands; and therefore not easily entreated to toil for others, but where necessity and strong hand do compel them to it.

Towns of most note, 1. Valledad, by the Natives called Comayagua, 40 leagues distant from the Sea, situate in a pleasant and fruitful Valley, on the banks of the River Chamalucan, and honoured with a Bishop's See, fixed here about the year 1558, but built near the place where once Francisco de Montio, Governor of this Province, had planted a Colony of Spaniards, Anno 1530, by the name of S. Maria de Comayagua. 2. Gracias de Dios, 30 leagues Westward of Valledad, built by Gabriel de Rojas, Anno 1530, to be a place of defence for those who worked in the Mines against the Savages. But finding himself unable to make it good, he defaced and left it. Re-edified again by Gonzalo de Alvarado, and since well inhabited. 3. S. Peter, eleven leagues distant from the Port of Cavallos, but seated in a most healthy Air; and therefore made the dwelling-place of the Farmers of the Kings Customs, who have their houses in this Town, and follow their business in the other, as occasion is. 4. Porto de Cavallos, so called from some Horses thrown overboard in a violent Tempest: the most noted Haven of these parts, and strong by natural situation; but so ill guarded and defended, that in the year 1591, it was pillaged by Captain Christopher Newport, Anno 1596, by Sir Anthony Sherley. Deferted on those spoils, and since built inhabited. 5. S. Thomas de Capitlan, 18 leagues from Cavallos, naturally strong, and fortified according to the Rules of Art; to which, as to a place of more strength and safety, Alonso Brado de Castilla, President of the Solicits of Guatemala, removed both the Inhabitants and Trade of Cavallos. 6. Traxillo, seated on the rising of a little Hill betwixt two Rivers, (one of them that which is called Haguera) distant from Cavallos 40 leagues to the East, and 60 leagues to the North of Valledad, surprised and pillaged by the English, Anno 1576. Not far hence towards the North-east lieth the Cape of Honduras, from whence the Shore drawing inwards till it join with Jucatan, makes up a large and goodly Bay, called the Gulf of Honduras. 7. S. George de Olancha, so named from the Valley Olancha, in which it is situated; a Valley noted heretofore for some golden Sands, which Gaujepe, a River of it, was then said to yield.

5. NICARAGUA is bounded on the North with Honduras; on the East, with Mare del Noordo and the Province of Veragua; on the South, with Mare del Sur; on the West, with Guatemala. By Didaco Lopez de Saldiva, who first subdued it, it was called the New Kingdom of Leon; but the old name by which they found it called at their coming thither would not be so lost.

The Country is destitute of Rivers, except that part hereof towards Veragua called Costa Rica, reckoned a Province of itself. The want hereof is supplied by a great Lake, or a little Sea, called the Lake of Nicaragua, 120 Leagues in compass, ebbs and flows like the Sea; upon the banks of which stand many pleasant Villages and single Houses. A Lake well stored with Fish, but as full of Crocodiles; and having made its way by a mighty Cataract, emptieth it self into the Sea about four Leagues off. Not very rich in Corn, (most of which is brought thence from Pera) but well stored with Cattel: level and plain, and thadown with frequent Trees, one amongst others of that nature, that a man cannot touch any part of it, but it withereth presently. Affirmed to be as full of Parrots as England of Crows; stored with great plenty of Cotton-wool, and abundance Sugar-Canes. In a word to please generally to the Eye, that the Spaniards call it by the name of Mohomer's Paradise.

The People for the most part speak the Spanish Tongue, and willingly conform themselves to the Spanish Garb, both of behaviour and apparel: well weaned from their old barbarous Customs, retained only by some Mountaineers, whom they call Chomates. All of good Stature, and of colour indifferent white. They had before they received Christianity a fictitious and politic form of Government. Only as Solon appointed no Law for a man's killing of his Father, so had this people none for the killing of a King; both of them conceiving that men were not so unnatural as to commit such Crimes. A Thief they judged not to death, but adjudged him to be a Slave to that man whom he had robbed, till by his Service he made satisfaction. A course more merciful and not less just, than the loss of Life.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Leon, or Leon de Nicaragua, situate on the Lake aforesaid, the Residence of the Governour, and the Bishop's See; built in Sandy Soil, and begirt with Woods. 2. Granada, on the same Lake, sixteen Leagues from Leon; beautified with a fair Church and a strong Cattle, both founded by Ferdinando de Cordoba: the City seated in a liberal and wealthy Soil, well furnished with Sugar-Canes for the refining of which here are many Work-houses, which they call Ingenios. 3. Segovia, distant from the former about 30 Leagues, rich in Veins of Silver. 4. Juan, (all called according to the names of some Towns in Spain) situate at the end of the Lake aforesaid, from whence by a long and narrow Channel it disembogues into the Sea near the Port of S. John. 5. Realto, about a League distant from the Port of Tupiguan, in the Latitude of 12 degrees and 40 minutes; inhabited for the most part by Shipwrights and Mariners. 6. Nineta, giving name to a little River, within the bounds whereof standeth. 7. Aurimora also. 8. Correjo, 40 Leagues from Nineta, equally distant from both Seas, on each of which it hath a convenient Port: this Town is the principal of that part which is called Costa Rica.

6. VERAGUA hath on the West Costa Rica; on the East, bounded with the District of Panama; washed on both other sides by the Sea: extended 50 Leagues in length from West to East; not above 25, where narrowest, from one Sea to the other. The name given to it from the River Veragua, of great note in it at the first Discovery.

The Soil hereof is Mountainous and exceeding barren, not fit for Tillage, and less useful in feeding Cattel; sufficiently provided of Maize and Pot-herbs, but else of little necessary for the life of man, unless the people could eat Silver, or drink Aurum Potabile. Of both which Metals, but especially of Gold, here are fuel never perishing mines, that the Spaniards think them able to supply all Wants, and cure all Diseases. Once being asked what made them so greedy of that Metal, it was answered, That they were much troubled with Grief of Heart, for which Gold was a most sovereign Medicine. And as the Country, such the People, hardy, courageous, and warlike, and such as bear the Spanish Yoke with great impatience: the stoutest and most untamable people being bred most commonly in mountainous and woody Countries.

Chief Rivers of this little Province, 1. Veragua, which gives name unto it. 2. Belen, by the old Inhabitants called Tibera; at the mouth of which Columbus purposed to have settled a Spanish Colony, for the better transporting of his Gold. But finding that fast the Channel, on the scaling of some Rain which had fallen before, was become so shallow that no Ship could go in or out, he gave over that purpose. 3. La Trinidad, 4. La Concepcion; all falling into Mare del Noordo. Their chief Towns, 1. Concepcion, upon the Mouth of that River, the Seat of the Governour. 2. La Trinidad, on the banks of that River, near the Port of Belen, and six Leagues Eastwards of La Concepcion. 3. S. Foy, (Oppidum S. Fidis) twelve Leagues from Concepcion on the South; where the Spaniards melt and cast their Gold into Bars and Ingots. 4. Carlos, not far from the Shores of Mare del Sur. 5. Philipina, on the West of Carlos. Each seated on a large and capacious Bay. Before which Bay lie a Frigate of Islands, which the Spaniards call Zebaco, from the chief amongst them. Thirty in all; the principal, Zebaco, Cabano, S. Marie, S. Martha, inhabited in former times, now not much frequented; the people being dragged into the Continent to work in the Mines.

This Country oweth its first discovery unto divers men according to the several Members and Divisions of it. The last in order being the first that was discovered, but the last that was conquered had the honour to be visited by Columbus himself. Who driving up and down these Coasts in the year 1502, hit on the entrances of the River which afterwards he caused to be called Belen; where, hearing that there was plenty of Gold in the Mines of Horra not far off, he intended to find it. But the River failing him, as was said before, thought nothing fit to sustain his men; he bent himself, though unwillingly, to a farther search. He had before touched upon Honduras also, but find not that he landed on it: the settling of these Countreys being designated to another hand. Twenty years after this the most fortunate Cortez, having fully quieted and composed the affairs of Mexico, resolved to make his Master Lord of the rest of America; and to that end sent out his Officers and Commanders into several parts. By Pedro de Alvarado he subdued Guatemala; Honduras, by Christopher de Olid; Veragua and Nicaragua, by Gonzales de Cordoba. But fearing lest the conquered Provinces might revolt again, he resolved to visit them in person. Attended by a choice Band 150 Horse, and as many Foot, and 3000 Mexicans, he began his journey in October 1524, and held on his Progress as far as to Traxillo; where finding that Gonzales de Cordoba had plaid his Game as there was no necessity of going farther, he made a stand, having marched above 400 leagues with his little Army. Returning back another way, in April 1526, he came home to Mexico; with whose return we conclude also our Survey of the Northern Peruana, containing all America Septentrionalis, or Mexicana.

OF PERUANA.

PERUANA, the other of the two great Peninsula's, into which the vast Continent of the NEW WORLD doth now stand divided, hath the form of a Pyramis reversed; more answerable thereto than Africa, though that be resembled. Joined to the other by a straight and narrow Isthmus, called the Streights of Darien, whereof we shall have opportunity to speak more anon; which looks but like a Stone mill-dam in a great Building; or the first step by which we are to climb the top, as in other Pyramids.

The name is derived from Pera, the chief Province of it: the Circumnavigation said to be 1700 miles. Nothing else to be said in the general, but what will serve more fitly for particular places; except it be the description of some prime Mountains and principal Rivers, which being of too long a course to be reckoned unto any one particular Province, may more properly deserve place here. Of these the chief are, 1. Orellana, on the River of Amazon; called by the first name from Francisco de Orellana, a Spaniard, who first discovered it; by the second, from the Amazon, a kind of stout and warlike Women, who are said to have inhabited on the Banks thereof. The Fountain of it in Pera, the Fall in the North Sea, or Mare del Noordo. A River of so long a course, that the said Orellana is reported to have failed in it 5000 miles, the several windings and turnings of it being reckoned in: and of so violent a Current, that it is said to keep its natural tale and colour above 30 miles after it falleth into the Sea; the Channel of it of that breadth, where it leaveth the Land, that it is accounted 60 leagues from one point to the other. 2. Orenoque, navigable 1000 miles by Ships of burthen, and 2000 miles by Boats and Pinnaces. Having received into it an hundred Rivers, it openeth into the same Sea with 16 mouths, which part the Earth into many Islands, (some equal to the Isle of Wight); the most remote of these Channels 300 miles distant from one another. By some it is called Ralema, from Sir Walter Raleigh, who took great pains in the Discovery and Description of it; or rather in discovering it so far, as to be able to describe it. 3. Maragony, of a longer course than any of the other, assumed to measure at the least 6000 miles from his first rising to his fall; and at its fall into the Sea to be no less than 70 leagues from one tide to the other. More properly to be called a Sea, than many of those great Lakes, or largest Bays, which usually enjoy that name. 4. Rio de la Plata, a River of a less course than the other, but equal unto most in the World besides: In length from its first Fountain 2000 miles, in breadth at its fall into the Sea, about 60 leagues; and of so violent a Stream, that the Sea for many leagues together altereth not the taste of it. All these, as they do end their race in the Atlantic, they begin it from the main body of the Andes, or at least some spur or branch of that body.

But before we venture farther on more particulars, we are to tell you of these Andes, that they are the greatest and most noted Mountains of all America; beginning at Tinima, a Town of Papayan, in the new Realm of Granada, and thence extended Southwards to the Straights of Magellan, for the space of 1000 leagues and upwards. In breadth about 20 leagues, where they are at the narrowest; and of so vast an height withal, that they are said to be higher than the Alps, or the head of Caucasus, or any of the most noted Mountains in other parts of the World. Not case of ascent, but in certain Paths, by reason of the thick and impassable Woods, with which covered in all parts thereof which lie towards Pera (for how it is on the other side, or by what People it is neighboured, is not yet discovered); barren and craggy too withal, but so full of venomous Beasts and poisonous Serpents, that they are said to have destroyed a whole Army of one of the Kings of Pera, in his march that way. Inhabited by a People as rude and savage as the place, and as little hospitable. The most noted Mountain of America, as before was said, and indeed the greatest of the World. Of some sufficient of themselves, not to be gratified by the addition of impossible Fictions, or improbable Fictions. Amongst which last I reckon that of Abraham Ortelius, a right learned man, who will have these Mountains to be that which the Scripture calleth by the name of Sephur, Gen. 10. 30. and there affirmed to be the utmost Eastern limit of the Sons of Japhan: the vanity and inconsequences of which strange conceit we have already noted, when we were in India.

Proceed we now unto the particular Descriptions of these great Peninsula's, comprehending those large and wealthy Countries which are known to us by the names of, 1. Castella America. 2. The new Realm of Granada, 3. Pernu, 4. Chilo. 5. Paraguay. 6. Brasil. 7. Gibiana, and 8. Paria, with their several Islands. Such other Isles as fall not properly and naturally under some of these, must be referred unto the general Head of the American Islands, in the close of all.

CASTELLA del ORO.

CASTELLA del ORO, Golden Castile, (Aurora Castile, as the Latins) is bounded on the East and North with Mare del Nord; on the West, with Mare del Zur, and some part of Veraagua; on the South, with the new Realm of Granada. Called by the name of Castile, with reference to Castile in Spain, under the favour and good fortune of the Kings whereof it was first discovered: Aurea was added to it, partly for distinction sake, and partly in regard of that plenty of Gold which the first Discoverers found in it. It is also called Terra Firma, because one of the first parts of Firm Land which the Spaniards touched at, having before discovered nothing but some Islands only.

The Soil and People being of such several tempers, as not to be included in one common Character, we will consider both apart in the several Provinces of, 1. Panama, 2. Darien, 3. Nova Andalusia, 4. S. Martha, and 5. the little Province De la Huacha.

1. PANAMA, or the District of Panama, is bounded on the East with the Gulf of Uraba, by which parted from the Land of this large Peninsula on the West, with Veraagua, one of the Provinces of Guatemala in Mexico; and on both the other sides with the Sea. So called of Panama, the Town of most esteem herein, and the Judicial seat of Castella Aurea.

It taketh up the narrowest part of the Straight or Isthmus, which joins both Peninsula's together; not above 7 or 8 Leagues over in the Narrowest place, betwixt Panama and Porto bello, if measured by a straight line from one Town to the other; though 18 Leagues according to the course of the Road betwixt them, which by reason of the Hills and Rivers is full of turnings. Of some attempts to dig a Channel through this Isthmus, to let one Sea into the other, and of the memorable expedition of John Oxenham over it by Land, we have spoken already.

The Air hereof is foggy, but exceeding hot, and consequently very unhealthy, chiefly, from May unto November: the Soil either Mountainous and barren, or low and miry; naturally unfit for Grain, that it yieldeth nothing but Maize, and that but sparingly; better for Pasture, in regard of its Plenty of Grass, and the goodness of it: so full of Swine that the Spaniards first coming hither, that they thought they never should destroy them; now they complain as much of their want, or paucity. As for the Inhabitants, whatsoever they were formerly is not now material: most of the old stock rooted out by the Spaniards, and no new ones planted in their rooms; so that the Country in all parts, except towards the Sea, is almost defoliated, or forsaken.

The Country, as before was said, of little breadth, and yet full of Rivers: the principal whereof, 1. Chagres, by the Spaniards called Rio de Legatos, or the River of Crocodiles, (many of which are harboured in it) which falleth into Mare del Nord betwixt Nombre de Dios and Porto Belem. 2. Sardinilla, 3. Sardina, 4. Rio de Colubres, or the River of Snakes, and 5. Rio de Comagre; all falling into the same Sea. Then on the other side, 6. Chepo, whose Sands in former times yielded plenty of Gold.

7. Rio de las Falsas, on the banks whereof groweth great store of Timber for the building of Ships. 8. De Comagor, emptying it self into the Bay of S. Michael.

Towns of most note, 1. S. Philip, seated on a safe and strong Haven, called Porto bello, built in this place by the appointment of King Philip the second, but by the Counsel of John Baptista Antonelli, to be the Staple of the Trade betwixt Spain and Panama; partly, in regard of the unhealthiness of Nombre de Dios, where it was before; but chiefly, because that Town was found to have lien too open to the Invasions of the English. Fortified with two strong Castles; (on each side of the Haven ones); but for all that surprized and pillaged by the English under Captain Parker, in the year 1601. 2. Nombre de Dios, conveniently seated in the upper Sea for a Town of Trade; and for that reason made the Staple of such Commodities as were traded betwixt Peru and Spain, which brought from Spain, and landed here, were from hence conveyed over the Land to Panama, and there shipped for Peru or brought from Peru, and landed at Panama, were by Land brought unto this place, and here shipped for Spain. It took this name by Didaco Niuega, a Spanish Adventurer, who having been distressed by Tempests was driven in here, and bid his men go on shore on Nombre de Dios in the name of God. In reference hereto the Latins, borrowing a Greek word, it is called Thysmania. Of great Trade once, on the occasion before mentioned; but in the year 1584, the Trade was removed unto Porto bello, by the counsel of Antonelli before named; and some years after that, the Inhabitants also. To hasten which, the taking of this Town by Sir Francis Drake served exceedingly, nely. 3. Acla, on the Coast of the same Sea also, but on the South-east of Nombre de Dios. 4. Nata, or S. Jago de Nata, situate on the lower Sea on the Borders of Veraagua, about 30 Leagues on the West of Panama. 5. Panama, the chief City of Castella Aurea, the Residence of the Governour and the Courts of Justice, honoured with a Bishops See, a Suffragan to the Arch-bishop of Lima, and beautified with three fair Monasteries, and a College of Jesuites. Seated in the 9. degree of Northern Latitude; and so near the Sea that the waves come close unto the Wall. A Town through which the Wealth of Spain and Peru passed every year; yet not containing above 350 Houses: the number of the Soldiers greater than that of the Citizens. 6. S. Cruz la Real, a League from Panama, inhabited totally by Negroes, brought out of Guinea.

This Province was the first of those on the Firm Land which were discovered by Columbus. But I find not that he left any name unto it, or to any River or Promontory of it, but only to a little Land lying on the Shore near Porto bello, which he caused to be called Los Batimientos; because being caught here by chance, he found good store of Maize and other Provisions, called Batimientos by the Spaniard. But the chief Islands of this Province are those, which Columbus never saw, called the Islands of Pearly, situate in the Southern Sea, opposite to Panama, from which distant 17 Leagues, or thereabouts. In number above twenty, but two only inhabited, the one called led Tarorocapi, the other Del Rio; the rest of them rather Rocks than Islands. Much famed not only for the abundance, but the excellency of the Pearls there found; fairer than those of Margarita and Cubagua, so much commended. Once very profitable to the Spaniards, till by their cruelty and covetousness they unpeopled the Islands and destroyed the Pearls. Inhabited now only by a few Negroes, and some Slaves of Nicaragua, who live here to attend the grazing of their Masters Cattle in the Fields and Pastures.

2. DARIEN hath on the North the District of Panama; on the South, New Granada; on the East, the River of Darien, whence it hath its name; and the Gulf of Uraba; and on the West, the main Southern Ocean.

The Country is of a temperate Air, and a fruitful Soil: so happy in the production of Melons, and such other Fruits, that within twenty days after they are sown they are fully ripe. With like felicity it bringeth forth Grapes and other Fruits; either natural hereto, or brought hither from Europe. A Tree here is called Hono, not elsewhere known; the shade of which is conceived to be so wholesome, that the Spaniards seek them out to sleep under them. Out of the Blossoms of it they distil a perfumed Water; of the Bark a Bath or Lavatory good for the opening of the Pores, and redress of Weariness; and from the Barks they draw a Liqueur, which they use to drink of. Of Beasts and Fowl great Plenty, whether wild or tame; and some of them not heard of in other places.

Principal Rivers hereof, 1. Darien, whence it hath the name. A clear Water, and much drank of, but of a flow course and a narrow Channel; able to bear no bigger Vessels than those of one piece of Wood, used among the Savages, we may call them Troughs. But with this slow course it falleth at last into the Gulf of Uraba, a large Arm of the Sea, which pierceth far into the Land, and at the mouth is said to be eight Leagues over. 2. Rio de las Redas, and 3. De la Trepadera, both emptying themselves into the Gulf of Uraba. 4. Corbata, on the same side of the Country also. 5. Bero, a River of the South-Sea, not much observable, but that some have laboured to derive the Etymology of Peru from thence.

Towns of most note, though few of any, 1. Darien, on the Bank of the Gulf of Uraba; so oftentimes fo unhealthy by the Mists which they do thence arise, that the Inhabitants use to find their sick people to the fresh Air of Coroboy to revive their spirits. By the Spaniards it was called S. Maria Antigua, afterwards the Antique of Darien, being new built by one Eusebio a Spanish Adventurer, Anno 1510, and grew so suddenly into Wealth and Reputation, that within four years it was made an Episcopal See. But being built too near the banks of the Darien, in a moorish and unhealthy place, both the Episcopal See and the chief Inhabitants were removed to Panama. Some other Colonies of the Spaniards have been planted here; but either forsaken by themselves, or destroyed by the Savages; so that now from Acla to the bottom of the Gulf of Uraba, the Spaniards have not in their own hands either Town or Village. Nothing but some few scattered houses in all that Tract, for the use of the Natives, who formerly made their Neils like Birds, on the tops of Trees. 2. Buenos Los Angeles, two small Villages on the other side of the Country, possessed by the Savages. Besides these, and some forry Sheds here and there dispersed, all the rest is a Desert. So that not being able to maintain the Reputation of a distinct Province, the Government hereof hath of late been devolved on the Prefect of Panama.

3. NOVA ANDALUZIA hath on the West the River Darien, and the Gulf of Uraba; on the East, the Province of S. Martha; on the North, the main Ocean; and on the South, the New Realm of Granada. So called with reference to Andalusia, a Province of Spain. Called also by some Writers Carthagena, from Carthago now the chief City of it.

It is in length, from the Gulf of Uraba to the River of Magdalen, 10 Leagues, and near upon as much in breadth. Mountainous, and very full of Woods, but in those Woods great store of Rofin, Gums, and some kinds of Balfams. Here is also said to be a Tree, which whosever toucheth, is in danger of poisoning. The Soil, by reason of the abundance of Rain which falls upon it, very moist and frowy; inasmuch that few of our European Fruits have prospered in it. Few Veins of Gold in all the Country, except only in that part hereof which is called Zena; where the Spaniards at their first coming found great store of Treasures. But it was taken out of the Graves and Monuments of the Dead, not found in Mines, nor digged for, as in other places; such being the Reputation of that Territory in former times, that the Nations far and near did carry the Bodies of their Dead to be buried in it, with great quantity of Gold, Jewels, and other Riches. The Natives very fierce and stout, whilst they were a people; But giving the Spaniards many overthrowes before fully conquered, they have been so confounded and wasted by little and little, that there are not many of them left.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. Rio de las Redas, and 2. Rio de los Andes, both falling into the Bay of Uraba. 3. Zetu, which passing through the Province above-mentioned, to which it gives name, falleth into the Ocean over against the Island Fuente. 4. S. Martha, of long course and much estimation. For rising in the most Southern parts of the New Realm of Granada, near the Equinoctial, it passeth through the whole length of that Kingdom, and at the last minglcth its stream with that of the River Magdalen, not far from Mopos. By the Natives it is called Cana. And as for Mountains, those of most note are a continual ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Cora Alibis, by the Natives Alibis; craggy and difficult of access; in breadth affirmed to be 20 Leagues, but the length uncertain, the farthest ends of them towards the South not discovered hitherto.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Carthagena, situate in a sandy Peninsula, ten degrees distant from the Equator: well built, and for the benefits of it of great Wealth and State; consisting of 300 Houses, or thereabout, but thofe neat and handsome. Beautified with a Cathedral Church, three Monasteries, and one of the best Havens of all America. Well fortified on both sides, since the taking of it by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1585 took it by Assault, and carried thence, besides incalculable sums of money, 240 Brass pieces of Ordnance. 2. Tolu, by the Spaniards called S. Jago, twelve Miles from Carthagena, memorable for the most fervent Balfam of all these parts, called the Balfam of Tolu; little inferior, if at all to the Balfam of Egypt. 3. Mopos, or Santa Cruz de Mopos, near the Confluences of the Rivers of Martha and Magdalena. 4. Baranca de Melambo, on the Banks of the River Magdalen, six Leagues from the Ocean, where such Commodities as are brought by Sea for the New Realm of Granada use to be unshipped, and carried by Lighter or small Boats up to the River. 5. Schicti de Buena vista, built by Alfonso de Oieda, Anno 1508, in the first Attempt upon this Country; situate on a rising ground, near the mouth of the Bay of Uraba, a League and a half from the Sea. 6. Villa de Maria, 30 Leagues South of Carthagena, but of no great note.

4. S. MARTIN hath on the West Nova Andalusia; on the East, Rio de la Huacha; on the North, the main Ocean; on the South, the New Realm of Granada: about 70 Leagues in length, and as much in breadth.

breadth. So called from S. Mariba the chief City of it. The Country is mountainous and barren, not fit for Pasturage or Tillage; and such other Fruits as are brought thither out of Spain. The Air on the Seacoasts very hot and falding, and in the mid-land parts as cold, because of the neighbourhood of some Mountains always covered with Snow. The principal of those Mountains, a long ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Las Sierras Nuevas, or the Snowy Mountains; discernable by the Mariners 30 Leagues at Sea, by whom called the Mountains of Tunima, from a Valley of that name beneath them, the Inhabitants whereof, by the advantage of those Hills, have hitherto preserved their liberty against the Spaniards. The rest, though subject to the Spaniards, have their several Kings, assumed to be an arrogant and ill-natur'd people; made woful perhaps than indeed they are, by reason of their hate to the Spaniards; whose Government they live under with great unwillingness.

Chief Rivers of this Province are, 1. Rio Grande de la Magdalena, which hath its Fountain in the Hills of the New Realm of Granada, not far from the Egnator, but its fall into the Ocean betwixt Carthagena and S. Martha, in the Latitude of 12 degrees; where dividing it self, it maketh an Island of 5 Leagues long, and after openeth into the Sea with two wide mouths; discernable for ten Leagues space from the rest of the Main by the falseth and colour of the Water. 2. Rio de Cazaca, which falleth into the Magdalena, as doth also 3. Cesar, by the Natives called Pompiama; which having its Fountain near the City of King in the Vale of Upur, passeth directly towards the South, till it meet with 4. Ayuma, another River of this Tract; accompanied with whom he runneth Westward for the space of 70 Leagues, and endeth in the great River of Magdalena, as before is said, near the Fovell of Alperne. 5. Babia, 6. Piru. 7. Don Diego. 8. Palamini, 9. Goyca, falling into the Ocean.

Towns of most observation, 1. S. Mariba, situate on the Shores of the Ocean, in the Latitude of ten degrees and 30 minutes; neighboured by a safe and convenient Haven, defended from the Winds by an high Mountain near unto it, and honoured with an Episcopial Sea. Small, and ill-built when it was at the best; nor well recovered of the Spoil it suffered by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595, and by Sir Anthony Shirley, the next year after. 2. Tenariffe, on the Banks of the Magdelen, 40 Leagues from S. Mariba. 3. Tanalemeque, by the Spaniards called Villas de las Palmas, 20 Leagues to the South of Tenariffe. 4. Ciudad de los Reyes, or the City of Kings, situate in the Vale of Upur, on the Banks of a deep and violent River, called Guatavari, which not far off falleth into the Cesar; ill neighboured by the Inhabitants of the Vale of Tunima, not hitherto reduced under the command of the Kings of Spain. 5. Ranada, by the Spaniards called New Salamanca, in the same Valley of Upur; as liberally furnished with Veins of Brass, as it is with Stones. 6. O- canna, on the Western Reach of the River Cesar, equally distant from its Confluence with Ayuma, and its fall into Magdelen.

5. RIO DE LA HACHA is the name of a little Province lying on the North-East of S. Mariba, environed on two sides with the main Ocean, and on the third (which is that of the East) with a large and spacious arm of the Sea called Golfo de Venezuela, the extremities hereof of North-west, called Cabo la Vela; on the North-east, Cabo di Copuqueca.

It took this name from the Town and River of La Hacha, a small Town, consisting of no more than an hundred Houses, but big enough to give name to a small Province; built on a little Hill about a Mile from the Sea: the Haven inconsistent, and exposed to the Northern Winds, but the Soil about very rich, fruitful of all such Plants as are brought from Spain, well stored with Veins of Gold, excellent Salt-wiches, and some Gems of great worth and virtue. Distant eight Leagues from New Salamanca, and 18 Leagues from the Cape la Vela; surprized and sacked by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595. 2. Rancheria, six Leagues on the East of De la Hacha, inhabited for the most part by such as get their living by Pearl-fishing. 3. Topia, five Leagues from La Hacha, and almost as much from the Sea: the fields whereof lying betwixt the Town and New Salamanca were terribly wasted by the Englisb in the year aforesaid, because the Governour of New Salamanca, with whom they had contracted for 4000 Ducats not to burn that Town, would not stand to his Bargain.

These Countries, discovered by Columbus, and by him called Terra Firma, as before was said, were afterwards brought under the power of Spain, by two several men, employed in the subduing of their several parts, Anno 1508. To Didaco Niquefa was allotted the Government and Conquest of those parts hereof which lie on the West of the Bay of the Uraba, containing the Prefectures of Darien and Panamá, by the name of Castilla del Oro; and to Alfonso Orela, all that lay on the East of that Gulf, by the name of Nova Andalusia. But these two finished not the work, though they first began it: Ensis discovering farther on the River of Darien than Niquefa had done before him; and Balboa finding out the way to the South-Sea, where Panamá and the best of their Trading litch, which neither of the other had thought upon. Both afterwards joyned into one Province, the Prefectures of S. Mariba, and Rio de la Hacha (when conquered and subdued by the Spaniards) being added to it. One of their last Kings which held out against the Spaniards was called Abitica, who had his Palace on the top of a Tree, (as most of his Subjects had their Houses;) from which when Fernando de Viqueza, a Spanish Captain could by no other Rhetoric win him to defend, he laid his Axe to the Root, and began to fell it: which seen, the poor Prince was fain to come down, and compound both for his Life and Palace at the will of his Enemies.

OF NOVA GRANADA.

NOVA GRANADA, or the New Realm of Granada, is bounded on the North with Castella Aurea; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the East, with Venezuela. The Countries lying on the South, are not yet discovered, but shut up with vast Hills, and impassable Mountains, except only in those parts which lie near the Sea, where the way lieth open to Peru. Thus called by Gonsalvo Ximenez, the first Discoverer; who, being a Native of Granado in Spain, gave this name unto it.

It is in length 130 Leagues, and as much in Breadth; reckoning Popayana for a part of it, though by some made a distinct Government. So that we may divide the whole into these two parts, 1. Granada specially so called, lying on the West; and 2. Popayana, lying towards Mare del Zur.

1. GRANADA, specially so called, hath an Air for the most part well tempered betwixt heat and cold; with little difference (if any) betwixt Summer and Winter, and not much in the length and shortness of dayes. The Country is full of Woods, but of great fertility, well stored with Corn and Pasturage, many Herds of Cattel, some Veins of Gold and other Metals, and in that part hereof which is called Tunima, great plenty of Emeralds: and amongst their Woods, that called Guaicam, medicinal for the French Disease, grows in great abundance. The People are tall and strong of Body, not very industrious, the greatest part of their time being spent in Songs and Dances. The women of a white and more clear Complexion than any of their Neighbours, and more handsomely habited, apparelled in black or parti-coloured Mantles girt about their middles; their Hair tied up, and covered most an end with Chaplets intermixt with Flowers, and artificially comfposed.

Rivers of note I had not any, but those of S. Mariba and S. Magdelen, described before: nor any distinction of it into several Provinces, but by the names of Tunima, Bagota, Panche, Colyne, and Musi, by which the Savages were distinguished when first known to the Spaniards; with reference to which the Principal of their Towns are by some described.

Towns then of greatest note, 1. S. Foy de Bagota, but commonly S. Foy, the Metropolis of this new Realm, the See of an Archbishop, and the Seat of the Governour. Built by Gonsalvo Ximenez de Quisada, at the foot of the Mountains, not far from the Lake of Guatavita, on the banks of which they used to sacrifice to their Idols. The Town inhabited by 600 Families of Spaniards, besides those of the Natives; and situate in the fourth degree of Northern Latitude. 2. S. Michael, 12 Leagues on the North of S. Foy, a well traded Market. 3. Tocayama, in the Territory of the Panche, a barbarous and man-eating people, till reclaimed by the Spaniards; and Masters of the richest part of all the Country. The Town is about 15 Leagues from S. Foy, toward the North-east; and seated on the banks of Pati, a little River, which not far off is swallowed up in the body of Magdelen. 4. Tudela in the Country of the Musi and Colyne, two warlike Nations; situate on the banks of the River Zarbi, and made a Colony of the Spaniards at their first coming thither; but deserted by them not long after, for fear of the Savages, though the want of Provisions was pretended. 5. Trinidad, on the same River, but somewhat lower, and more remote from the Savages, by them notwithstanding much annoyed: the Fields thereof full of Veins of Crystal, Emeralds, Adamants, and Chalkedonies. 6. La Palma, built by the Spaniards in the same Territory of the Musi and Colyne, Anno 1572. 7. Tunima, so called according to the name of the Tribe or Province in which it is situate; built on the top of an high Hill, that it might serve for a Retreat and Fortrefs against the Savages; now a well-traded Empory, and very wealthy, the Inhabitants being able to employ 280 Horses for present service. 8. Pampelona, 60 Leagues from S. Foy, toward the North-east, rich in Mines of Gold and Herds of Cattel. 9. Merida, on the North of Pompiama, the farthest Town of all this Province on the North-east towards Venezuela: as 10. S. John de las Plenas, or S. John upon the Plains, is in the South-east, 50 Leagues from S. Foy, and seated in a corner full of Veins of Gold.

2. POPAYANA lieth on the West of New Granada strictly and specially so called, from which parted by the River Mariba, which hath its original in this Country: on the North bounded with Nova Andalusia, or Carthagena; and with Mare del Zur upon the West. Extended in length from North to South 130 Leagues at the least; and from the River to the Sea betwixt 30 and 40.

The Country over-cloy'd with Rain, breeds but little Maize, less Wheat, and almost no Cattle; though in some places richer than it is in others. The People anciently Man-eaters, and as rude as any; now more industrious and affable than the other Americans, especially about Popayana, where the Soil is also better tempered than in other places. The Rivers of most note, beside that of S. Mariba, which we have spoken of already, and some lesser streams which fall into it, are 1. Rio de S. Juan, 2. Rio de Cedras. 3. Rio de S. Jago; all falling into Mare del Zur.

Cities and Towns of greatest note, 1. Popayana, called by the name of the King hereof, when first known to the Spaniards; situate on a nameless, but pleasant River, in the midst of a Plain, of great Wealth and healthy Air, in two degrees and 30 Minutes of Northern Latitude; the ordinary residence of the Governour, and the See of a Bishop. The Building fair unto the Eye, but slight; excepting the Cathedral, and a Monastery of the Friars called De Mercedes, which are strong and lasting. 2. Acachua, (or Santa fides de Antiochia) on the borders of Nova Andalusia, 100 Leagues distant from Popayana. Seated upon a little River which falls into the Mariba, from which twelve Leagues distant. 3. Caramanta, on the Mariba it self. 4. Patia, in a pleasant Valley, on the banks of a small River, but of excellent water. 5. S. Ana, in the Centred of Anzerman, by which name it is sometimes called: built on a little Hill betwixt two sweet Rivers, and compassed round about with a Grove of most pleasant Fruits. 6. S. Jago de Arma, the chief Town of the Centred of Arma; situate in a Territory very rich in Gold, but otherwise unprovided of all manner of necessaries; fifty Leagues to the North-east of Papayan. 7. Carthage, in the Province of Quimbaza, 22 Leagues from S. Jago de Arma; situate in a Plain betwixt two Torrents, seven Leagues from the River of S. Mariba. 8. Calli, a League from that River, but on the Banks of another, in the Latitude of four degrees: neighbored by a vast and mighty Mountain; at whose feet it standeth; there built by Sebastian de Botalcazar, the first Discoverer of this Country. 9. Bonaventura, on a Bay so called in the Southern Ocean; a small Town, but of great use for the ready conveyance of the Commodities of New Spain unto Papayan, and to other Towns of this Province. 10. Imana, 80 Leagues from Papayan towards the East, at the foot of that vast ridge of Mountains called the Andes; which herabouts taking their beginning, extend as far Southwards as to the Straights of Magellan. 11. S. Juan de Pajto, situate in a pleasant Valley, but one degree from the Equator. 12. Sebastian de la Plata, so called from its Silver Mines in the South-east confines of the Province. 13. Almagra, on the tides of a Plain, but barren Mountain. 14. Madrigal, by the Natives called Chapan Chico; in a barren Soil, were not Gold a Supplement of all wants, which is there found in some abundance.

To this Province belong also some Islands in the Southern Ocean: that is to say, 1. The Isle of Palmer, South of the Cape of Corientes, so called from the abundance of Palms which are growing in it. 2. Gorgona, opposite to the mouth or Outlet of Rio de S. Juan, an Island of three Leagues in compass; the Hills so high, the Valleys so extremely low, the Sun so little seen amongst them, and the Woods so dark, that some have likened it to Hell. Not much observable, but that it did afford a lurking-place unto Francis Pizarro in his attempts upon Pern, when repulsed from landing on that Coast. 3. Del Gallo, a small Island, not a League in Circuit, on the South of Gorgona.

This whole Country thus divided into two Prefectures, but both subordinate to the Juridical Reform in the City of S. Jago de Bagota, is indebted for its first Discovery to two several persons. Granada specially so called was first discovered by Consejo Jimenez de Quesada, employed therein by Ferdinando de Lugo, Admiral of the Canary Islands, Anno 1536, who pausing up the River of Magdalen without molestation (more than the difficulties of the ways through Fens and Forests) as far as the Centred of Bagota; was there encountered by that King, whom he easily vanquished, and waiting all his Territories, carried with them these great quantities of Gold, Emeralds, and other Treasure. The residue of those Petit Princes, which then governed in their several Tribes; either submitted to him without opposition, or else were vanquished at the first rising. Having discovered and subdued every several Province, and miserably murdered Sangipa the last King of Bagota, of whom he had made use in subduing the Panches, he caused it to be called the New Realm of Granada, for the reason formerly laid down: and summing up the Spoils he had gotten in this café War, he found them to amount to 18000 Emeralds, 191294 Pezos of the finest Gold, 35000 of a coarser and inferior Alloy. In his return, he heard the news of Sebastian de Botalcazar's marching on the other side of the River of S. Mariba; who having at the same time discovered and subdued the Province of Papayan, was beating out his way towards the North-Sea, and from thence to Spain. This Botalcazar, being by Francisco Pizarro, the Conqueror of Pern, made Governour of the Town and Province of Quito, and having secured all the Country to the very Sea, resolved to open a way homewards through those Regions, which lay betwixt his own Province and Mare del Noordo. And this he did resolve the rather, in regard that he had been informed, that a rich Country, full of Gold, was in that Tract possessed by Papayan and Columbax, two petit Princes, but yet the greater in those parts. Encountered in his March by the Roylets of Patia and Pajto, he soon made them weary, and retire themselves into the Woods and impassible Mountains; and passing slowly on, came at last to Papayan. Where, though the Savages entertained him with some frequent Skirmishes, yet they grew quieter by degrees; giving the Spaniards leave to possess themselves of their best Towns, and to build others in such place as they thought convenient. But this was after the first Conquest, according to the coming over of succeeding Colonies. The first Conquest being finished Anno 1536, when the New Realm of Granada was subdued by Ximenez.

PERU.

ERU is bounded on the East with that vast ridge of Mountains which they call the Andes; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the North, with Papayan, an Appendix of the New Realm of Granada, on the South, with Chile. So called from the River Pern, which being one of the first of Note which the Spaniards met with in this Country, occasioned them to give that name to the whole.

It is in length from North to South 700 Leagues, but the breadth not equal. In some places 100 Leagues broad, in others 60, in the rest but 40; more or less, according to the windings of the Seas and Mountains. Divided commonly into three parts, all of so different a nature from one another, as if they were far distant both in Site and Soil. These parts are, the Plains, the Hill-Countries, and the Andes; the Plains extend on the Sea-shore, in all places level without Hills; the Andes, a continual ridge of Mountains without any Valleys; the Sierra, or Hill-Countries, composed of both. Each part stretcheth out from North to South, the whole length of the Country: the Plains from the Sea-shore to the Hill Countries, for the most part ten Leagues broad, in some places more; the Hill-Countries 20 Leagues in breadth, where narrowest, and as much the Andes. In the Plains it never raineth, on the Andes continually in a manner; in the Hill Countries it raineth from September to April, being after that fair weather. In the Hill-Country the Summer beginneth in April, and endeth in September; in the Plains their Summer beginneth in October, and endeth in April. So that a man may travel from Summer to Winter in one day; be frozen in the morning at his setting forth, and scorch'd with heat before he come to his journey's end. Some other differences there are: as that the Andes are covered with Woods and Forests, whereas the Hill-Countries are bare and naked; the Plains, where there are store of Rivers, and the benefit of the Sea besides, sandy and dry, and in most places destitute both of Fruits and Corn: in some parts of the Hill-Countries, where there are no Rivers, and Rain but seldom, plenty of Roots, Maize, Fruits, and all other necessaries. In the Plains there never bloweth any but the Southern Wind, though it bring no Rain with it; and in the Hills Winds from every Coast, and of every nature; some bringing Rain, some Snow, some claps of Thunder, and others fair Weather at the heels of them. Inasmuch that it is observed, that such of the Inhabitants of the Plains as go up to the Sierra, or Mountains, do find such pains in the Head and Stomach, as Freshwater Soldiers when they first Sea-sick.

Not to pursue these differences any farther in the several parts, we will look upon the whole in gross; which we shall find but meagrely furnished for the biggish with those Commodities which so large a Country might afford: inasmuch as many of the people live most on Roots, here being little Wheat, and not such quantities of Maize (the ordinary Bread-grain of the Americans) as to serve their multitudes. Nor find I, that the Cattle of Europe have been either brought hither in any great numbers, or are grown to any great increase. Instead of which they have in their Woods and Pastures infinite numbers of Beasts, somewhat like wild Goats (which they call Vicaguas) and great flocks of kind of Sheep, by them called Pacos, profitable both for Fleece and Burthen; as big as a small breed of Horses, but in taste as pleasing as our Mutton, and no less nourishing. A creature so well acquainted with its own abilities, that when he findeth himself over-loaded, no blows or violence shall make him move a foot forward, till his load be lessened; and of so cheap a Diet, that he is content with very little, and sometimes passeth three whole days without any water. The Camels of these parts are not much unlike them.

This, as it is by some accounted for a Creature proper to this Country only, (though in that mistake) so may it pass among the Rarities herof: many of which it hath both in Beasts and Plants, and in inanimate Bodies also. Among their Plants they have a Fig-tree, the North-part whereof, looking towards the Mountains bringeth forth its fruits in the Summer only, the Southern part looking to the Sea, fruitful only in Winter. Some as deserv'dly do account the Caca for a Wonder, the Leaves whereof being dried, and formed into Lozenges, (or little Pellets) are exceeding useful in a Journey. For melting in the mouth, they satisfy both hunger and thirst, and preserve a man in strength, and his spirits in vigour; and generally are efficacious of such foreign use, that it is thought that 100000 Basketsfull of the leaves of this Tree are sold yearly at the Mines of Potosi only, each of which at the Markets of Cusco would yield 12 pence or 18 pence a piece. Another Plant they tell us of, but I find no name for it, which if put into the hands of a sick person, will instantly discover whether he be like to live or die. For it on the pressing of it in his hand he look merry and cheerful, it is an assured sign of his Recovery: as on the other side, of Death, if sad and troubled. Amongst their Beasts, besides those spoken of before, they reckon that which they call the Huana: of which it is observed, that the Males find Sentinels on the Mountains, while the Females are feeding in the Valleys; and it they see any men coming towards them, they let out their throats, to give their Females notice of some danger near; whom, when they come up to them, they put in the Front of the Retreat, incorporating their own bodies betwixt them and their Enemy. Nor want they Rarities of Nature even in things inanimate: here being laid to be a round Lake near the Mines of Potosi, whose water is so hot, though the Country it self be exceeding cold, that they who bathe themselves are not able to endure the heats thereof, if they go but a little from the Banks; there being in the midst thereof a boiling of above twenty foot square. A Lake which never doth decrease, though they have drawn a great stream from it to serve their Metal-Mills.

More profitable, though less rare, are those Metals, which those Mills are made for; and not less profitable, one of those Vulgar Plants, I mean Tobacco, growing more abundantly here than in other Countries of America: for which cause, and the resemblance which it hath to Hemp, in form and quality, it is called the Huano of Peru by Granada, and some other of our Modern Herbalists. A Plant; which (though in some respect, being moderately taken, it may be serviceable for Physick, yet) besides the consumption of the pipe, and impairing of our inward parts, the immoderate, vain and phantastical abuse of this stinking Weed, corrupteth the natural sweetness of the breath, fuppresseth the Brain; and indeed is so prejudicial to the general esteem of our Country-men, that one faith of them, Angustum corpus, qui hunc plantam tanquam indigenam, in Barbarorum naturam degenerasse videntur. The two chief Virtues ascribed unto it (pardon me I beseech you this short Digression) are, That it voideth Rheum, and is found to be a sovereign Antidote against Lues Venerea, that loathsome Disease of the French Pox. For this last, like enough it is, that so unclean a Disease may be helped with such an unfavoury Medicine. But for the first, it may perhaps commit me in Opinion than truth or reality; the Rheum, which it is said to void, being no more than what it breedeth at the present. We may as well conclude, that breeded Ale is good for the breaking of Wind, (which effect we had commonly to follow on the drinking of it) though indeed it be only the same Wind which it self conveyed into the Stomach. But Tobacco is by few now taken as Medicinal; it is of late times grown a good fellow, and fallen from a Physician to a Complement. An Humour which had never spread so far amongst us, if the same means of prevention had been used by the Christian Magistrates, as was by Mora Bassa among the Turks; who commanded a Pipe to be thrust through the nose of a Turk, whom he found taking Tobacco, and him to be carried in division all about Constantinople. It is observed, that the taking of Tobacco was first brought into England by the Mariners of Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1585. And that it hapned not tardily in the way of an Antidote to that immoderate use of Drinking, which our Low-Country Soldiers had brought out of the Netherlands much about that time. Anno 1582. Before which time, the English of all Northern people were deemed to be most free from that Swinish vice, wherein it is to be noted, that they have much out-gone their Teachers, the Dutch. Certain it is, that it is taken so excessively by both these Nations, that I may justly say with a learned Flaming, Horbe ejus, non dicam ejus, sed ab ejus, non modo in Europa, sed in Belgio, & aliis, insensum in modum jam adhevit.

But the greatest Riches of this Country is most out of sight light, hid in the Bowels of the Earth, but found in those never-decaying Mines of Gold and Silver, more eminently abundant in this one Province than in all América. For instance whereof we may take the Silver-Mines of Potosí, discovered in the year 1545, the fifth of which, payable into the King's Exchequer, amounted in forty years to 111 Millions of Pezeos, every Pezo being valued at six shillings and sixpence: and yet a third part of the whole was discharged of that payment. By this one we may guess somewhat of the rest, as by the proportion of one member the Dimensions of the whole Body may be probably aimed at: unless the riches of these Mines be beyond conjecture; of which it is affirmed by some knowing men, that they yield in many places more Gold than Earth. Upon which ground it is conceived by Arias Montano, and some other very learned men, That this Peru is that Land of Ophir to which Salomon's Navy went for Gold; induced thereunto by that Text of the Chronicles, lib. 2. cap. 2. vers. 16. That the Gold was the Gold of Parvaim. A fancy not of so fond a Foundation as many others of that kind, if Peru had been the old name of this Country, and not newly given it by the Spaniards. By means whereof, not only Spain but all Europe also is better furnished with Gold and Silver than ever formerly. For in the first Ages of the World our Antecitors, the Britains, (I must digress here once again) had no other money than Iron-rings and Brass-Rings, which they used for Instruments of Exchange; and in the Roman Provinces, we read that the most useful materials of their Coin was molten Brass, and sometimes Leather. Civium fœmâ publicâ periculis, as it is in Seneca. Of which last fort we find, that Frederick the Emperor made use at the Siege of Millain, and the English in the time of the Barons Wars. And why not? considering that no longer since than in the year 1574, the Hollanders being then reduced to some Extremities made money of Pail-board. But this happened only in cases of Necessity, the two Metals of Gold and Silver having for many hundred years (though not in such abundance as in later times) being the chief Instruments of Exchange and Barter betwixt man and man, and questionless will to continue to the end of the World. I know Sir Thomas More in the second Book of his Utopia, preferreth Iron before Gold, because Gold is more necessary for all uses: Et sine quo non magis quam sine igne aqua vivere Mortales queant: that he giveth us there a Plot to bring Gold and Silver into contempt, telling us how the Utopians use to employ those Metals in making Chamber-pots and Vessels of more unclean necessities, eating and drinking for the most part in Glass or Earth. He telleth us also how they make Chains and Fetters of Gold to hold in their rebellious Slaves and Malefactors; how they punish infamous Persons by putting Gold-Rings upon their Fingers, Jewels of Gold in their Ears, and Chains of Gold about their Necks: how they adorn their little Children with precious Jewels, which Gaieties, when they come to Age, and see them worn by none but such little Children, they use to cast away of their own accord: as with us our elder Boys leave off, without constraint, their Babies, Cobsuts, and other Ornamenta. He farther telleth us, how the Ambassadors of the Anconitis, (a confederate State of the Vic-plians) coming amongst them richly and gloriously attired, were took for Slaves, by reason of their Golden Chains, and the meanness of their Followers thought to be the Ambassadors: how the elder Boys derided the Strangers for wearing Jewels, as if they had been Children still: and how the people laugh at their Chains of Gold, as being too weak to shackle such sturdy Fellows. Now though it pleased that wise State to have any Gold or Silver at all amongst them, it was not (as he telleth us) out of any esteem which themselves had of it: but there-with to provide themselves of Foreign Aids, and pay their Armies, when the necessities of their Affairs or other reason of State did require the same. How this Device would fort with the humours of those People whom Lacian anciently did fable, and some of later times more really do fancy, to have their dwelling in the Moon, I am not able to say, as having hitherto had no Commerce nor correspondence with the Inhabitants thereof: though possibly I may endeavour it in the end of this Book, and find it to fort well enough with their Condition. Certain I am, this sublimary World of ours will never brook it. And to leave it and look back again on the Mines of Potosí, the extraordinary plenty of Gold and Silver, which those and the rest of the New World have furnished the Old World withal, being conceived by many knowing and judicious men to be the cause of the dearth of all Commodities at the present times, compared unto the cheapness of the times foregoing. For where much is, there greater prices will be given than in other places. And yet there want not some that add also other causes of the high prices of our dayes, viz. Monopolies, Combinations of Merchants and Craftsmen, Transportation of Grain, pleasure of great Personages, the excess of private men, and the like: but these last I rather take to be Con-causes, the first being indeed the principal. For (as that excellent Sir Henry Savile hath it in the end of his Notes on Tacitus) the excessive abundance of et vixit auro vixit, things which consist merely on the Constitution of men, draweth necessarily et vixit auro, those things which Nature requireth, to an higher Rate in the Market. Capit ab Augusto Alexandria, (saith Orsius) Roma in tantum opibus ejus crevit, ut dupla majora quam antea rerum venalium pretia fuissenturum. As for that Question, Whether of the two Kingdoms be happier, that which supplieth it self with Money by Traffick and the works of Art, or that which is supplied by Mines growing as the gift of Nature: I find it by this Tale in part resolved. Two Merchants, departing from Spain to get Gold touched upon part of Barbary, where the one buying Mores to dig and delve with, the other broughteth his Vessel with Shovels and being come to the Indies, the one finding Mines, set his Slaves to work; and the other happening in grassy Ground, put his Sheep to grazing. The Slaves grown cold and hungry, call for Food and Cloathing; which the Sheep-matter by the increase of his flock had in great abundance: to fort what the one got in Gold with toil, charges, and hazard both of life and health, he gladly gave unto the other in Exchange or Barter, for the continual supply of Victuals, Clothes, and other Necessaries for himself and his Servants. In the end the Mines being exhausted, and all the money thence arising exchanged with the Shepherd for such Necessaries as his Wants required; home comes the Shepherd in great Triumph, with abundance of Wealth, his Companion bringing nothing with him but the Tale of his Travels. But I dare not take upon me to determine this point. Only I add, that the English and Hollanders, by the benefit of their Manufactures and continual Traffick, did in conclusion weary the late King of Spain, King Philip the Second, and outwied him (as it were) in Wealth and Treasure notwithstanding his many Mines of Gold and Silver in Barbary, India, Mexicana, Guinea, some in Spain and Italy and these of Peru which now we handle, and which have given occasion unto this Discourse, or Digression rather.

It is now time to take a view of the People also, affirmed to be (for the most part) of great simplicity: yet some of them (those especially which lie near the Agua- tor) to be great dissemblers, and never to discover their conceptions freely. Ignorant of Letters, but of good courage in Wars, well skilled in managing such Weapons as they had been used to, and fearless of Death: the rather prompted to this last by an old opinion held amongst them, that in the other world they shall eat, and drink, and make love to Women. And therefore commonly at the Funeral of any great person, who was attended on in his life, they use to kill and bury with him one or more of his Servants, to wait upon him after death. In the manner of their living much like the Jews, but not in Habit: conforming therein to the other Savages, but that those cover their upper parts with some decent Garment, and leave the other members bare. But this is only near the Agua-tor; both Sexes elsewhere wearing Mantles to their very Heels. Habited in one fashion over all the Country, except the dressing of their Heads, wherein scarce any one doth agree with another, but hath his Fashion to himself. The Women less elevated here than in other places, treated as Slaves, and sometimes cruelly beaten upon slight occasions: the men (as S. Paul faith of the ancient Gentiles) leaving the natural use of the Woman, and burning in their lust towards one another. For which, if God delivered them into the hands of the Spaniards, they received that recompence which was meet.

Rivers of most note, 1. S. Jago, on the borders towards Papayana, a River of a violent course, and to great depth, that it is 80 Fathoms deep at the influx of it. 2. Tombez, opening into a fair and capacious Bay, over against the life of Pana, on the further side of the Agua-tor; an Island of twelve Leagues in compass, and exceeding fruitful. 3. Guayaquil, of a longer course than any of the other two, and falling into the Mouth of the Sea, on the South of Tombez, over against the life of Lobos. No Island after this of note upon all this Coast. If any come in our way which runneth towards the East, we shall meet with them in view of the several Provinces; and so we shall with the Hills or Mountains which are most considerable; the Andes having been already touched on. Take we now notice of the great Lake of Titicaica, in which twelve Rivers are reported to lose themselves; in compass 80 Leagues, and usually navigable with Ships and Barks. The Waters off it so late as those of the Sea, but to think that no body can drink them; yet on the banks of it many Habitations, as good as any in Peru. By a tank Water-course or River it passeth into a less Lake, which they call Anlaya; and thence most probably findeth a way into the Sea, or else is swallowed in the bowels of that thisty Earth: but the first more likely.

It is divided commonly into three Judicial Reforts, viz. of 1. Quito, 2. Lima; and 3. Charcas each having under it many several and subordinate Provinces, too many and of too small note to be here considered. We will therefore look upon the chief, and of greatest reckoning: 1. Quito, 2. Los Quijos, 3. Lima, 4. Cusco, 5. Charcas; and 6. Colla, three on the Sea, and the other three in the mid-lands; to which the Islands of it shall be joyed in the close of all.

1. QUITO, is bounded on the North with Papayana; on the West with Mare del Zur; on the South, with the Province of Lima; and on the East, with that of Los Quijos. So named from Quito, the chief Town and Province of the first Division.

The Soil is as fertile, and as fit for the Fruit of Europe as any other in Peru: well stored with Cattel, especially the Paco's or Peruvia Sheep; and plentifully furnished both with Fish and Fowl. In many parts great store of Nitre, of which they make most approved good Gunpowder; and in some Rivers, especially that of S. Barbata, many veins of Gold. The People generally industrious, especially in making of Cloth of Cotton, equal almost to Silks for fineness: of constitution strong, and healthy, but given to lying, drinking, and such other Vices; with which they are so much in love, that though they are conceived to be apt of Learning, yet not without great difficulty brought to the Christian Faith, nor treacly reclaimed from their ancient Barbarism. Exceedingly punished with the Pox, an hereditary Disease amongst them; the very Girls and untouched Virgins so infected with it, that neither Tobacco, Guacacum, nor Sassa-parilla, all which this Country doth afford in a great abundance, is able to prescribe them from it.

Towns of most observation in it, 1. Carangues, a large and sumptuous Palace of the ancient Kings; so named, because situate in the Territory of the Carangues, a barbarous, bloody, and man-eating People, subdued by Guaynacapa, one of the mightiest of the Kings of Peru, from whom revolting, and withal killing many of his Militaries and Garrison Soldiers, they were upon a second Conquest brought to the banks of a great Lake; where 20000 of them being killed, were thrown. The Lake from thenceforth called Tayacacocha, or the lake of blood. 2. Olavain, another Pallace of the Kings, but far inferior to the other; yet giving name unto the Canuto in which it standeth. 3. Quito, the chief of this Refort and once the Regal Seat of its proper Kings, (still made subject by Guaynacapa before mentioned) the Ruines of whose Palace are now remaining. By the Spaniards it is called S. Francisco: built on the declivity of an Hill, not above 30 minutes from the Equinodical's well fortified, and as well furnished with Ammunition: inhabited by about 5000 Spaniards, besides the Natives. The Streets thereof straight and broad; the Buildings decent: the principal of the Cathedral Church, the Courts of Justice, and two Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Friars. The Town and Territory much annoyed by a flaming Mountain, or Volcano, which in the year 1566, cast out such abundance of Cinders, that it a Rain had not hapned beyond expectation, had made great spoil upon the place. 4. Tuacaca, fifteen Leagues from Quito, and 5. Riohumbra, in the Territory of the Peruvians, 10 Leagues from that: each of them honoured with another of those ancient Palaces, 6. Thombambra, neighbored by another of the King's Palaces, but more magnificent than the former, situate in the Country of the Canuris, amongst whom anciently the Women till the Land, and did all without doors, whilst the men staid at home and spun, and attended Housewifery. 7. Cuzco, 64 Leagues from Quito on another Road, situate in a Country full of Gold, Silver, Brass, Iron, and Vains of Sulphur. 8. Loxa, sixteen Leagues Southward of Cuzco, situate in the fifth degree of Southern Latitude, and in a sweet and pleasant Valley called Guacabamba, between two fine Rivulets. The Citizens well furnished with Horse and Armour, but not otherwise wealthy. 9. Zamora, twenty Leagues on the East of Loxa; and 10. Jaca, 35 from that: both situate in the Province of Quindimayo, and both so called in reverence to two Cities of those names in Spain. Then on the Sea-coasts there are, 11. Porto Vitor, (Porto Vain, as the Spaniards call it) not far from the Sea-side, but in foul an Air, that it is not very much frequented. Said to be one of the first Towns of this Country possessed by the Spaniards, who digged up herabulous bones of a monstrous Giant, whose Clack-teeth were four fingers broad. 12. Mann, the Port-Town to Porto Vain, from whence the Trade is driven betwixt Panama and Peru; the Town it self situate in a rich Vine of Enceables. 13. Guayaquil, or S. Jago de Guayaquil, called also Calata, seated at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, near the influx of the River Guayaquil, a noted and much frequen-

Track were much waded by the Civil wars which the Spaniards had among themselves. 3. Huancalla, the Metropolis or chief Town of this Province, as the name doth signify: not far from which the famous River Cachayay, famous for the abundance of Gold in the sands thereof, hath its first original. 4. Chiquiza, a Colony of the Spaniards, on the banks of the Lake of Titicaqa: a Town of fo great Trade and Riches, that the Governor hereof is named immediately by the King; its place being estimated at the worth of 50000 Ducats yearly. 5. Tiaguanaco, at the mouth or out-let of that Lake; supposed to be the most ancient Burrough of Peru: now most remarkable for the Ruines of certain great and stupendous Buildings, some of the stones whereof are said to be 30 foot long, fifteen foot in breadth, and fix in thickness; not to be brought thither without the help of Iron Engines: (which this people had not till of late) but by some strange Arts. 6. De la Paz, or Nuestra Señora de la Paz, by the Spaniards called also Pueblo Nuevo, and by the Natives Chiquiza, according to the name of the Cantrid in which it standeth, is situate at the foot of a little Mountain, by which defended from the injuries of Wind and Weather, but over-looking a large Plain of great fertility: well watered, and well wooded both for Fruits and Fuel. 7. Chilane, 8. Acos, 9. Pomata, 10. Capita: and some others of as little note.

6. LOS CHARCAS on the North is bounded with Lima and Collao: on the South, with Chile; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the East, with some Countreys not well discovered, interposed betwixt it and the Province of Kio de la Plata. This is also called by the name of Plaza, according to the name of the chief City of it.

The Country extendeth in length from north to south but 300 Leagues, but measuring by the sea-shores, above 400. Not very rich in Corn or Cattel, though in many places furnished with good Pasture-grounds: but for the inexhaustible Mines of Gold and Silver, not to be equalled in Peru. Of these the principal are those of Potosi and Potosi, but these last the chief: out of which comes that Mass of Silver which yieldeth the King so much profit yearly, as before was mentioned. The Mine 200 Fathoms deep, so that they do defend, by Ladders made of raw Hides, 800 steps: some of the Workmen see not the Sun for many months together; many fall down with their loads of silver on their backs, pulling others after them, and many die in the Works for want of Air. For the refining of this Silver there are 52 Engines, or Silver Mills, upon a River near unto it: 22 more in the valley of Tarapaca not far off, besides many which they turn with Horses. The Poets words never more literally verified than in these deep Mines, where speaking of the Iron Age, he describes it thus:

Pescabatur humus, sed ium q̄ in viscera terre;
Quasque reconsideras Stygiæq̄ advocat Umbra, Effuditur opes, irritamenta malorum.*

Which I find thus rendered by George Sandys:
Nor with rich Earth's just nourishments content,
For Treasures they her secret Entrails rent.

That powerful evil, which all power invades,
By her well hid and wrapt in Stygian Shades.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Plata, so called from the rich Mines of Silver found in Mount Poro near adjoining, well celebrated by the ancient Incas, but searched into again by Francisco Pizarro, who (it is thought) might have raised hence 200000 Ducats of yearly Income, if hopes of greater at Potosi had not took him off. The Town is commodiously seated in a fruitful soil in the 19. degree of Latitude, and 180 Leagues distant from the City of Cusco, honoured with the seat of the Governour and the Courts of Justice, and beautified (besides many Religious Houses) with a fair Cathedral, the See of the best endowed Bishoprick in all Peru; its Revenues being estimated at 8000 Ducats of yearly Rents. By the Natives it is called Chiquiza. 2. Oropesa, twenty Leagues from Plata, built by Don Francisco Toledo, when Viceroy here, in the rich and pleasant Valley called Achabamba, Anno 1565. 3. Potosi, neighboured by those wealthy Mines already mentioned. Discovered first in the year 1545, before which time this Town was but a sorry Village; now the best peopled and frequented in all the Province: said to be continually inhabited by four or five thousand Spaniards, many more of the Natives: not so few as 30000 Workmen appearing to it; but lodged in the Villages adjoining: besides the infinite resort of Merchants in pursuit of profit, and idle Gallants, who come hither for their lusts and pleasures. Situate in the 21. Degree and 40 Minutes of Southern Latitude, in a cold and very barren Soil; yet plentifully furnished with all Commodities both for Necessity and Delight. For as the money is, so is the Market always full. It is a little Town, but one which furnisheth Potosi with good plenty of Wine, as 5. Lagunilla, and 6. Tarica, do with Wheat, Maize, Sugar, and choice of Fruits. 7. Arica, the most noted Haven of this Country, in the Latitude of 19 degrees, and 80 Leagues, or thereabouts, from the Mines of Potosi; a little wealth thereof, brought thither on the backs of their Sheep is here shipped for Lima. The truth hereof was experienced by Sir F. Drake, who seized here on three Spanish Ships, in one of which was 57 Bars of Silver, each of them twenty pound weight apiece. Few other Towns, if any, upon all this Coast, which is altogether Rocky, barren, and unfit for Habitation; accordingly but little peopled, or not at all.

Come we now to the Peruvian Story, which we shall sum up with as much brevity as we can. The People are generally governed by the chief of their Tribes, as in all Countreys else, where neither the Arms of Forcemen nor the Ambition of some few of the Natives had diminished any thing of those natural Rights. Not subject to any one supreme till these latter times, the Incas or Monarchs of Peru growing unto their greatness but a little before their fall. Their Territory at the first so small, that it was not above five or six Leagues in compass, situate in that part of the Country where the City of Cusco now standeth. Opposed at their first Encroachments by the Cannars, a valiant Nation, and likely to have had the better, if the Incas had not helped themselves by a piece of Wit; giving it out, that their Family had not only been the Seminary from which Mankind came, but the Authors of that Religion into which was then in use; particularly that the whole World had been destroyed by a Flood, except only seven, (so far they hit upon the truth) which seven had hid themselves in a Cave, called Paititamba, where having lived in safety till the fury of the Waters had been asswaged, they came abroad at last and re-peopled the Country; that Viracocha, the Creatour and great God of Nature, had appeared to one of them, and taught him how and with what Rites he would be worshipped, which Rites were afterwards received over all Peru; and finally, that the same Viracocha had appeared lately to the chief of their Family, assuring him that he would aid him with invincible Forces against all their Enemies. This Tale soon gained belief amongst those Barbarians, and that belief drew many to take part with the Incas, by that Aid victorious. This is supposed to have happened 400 years before the Spaniards put an an end to this flourishing Kingdom, which was in the year 1533. Within which time they had brought all this Country which we now call Peru, and many of the adjoining Provinces, under their Dominion. Their Kings were called Incas, as the Egyptians Pharaohs, the Tartars Chans; the word Inca signifying an Emperor, as Capa Inca (by which they sometimes called them) the only Emperours. Much revered by their Subjects, and so faithfully served, that never any of their Subjects were found guilty of Treason: Nor wanted they good Arts whereby to incite their Subjects, and keep them out of leisure to foment new Factions. The way of incitement, by the fair and satisfactory distribution of the spoils gotten in the Wars, whether Lands or Goods; all which they divided into three parts: allotting the first unto the service of the Gods; the second, for the maintenance of the King, his Court, and Nobles; the third, to the relief of the common people. A Distribution far more equal than that Lycurgus, or the Lex Agraria, or the Romans. But when there was no cause of wars, they kept the people busied in the works of Magnificence as building Palaces in every one of the conquered Provinces, which served not only for Houses to assure the Conquerors, but were employed as Store-houses to lay up Provisions, distributed amongst the people in times of dearth. But that which was the work of as greater trouble, or of chiefest use, was the Crofs ways they made over all the Country, the one upon the Mountains, and the other on the Plains, extending 500 Leagues in length: a work to be preferred before any both of Rome and Egypt. For they were forced to raise the ground in many places to the height of the Mountains, and lay the Mountains level with the flatted Plains: to cut through fume Rocks, and underprop others that were ruinous; to make even such ways as were uneven, and support the Precipices; and in the Plains to vanquish all many difficulties as the uncertain foundation of a sandy Country must needs carry with it. Kept to these Tasks, the people had no leisure to think of Practices; yet well content to undergo them in regard they saw it tended to the publick benefit. And for the Caciques, (to they call the Nobility) the Inca did not only command them to reside in Cusco, to be assured of their persons; but caused them to lend their Children to be brought up there, that they might serve as Hostages for the Fathers Loyalty. They ordered also, that all such as repaired to Cusco, the Imperial City, should be attired according to his own Country fashion; so to prevent those Leagues and Associations which otherwise, without any note or observation, might be made amongst them. Many such Politick Institutions were by them devised, which had little of the Barbarous in them; and clearly shewed that there were other Nations which had Eyes in their Heads besides those of China. What else concerns the Story of them, offereeth it felt in the following Catalogue of

The Kings of PERU.

1. Mango-Capac, defended of the chief of the first seven Families, the first who laid the foundation of this puissant Monarchy: he subdued the Cannars, and built the City of Cusco.
2. Sinchi Capac, eldest son of Mango, subdued a great part of Collao, as far as Chancara.
3. Louque-Incapuqui, the son of Sinchi, conquered Chiquiza, Ayacucho, the Cannars, and the Inhabitants about Titicaqa: the last Advancer of the service of Viracocha, from whom he did pretend to have many Vint.
4. Mayta-Capac, the son of Tupanqui, subdued all the rest of Collao, the Provinces of Chiquiza, and a great part of the Charcos.

5. Capac-Incapuqui, or Tupanqui II. the son of Mayta, enlarged his Kingdom Westward unto Mare del Zur.

6. Rocho II. of Tueba-Rocha, eldest son of Tupanqui the second, enlarged his Kingdom towards the North, by the Conquest of the great Province of Atabambilla, and many others.

7. Jahuar-Huacac, Son of Rocho the second, added to his Estates (by the Valour of his Brother Mayta) all the southern parts from Arequipa to Tacanan. D. posed by the practice of his son.

8. Viracocha, the son of Huacac, having settled and enlarged his Empire, raised many great and flatly Works, and amongst others many Aqueducts of great use, but charge. For fear of him, Huancabamba, King of the Chuncos, with many thousands of his people, took the Country.

9. Pachacuti-Inca, son of Viracocha, improved his Kingdom by the Conquest of many Provinces lying towards the Andes and fourth sea; with that of Caxamalca Northwards.

10. Tupanqui III. or Tueba-Incapuqui, son of Pachacuti, subdued the Conches and Moxes, with some part of Chile.

11. Tupanqui IV. or Tapac Tueba Tupanqui, Son of Tupanqui the third, extended his Dominions as far as Quito.

12. Huayna-Capac, or Guaynacapac, son of Tupanqui the fourth, the most mighty Monarch of Peru, conquered the whole Province of Quito; and is supposed to be the Founder of those two great Roads spoken of before.

13. Huascar, or Cuschar-Inca, the eldest Son of Guaynacapac, after a Reign of five years deposed and slain by his Brother.

14. Athualpa, or Atabalipa, the third Son of Guaynacapac, by the Daughter and Heir of the King of Quito, into which Kingdom he succeeded by the Will of his Father. Commanded by his Brother to do Homage for the Kingdom of Quito, he came upon him with such power, that he overcame him, and so gained the Kingdom. Vanquished afterwards by Pizarro at the battle of Caxamalca he was taken Prisoner. And though he gave him a ransom for his Life and Liberty, an House piled up on all sides with Gold and Silver, valued (as some say) at ten Millions of Crowns; yet they perished, as flew him.

15. Mango-Capac II. the second son of Guaynacapac, subduded by Pizarro in his Brothers Throne, after many vicissitudes of Fortune, was at last slain in the City of Cusco, and to the Kingdom of the Incas began and ended in a Prince of the same name, as it happened formerly to some other Estates.

Let us next look upon the birth and fortune of that Pizarro, who subdued this most potent and flourishing Kingdom, and made it a Member of the Spanish Empire. And we shall find that he was born at Trujillo, a Village of Navarro, and by the poor Whore whose Mother laid in the Church porch, and so left to Gods Providence; by whose direction (there being none found that would give him the Bread) he was nourished for certain days by sucking a Sow. At last one Condesa a Soldier, acknowledged him for his son, put him to Nurse, and, when he was somewhat grown, set him to keep his Swine: some of which being lured, the Boy durst not for fear return home, but betook himself to his heels, ran unto Sevil, and there shipped himself for America, where he spent, and Alonso de Ojeda, in the discovery of the Countreys beyond the Gulf of Urdaba; Balboa in his Voyage to the South-sea; and Pedro de Avila in the Conquest of Pa- nomas. Grown rich by these Adventures, he associated himself with Diego de Almagro, and Fernando Lopez a rich Priest; who betwixt them raised 200 Soldiers, and in the year 1525 went to seek their Fortunes on those Southern Seas which Balboa had before discovered. After divers Repulses at his landing, and some hardship which he had endured, Pizarro at the length took some of the Inhabitants of Peru, of whom he learnt the Wealth of the Country; and returning thence to Spain, obtained the Kings Commission for the Conquest of it, excluding his Companions out of the Patent, but taking in Almagro of his own accord. Thus furnished and landed in Peru again, at such time as the Wars grew hot betwixt the two Brethren for the Kingdom, and taking part with the Faction of Guscar, marched against Atabalipa; whom he met with in the plains of Caxamalca, but rather prepared for a Parley, then to fight a Battle. Pizarro taking this Advantage, picked a Quarrel with him, and suddenly charged upon him with his Horse and Ordnance, slaying his Guard without resistance; and coming near the Kings Person, (who was then carried on mens shoulders) pulled him down by the Cloaths, and took him Prisoner. With him they took as much Gold as amounted to 8000 Castellans, and as much Silver as amounted to 7000 Marks, (every Mark weighing eight ounces) of his Household Plate; and the Spoil of Caxamalca, almost infinite Riches. This, with the Kings Reward, came to be so great a sum, that besides the fifth part which Pizarro sent to the Emperor, and that which Pizarro and his Brethren kept unto themselves, every Footman had 7200 Ducats, and every Horseman twice as much, for their part of the Spoil; besides what they had gotten in the way of plunder. Here they dealt afterwards with the miserable King, their prisoner, hath been shewn already. Upon which Act though they put many fair pretences, yet God declared that he was not pleased with their proceedings; few of the greatest undertakers going to the Grave in peace. For though Pizarro, in reward of so great a Service, was made the first Vice-Roy of Peru, and created Marquis of Anatilla; yet having put to death Almagro, his chief Companion, who had raised a strong Faction in that State, he was after slain at Lima by some of that Faction, in revenge of the death of their Commander. The like unfortunate end befel all the rest: his Brother John slain by the Peruvians; Martin in Lima with himself; Ferdinando secretly made away in Prison; and finally, Gonzales the fourth Brother, with the son of Almagro, severally executed for their Treasons and Infurctions, which they had acted in this Country against their King. So little Joy doth Wealth ill gotten bring along with it to the owners thereof. And here I am to leave Pizarro, whose strange both fortunes and misfortunes in the course of his Life are to be paralleled only with the like of Sinan, a great Basha in the Court of Selimus the first; who being born of base Parents, as he (being a Child) was sleeping in the Shade, had his Genitals bitten off by a Sow. The Turkish Officers which usually provided young Boys for the service of the Grand Signiour, being in Epirus, (for that was Sinan's Country) and hearing of this extraordinary an Eunuch, took him among others along with them to the Court; where under Mahomet the Great, Bajazet the second, and his son Selimus, he so exceedingly thrived, that he was made the chief Basha of the Court; and so well deserved it, that he was accounted Selimus's right hand; and was indeed the man to whose Valour especially the Turk owe their Kingdom of Agypt: in which Kingdom then not fully settled he was also slain.

But to return to Peru. No question but the Forces and Revenues of it were exceeding great. For, though we find no particular musters which they made of their men, or what great Armies they drew with them into the Field, yet by their great Successes and many Victories, we may conclude them to be Masters of great Bands of men, and skilful in the Arts of Conduict. Nor can we otherwise conjecture at the greatness of their yearly income, but by the greatness of their Treasure; so infinite and almost incredible, that all the Vessels of the Kings House, his Table and Kitchen, were of Gold and Silver; Statues of Giants in his Wardrobe, together with the resemblances in proportion and bigness of all the Beasts, Birds, Trees, Plants and Fishes, which were found in that Kingdom, of the purest Gold; Ropes, Budgets, Troughs, Chells, all of Gold or Silver; Bills of Gold piled up together, as if they had been Bills of Wood cut out for the fire; three Houses full of pieces of Gold, and five full of Silver. All which, besides infinite other Treasures, fell into the hands of a few poor Spaniards; who grew so wondrously rich, that they would give 1500 Crowns for an Horse, 600 Crowns for a small Vessel of Wine, and 40 for a pair of Shoes; consuming all upon their lusts, and sacrificing their Gods of Gold to their God the Belly.

OF ## CHILE.

CHILE is bounded on the North with the Defart of Alacama, 90 Leagues in length, interposed betwixt it and Peru; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the South, with the Streights of Magellan; and on the East, as far as to Rio de la Plata, with the main Atlantic; the Countreys lying on the East betwixt it and Paraguay not well discovered.

This Country lieth wholly beyond the Tropick of Capricorn, by consequence in the temperate Zone, extended in length, from the borders of Peru to the mouth of the Streights, 500 Leagues; but the breadth variable and uncertain. Called Chile from the word Chill, (which in more Tongues then ours doth signifie as much as Cold) from the extreme coldness of the Air and Clime; so vehement herein our Summer Solstice, that many times both the Horses and the Riders are frozen to death, and hardened like a piece of Marble.

The Soil hereof in the midland parts Mountainous and unfruitful; towards the Sea-side level, fertile, and watered tered with divers Rivers flowing from the Mountains: productive of Maize, Wheat, and most excellent Pasturage: plenty of Gold and Silver, abundance of Honey, store of Cattel and Wine enough for the use of the People; the Vines brought hither out of Spain prospering here exceedingly, as do also all the Fruits and Plants, which are sent from thence into this Country. The people very tall and warlike, some of them of a Gigantick Stature, affirm I (but I believe it not) to be eleven foot high; yet well conditioned with his greatness, where we much provoked. Their Garments of the Skins of Beasts, their Arms Bow and Arrows: a white of Complexion, but as hirsute and flaggy-haired as the rest of the Savages.

Rivers of note there are not any but what will fall within the view of its several Provinces, Divided commonly into 1. Chile specially so called, and 2. Magellanica.

1. CHILE specially so called is bounded on the North with the Defart of Alacama; on the South, with Magellanica; on the West, with Mare del Zur; and on the East, with some unknown Countreys, lying betwixt it and Paraguay, or the province of Rio de la Plata: not above 20 Leagues in breadth, but in length 300. The reason of the name, together with the nature of the soil and people, we have seen before.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1. Rio de Copayabo, giving name unto a Promontory near the Influx of it in the Northern borders of this Province. 2. Rio de Conquinbo, 3. La Laguna, 4. Topicalma, 5. Cacapoel, 6. Canten: all falling into Mare del Zur. And besides these, nameless, but more famous, River, which in the day-time runneth with a violent Current; and in the night hath no Water at all. The reason of it is, because this River, having no constant Fountain, is both begun and continued by the Snow falling from the Mountains, which in the heat of the day, melted into Water is precipitately carried into the sea; but congealed in the coldness of the night yields no Water at all, whereby the Channel becometh empty.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Copayabo, giving name to a fertile Valley in the most Northern Tract hereof, and neighbored by a small, but commodious Haven. 2. Serena, a Colony of the Spaniards, on the Sea-side, not far from the Influx of Rio de Conquinbo, on whose banks it is seated, there built by Baldovia, the Conqueror and first Governour of this Province, Anno 1544. The Territory round about it is rich in Mines of Gold: The Town it self of 200 Houses, but few people, that at the landing of some of the English under Captain Drake, they presently sent out 300 Horse and 200 Foot to compel them back unto their Ships, which they did accordingly. 3. S. Jago, the chief of all this Province, (though not above 80 Houses in it) because the Residence of the Governour and the Courts of Justice; adorned with a Cathedral Church, and some Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Friars; situate in the 34. Degree of Southern Latitude on the Banks of the River Topicalma, at the mouth whereof is the Haven of Val Paraisa, the best and most noted of this Country; out of which the English under Drake took a Spanish Ship, and therein a 5000 Pieces of the purest Gold, besides other Commodities. 4. Conception, 70 Leagues on the South of S. Jago, situate on the Shore of a large and capacious Bay, (by the Natives called Pero) by it and the Mountains on all sides so strongly fenced, that the Governour, when distressed by the Savages, (as sometimes they are) retireth hither for safety. Well fortified in such places as are accessible, and garrisoned with 500 Soldiers, besides the Townsmen.

Opposite hereunto lieth the Mouth of S. Mary, so near the Shore, that it seems to have been rent from it by the force of the Sea: fruitful and very well provided of Swine and Poultry; but the people for fear of the Spaniards dwelling in Conception, that they dare not kill or eat either, but by leave from them. 5. Araucos, (so I think they call it) a strong Fortrefs in the Country of the Araucans, the most potent Nation of these parts; who, weary of the Spanish Yoke, revolted against Baldovia, overcame him in a set fight, and at last killed him: this piece being thereupon forsaken, and of no more use. 6. Delos Confines, built by Baldovia in the borders of the Country of those Araucans, to leave for a defence to the Mines of Ongel near adjoining: distant from the Sea shores about 18 Leagues, enlarged by Garcias de Mendoza, and by him called Villa Nueva de los Infantes. 7. Imperial, in the 38 Degree and 40 Minutes of Southern Latitude, situate on the banks of the River Canten; an Episcopall See, and the best Fortrefs of the Spaniards in all this Province. Fortified and made a Colony of Spaniards in the year 1571, and by Baldovia called Al Imperial, because they found an Eagle with two heads made in Wood on the doors of their houses; a Monument perhaps of some Germans who had here been shipwreckt. A Town of great Wealth and Power, before known to the Spaniards, that in a War betwixt them and the Araucans, spoken of before, they are said to have brought into the Field 300000 men. 8. Villa Rica, another Colony of Spaniards, 16 Leagues on the South-East of Imperial, and 25 Leagues from the Shore of Mare del Zur. 9. Baldovia, the most noted Town of all these parts, situate in the Valley of Guadallangue, in the Latitude of 40 Degrees, or thereabouts; adorned with a safe and capacious Haven, and neighbored by Mines of Gold of such infinite Riches, that Baldovia (by whom built for defence of those Mines) received thence daily by the labour of each single Workman 25000 Crowns a man, and sometimes more. Sacked by the Savages Anno 1599; since repaired by the Spaniards. 10. Oforno, on the Banks of the Bay of Chile, (or Arcaud, as the Savages call it) situate in a barren foil, but well stored with Gold, and thought to be more populous then Baldovia it self. 11. Castro, the most Southern Town of all this Province, in the Latitude of 44: built in a large and fruitful Island in the Bay of Arcaud, said to be 50 Leagues in length, but the breadth unequal: in some parts nine, in others not above two Leagues. 12. S. Juan de la Frontera, on the farther side of the Andes towards Paraguay, or Rio de la Plata.

To this Province there belong also certain Islands lying on the Coastland shores hereof, 1. S. Maria, spoken of before. 2. Mocha, upon the fourth of that, 5 Leagues from the Continent, fruitful of Grain, and very good Pasturage, sufficient to maintain the Inhabitants of it, who being the descendants of those Americans who fled hither to avoid the tyranny of the Spaniards, hitherto have made good their Liberty against that Nation: of which they are so jealous, that they would not suffer the English under Drake and Cavendish to land among them for fear they had been Spaniards, or some Friends of theirs. 4. Castro, which we have spoken of already.

2. MAGELLANICA is bounded on the North with Chile, and the Province of Rio de la Plata: on the south, with Fretum Magellanicum, or the Streights of Magellan, on the West, with Mare del Zur: on the East, with Mare del Nord, or the Main Atlantic; so called from Magellans, by whom first discovered: of whom we shall speak more hereafter.

It is in length from the borders of Chile to the mouth of the Streights 300 Leagues in breadth: from one sea to the other, where broadest, above 400 Leagues, in some some but go only, and in others left, according as it draweth towards the point of the Pyramis. The Inland parts of the Country not yet discovered : those on the sea side observed to be rocky and unfertile, except for the moist part of the year to such bitter colds, that the Snow lieth always on the Mountains. The People said to be tall of Stature, and some of them of a Gigantic kind, reported to be ten or eleven foot high : and by the Spaniards for that reason are called Patagons. Both great and less sufficiently rude and barbarous, quite naked, and unfurnished of any Houses, notwithstanding the rigour of the Cold.

No Houses doth imply no Towns, and therefore we must look for none in to rude a Country, as hath not hitherto converted with more civil Nations. So that the most that we can do is to coast the Shores, and see what names of Ports or Promontories we can find therein. And first upon the Sea-coasts towards Mare del Zur, they place (beginning at the North, and to descending) 1. The Promontory called Cabo de las Islas. 2. The Port or Haven of S. Stephen. 3. The Valley of Nagstra Senora, or our Ladies Valley. 4. The Promontory called Punta Delgado. 5. Porto delos Reyes. 6. Anteon Sinjalida, on the banks of a semi-circular Bay, the receptacle of many Rivers, and not a few Islands. 7. Cabo de la Victoria, or the Cape of Victory, situate betwixt that Bay and the mouth of the Straits : so called from the name of the ship, in which some of the Magellan's soldiers did first compass the World. For Ferdinand Magellan, a noble Portugall, and well skilled in Navigation, at the persuasion or command of Charles the fifth, to whom upon some discontents received in the Court of Emmanuel King of Portugall he had made offer of his service, undertook the finding out (if possible) a shorter cut to the Moluccas then discovered formerly. In the year 1520. he began his Voyage, his Fleet consisting but of 5 ships, whereof that called S. Antonio forsook him in some great displeasure, and returned to Spain : another of them being lost not long after in a storm. Keeping along the Coast to the south of Rio de la Plata, about the end of October he fell upon the Cape of Virgins, at the very entrance of this Strait, which on the doubling of this Cape he was fallen upon : and by the end of November (not before) was fully clear of these Narrow Seas, since called Fretum Magellanicum, and entered into Mare del Zur. Having refreshed himself in a little Island called Ymaginava, he passed unto that also, but not far from the Philippines : the Prince whereof, called Hamabar, he persuaded to become a Christian, baptizing him by the name of Charles : and finally engaging in a Quarrel of his against the King of Mantuan, or Marian, an adjoining Island, he was there unfortunately slain, Anno 1521. After his death Sernus chief Pilot of the Navy, together with 70 of his men, being treacherously slain by Hamabar, the other three ships departed with no more than 15 men aboard them, which put them to a necessity of burning one of their Ships, that they might have men enough to make good the others. With these two Ships they came at last to the Moluccas, where being kindly entertained by the King of Tidore, they divided themselves : that called the Trinity, under Captain Spinoza, designed for Panama in New Spain, but from thence driven back by contrary Winds to the Isle of Tidore, was seized on and spoiled by Antonia Brito, a Captain commanding there a small Navy of the King of Portugall. The other Ship, which by a happy Omen was called Victoria, having in her but 47 Spaniards, under the command of Sebastian del Cano, after a very long and dangerous Voyage, wherein it was thought that he had failed at the least 14000 Leagues, returned to Spain in safety, and brought the welcome news of their good Success. We use to say that Sir Francis Drake was the first that failed round about the World : which may be true in a qualified sense ; viz. that he was the first Captain of men of note that achieved this Enterprize, Magellan perishing in the midst of it ; and therefore he is reported to have given for his Device a Globe, with this Motto, Tu primus circumdaxisti me. This Navigation was begun Anno 1577. and in two years and a half with great vicissitudes of fortune finished. Concerning which his famous Voyage, a Poet then living directed to him this Epigram :

Quemque final mundi vidit antequam Polus
Si taceant homines, facient to Sydera notum.
Sol nescit comitis non minor ossibus.*
Drake, whom th' encompass'd Earth so fully knew,
And whom at once both Poles of Heaven did view,
Should men forget thee, Sol could not forget
To Chronicle his fellow-Traveller.

This Fretum Magellanicum, thic Magellan Strait, is in the 52 degree, and are by Mr. John Davis, who professeth to know every Creek in them, thus described. "For 14 Leagues within the Cape of S. Mary lieth the first Strait, where it ebberth and floweth with a violent swiftnes, the Strait not being fully half a mile broad, and the therifall into it very dangerous and doubtful. Three Leagues this Strait continueth, when it openeth into a Sea eight miles long and as much broad, beyond which lieth the second Strait, right Well-South-West from the first, a perilous and unpleasant passage, three Leagues long, and a mile in breadth. This Strait openeth it fell into another Sea, which is extended even to the Cape of Victory : where is the Strait properly called the Strait of Magellan : a place of that nature, that which way soever a man bend with his course, he shall be sure to have the Wind against him. The length hereof is 40 Leagues : the breadth in some places two Leagues over, in others not fully half a mile. The Chanel in depth 200 Fathoms, so no hope of Anchorage, the course of the Water full of turnings and changings, withal so violent, that when a ship is once entered, there is no returning. On both sides of it are high Mountains continually covered with snow, from which proceed those Counter-winds which beat with equal fury on all parts thereof. A place assuredly not pleasing to view, and very hazardous to pass. So far, and to this purpose Mr. Davis.

But to proceed : the way thus opened was travelled not long after, Anno 1525, by Garcias de Loyas next in the year 1534, by Simon de Alcazar, and four years after by three Ships of the Bishop of Placenza in Spain : but none of them had the hap or courage to adventure through till undertaken and performed by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1577 after which it grew more familiar amongst the Seamen. However, we are so much Debtors to the Attempts of others, as that we owe to them the most part of the names of those Bays and Promontories which they discovered in the search, though many of them be since new named by the English and Hollanders. Those of most note, proceeding from Cabo de la Victoria, are 1. Cabo de Quade, 2. Cape Gallant, 3. Corder Bay, 4. Cape Erasmus, being the very point or Corner of this great Pyramis. 5. Porto Famine, 6. A little Isle called Elizabeths Island, and at the Exit of the Strait in Mare del Noerd, the Cape of Virgins. Then bending Northward toward the great River of Plata, we find upon the Main Ocean, 1. Rio de la Cruz, neighbored by a Promontory called Cabo de las Barreras, where Magellan died all September, and the greatest part of October, in expectation of an opportunity to discover farther. 2. The Bay of S. Julian, out out of which he set sail for this Adventure about the latter end of August, leaving there two of his Companions condemned of Mutiny. 3. The Port of Defire. 4. A large Promontory, called the Cape of S. George. 5. The out-lets of a fair River, named Rio de los Camerones. 6. A goodly Haven, entitled Porto delos Leones. 7. The Cape called Punta de terra plana. 8. The Bay of Amegado. 9. The Promontory called the Cape of S. Andrews. And 10. the River of S. Anne, beyond which lieth the Province of the River of Plata. This is the most that I can say touching Magellanica, as to the Havens, Rivers, Points, and Promontories : and this is nothing (as we see) but a Nomenclatur : it must be better peopled and more discovered before it can afford Discourse of more variety. All we can add, that the passage back again from Mare del Zur, to the Atlantic hath not been found so safe and easy, as from the main Atlantic unto Mare del Zur. Attempted first by Ladrillera a Spaniard, at the command of Garcia de Mendoza, Governour of Chile, and attempted also : performed not long after the Voyage of Sir Francis Drake by D. Pedro Sarmiento, employed therein by Francis de Tolcha, Viceroy of Peru, with much difficulty, and no less danger : so much, that few have since endeavoured to return that way.

As for the Fortunes and Affairs of the Province of Chile, so which we have made this an Appendix, we are to understand that it was first discovered by Almagro de Alvarado, one of Pizarro's chief Friends and Associates. But he having other designs in his head about Peru, which he intended for himself, and to out Pizarro, did discover it only : the Conquest of it being reserved for Balverde, whom Pizarro, on the falling of his Affairs by Peru, whom Pizarro, had employed in that action. He, going Soldier-like to work, not only did subdue the people : but, as he gained ground, built some Fortresses, or planted Colonies of Spaniards, in convenient places. This done, about the year 1544, his ill luck was to meet with a more stubborn and untractable people than either Cortez, or Pizarro had done before him : who, quickly wearied of the Yoke, besieged one of his Forts, encountered Balverde himself coming with too small a power to relieve his people, vanquished and slew him in the field. Some add, that they poured Gold into his Throat, (as the Parthians are reported to have done to Cressus) bidding him suavitate himself with that which he so much thirsted after. After this blow given, in the year 1551, the Savages recovered the rich Valleys of Araucan, Tucapel, and Purres, which they keep from them till this day. The Towns of Los Coñastes and Villa Rica, both on the borders of those Valleys, were deserted also. Nor staid they there, though they took time to breathe a little. For in the year 1599, (having provided themselves of 200 Coislets and seventy Muskets) they break out again, surprised and sacked the Town of Baldivia, forced Imperial, after a whole years Siege to surrender without any Conditions, and in the year 1603 took Ofeno by Famine. Of thirteen Cities which the Spaniards had possessed amongst them, they had taken nine : some of them since recovered, but the most demolished. As ill it thrived with them in Magellanica, where Pedro de Sarmiento undertook the planting of two Colonies to command those Straits, Anno 1584. The one he settled near the mouth of the Strait, which he called by the name of Nombre de Jesus, and left therein 1500 of his men : the other he intended on the narrow neck of the Strait, to be called Ciudad del Rey Philip, which he resolved to fortify and plant with Indians. But winter coming on, he left there others of his men, promising to relieve them shortly with all things necessary. But such was his unhappy fate, that after many Shipwrecks and disappointments, which befel unto him in the pursuit of his Design, he was at last taken by the English, under the command of Sir Walter Raleigh, who was there in person ; and his two Colonies, for want of timely Succours, either starved at home, or eaten by the Savages, as they ranged the Country.

And so much for CHILE.

OF PARAGUAY.

ARAGUAY is bounded on the South with Magellanica ; on the East, with the main Atlantic ; on the North, with Brasil ; on the West, with some unknown Countreys betwixt it and Chile. So called from the River Paraguay (one of the greatest of the World) which runneth through it : the River and the Province both by the Spaniards called Rio de la Plata, from the great store of Silver they expected from it.

The Country (for so much as hath been discovered) is said to be of a fruitful foil, capable of Wheat and other of the Fruits of Europe, which thrive here exceedingly : nor do the Carril increase less which were brought from Spain, both Kine and Horses multiplying in a wonderful manner. Well stored with Sugar-Canes, and not unfurnished of Mines both of Brass and Iron, some Veins of Gold and Silver, and great plenty of Amethysts. Of Stags great plenty, and of Monkeys almost infinite numbers : not to lay any thing of Lions, Tigers and such hurtful Creatures, of which a few would be thought too many. Of the people there is nothing said but what hath been observed of other Savages.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. De la Plata, whose course we have described already. 2. Rio de Buenos Ayres, so called from the chief Town, by which it runneth. 3. Zarcamuna, which riseth in the Country of the Diaguitas, and falling into Lake at the end of his course, doth from thence pass into the body of De la Plata. 4. Ejora, which rising in the Valley of Chalacqui, and passing through two great Lakes, meets with 5. the Bermeis, and both together fall into De la Plata near the Town of S. Fy. Yllesmo, which hath its Fountain near the Mines of Pasfi, in the Province of Charcos : but his fall in the same River with those before. Then on the North side of that River there is, 7. that of S. Salvador, or S. Salvador, as the Spaniards call it. 8. Rio Negro, or the Black River, of a longer course, but buried in the end, as the other is, in the depths of La Plata. 9. Tiquaza, and 10. several others, which united Streams make the great River Parana, the second River of esteem in all this Country, but swallowed in that of Plata. Besides these, 1. Rio de S. Martin, and 12. Rio grande, falling into the Ocean.

It comprehendeth the three Provinces of, 1. Rio de la Plata, 2. Tucuman, and 3. S. Cruz de Sierra. The rest not conquered by the Spaniards, or not well discovered cannot be properly reduced under any Method.

1. RIO DE LA PLATA, or the Province of De la Plata, lieth upon both sides of that River, ascending many Leagues up the Water, but not extended much upon either side. The reason of the name, the quality of the Soil and People, we have seen before.

Chief Towns heretofore, 1. Buenos Ayres, or Nuestra Señora de Buenos Ayres, by others called Ciudad de la Trinidad, seated on the Southern Bank of the River of Plata, there built by Pedro de Mendoza, Anno 1535. Delected by the Inhabitants, and again new-peopled by Cajafra de Vaca, Anno 1542. It was afterwards again abandoned, and finally, in the year 1582, re-edified and placed with a new Colony. Situate on the rising of a little Hill, in the 34. degree and 45 minutes of the Southern Latitude, and about 64 Leagues from the mouth of the River. Fortified with a Mud-wall and a little Castle, with some pieces of Ordnance: yet neither large, nor much frequented, containing but 200 Inhabitants. 2. S. Fe, or S. Fidel, 50 Leagues up the River from Buenos Ayres, on the same side of the Water, near the confluence of it with the River Espero: of the same bigness as the other, but somewhat richer: the people here being given to Clothing, which Manufacture they exchange with the Brasilians for Sugar, Rice, and other necessary Commodities. 3. Nuestra Señora del Assumption, but commonly Assumption only, higher up the River, from the mouth thereof 300 Leagues distant: situate in the Latitude of 25, and almost in the middle betwixt Pern and Brasil well built, and very well frequented, as the chief of the whole Country. Inhabited by three sorts of men: first, natural Spaniards, of which here are accounted 300 Families; 2. the Mestizos, begotten by the Spaniards upon the Natives; and 3. Naturals, born of the Spaniards and Negroes: of which two last here are thought to be many thousands. Not far off is a great Lake called Tupiza, in the middle whereof is an huge Rock, above 100 Fathom high above the Water. 4. Ciudad Real, by the Spaniards called al Outinero, by the Natives Gusya; 80 Leagues North from the Town of Assumption, situate on the banks of the River Parana, in a fruitful Soil, but a sickly Air; for which cause, and the frequent Insurrections of the Savages, but meely peopled. 5. S. Anna, on the banks of the same River Parana. 6. S. Salvador, on a River of the same name. Besides these, there are up the River above Assumption three noted Ports. 7. Puerto de Guaybiano, 8. Puerto de la Candelaria, and 9. Puerto de los Reyes; but whether Towns, or only Havens on that River for dispersing and bartering their Commodities, I am not able to say. The last have one memorable for the defeat of John de Ayolas, and the death of 80 of his men by the hands of the Savages.

2. TUCUMAN lieth on the West of Rio de la Plata, extending towards the Confines of Chile, through which they make their way unto Mare del Sur, as through the Province of Rio de la Plata unto Mare del Norte: the exact bounds heretofore to the North and South not yet resolved on.

The Country, for so much heretofore as lieth towards

Chile, is well manured and fruitful, that towards Magellanica barren, untilld, and not well discovered. No Veins of Gold or Silver in it, though situate in a temperate and agreeable Air. Watered by the two Rivers, 1. Salado, lieth called from the brackishness and saltness of it, and 2. Del Ebero, spoken of before, so named, because sometimes it breaketh out of his Banks. The Inhabitants now civilized both in manners and habit, in both they conform to the Garb of the Spaniards.

Chief Towns heretofore, 1. S. Jago del Ebero, on the banks of that River, by the natural Inhabitants called Vareco, the principal of that small Province, honoured with a Bishop's See, and the Seat of the Governour, and distant about 180 Leagues from Buenos Ayres. 2. S. Michael de Tucuman, seated at the foot of a Rocky Mountain, but near a very fruitful Soil both for Corn and Paraguay, distant 28 Leagues from S. Jago. 3. Talavera, or Nuestra Señora de Talavera, but by the Natives called Esteo, situate on the River Salado, before mentioned, in a fruitful Soil, and inhabited by an industrious People, grown wealthy by their Manufactures of Cotton-wools, which grow hereabouts in great abundance, with which they drive a great Trade at the Mines of Panji, from hence distant but 140 Leagues. 4. Cordoba, in a convenient place for Trade, as being equally distant from S. Juan de la Frontera, in the Prefecture of Chile, and S. Fe, in Rio de la Plata, 50 Leagues from each, and seated in a Road from Pern unto Buenos Ayres, much travelled consequently by those who go from Pern to Brasil or Spain. 5. New London, and 6. New Cordoba, built at such time as Garcia de Mendoza, Son of the Marquess of Cameres, and Vice-roy of Pern, was Governour of this Province: but both abandoned not long after. Besides these, 7. Murata, 8. Cibicoma, 9. Sococha, and 10. Calabina, Towns belonging to the Natives.

3. S. CRUZ DE SIERRA, is the name of a little Territory lying towards Pern, on the North of the River Guspay, and in the Country of the Chiquitos and Chiriguanoes, two Tribes of the Savages. By some accounted to Pern, because under the Jurisdiction of Chiriquito, but to far distant from the nearest bounds of that Province, (100 Spanish Leagues at least) that I think fitter to account it to the Province of Paraguay, betwixt the banks of which River and that of Guspay it is wholly seated.

The Soil is abundantly productive of Maize and Wines, plenty of most sorts of American Fruits, which I can give no English name to, a kind of Palm; of whose Trunk they make great store of Meal, of good taste and nourishment. But neither Soil nor Air agreeable to the Fruits of Europe, which ripen slowly, and soon die. So delicate of Rivers, that the Inhabitants were fain to make use of Rain-water preserved in pits: the cause of no small Warts, and of many great Murders; the people either dying for thirst, or killing one another for some Water to quench it.

Chief Towns heretofore, 1. Santa Cruz, situate at the foot of a great Mountain, whence the name of the Province; but situate in an open Field, enlarging it self into many Plains and thirty Valleys: neighbored by a Brook, or Torrent, breaking from the Rocks, which four Leagues from the Town is become a Pond, and plentifully doth supply the Town with fish. 2. Barana, 60 Leagues from the Mines of Panji. 3. Tominia, 4. Laguilla, and 5. Tarica, three Forts erected for defence of this Province against the Incursions and Alarms of the Chiriguanoes. 6. Nueva Luján, once a Colony of the Spaniards, but sacked and dispeopled by the Chiriguanoes, when the Count of Noya was Vice-roy of Pern: at what time Nuño de Chaves, who in the year 1548 first discovered those parts, darts, was treacherously slain by one of the Savages.

The principal Nations of this Country, when first known to the Spaniards, were the Guaranies, Timburi, and Cacares, the Chanes, Chimintí, Guaranies, the Guayacures, Cacover, Guxaraphi, &c. on both sides of the river of Plata; the Tucumanes, Jurics, and Diagnitas, in the Centred of Tucuman: more Northward, where the Spaniards have as yet no Hold, the Chunettes, Xaquettes, Xacocets, and the Xarayes, great and powerful Nations, hitherto unconquered. The first Discovery of this Country is ascribed to John Dias de Solis, a Spanish Adventurer; who in the year 1515, passing up the River to the Latitude of 34 Degrees and 40 minutes, and unadvisedly landing with too small a power, was shot by Selkian Cabin, the Deluge was after prosecuted by Selkian Cabin, Anno 1526, who failed against the fire-arm as high as the River Parana: at the reception of which, the great River, called till then by the name of Paraguay, begins to be called De la Plata. Here built he the Forts called Fort Cabot, and 30 Leagues more up the River that called S. Anna, (both long since ruined) where Diego Garcia, a Portugall, found him in the year next following. In the year 1535, the business was resumed by Pedro de Mendoza, who built the Town of Buenos Ayres, and sent John de Ayolas to discover Northwards; of whose unhappy end we have heard before. Not fully filled till the year 1540, when Alvares Nunez, commonly called Cajafra de Vaca, made a more full discovery of it, and planted Colonies of Spaniards in convenient places. Nothing since done for the further planting of the Country, though some places have been marked out for new Plantations; here being little Gold and Silver, and consequently not much temptation to draw on the Spaniards to the work.

And so much for PARAGUAY.

OF BRASIL.

BRASIL is bounded on the East with Mare del Norte, or the main Atlantic; on the West, with some undiscovered Countries lying betwixt it and the Andes; on the North, with Guiana, from which parted by the great River Maragony and on the South, with Paraguay, or the Province of Rio de la Plata. The reason of the name I find not, except it came from the abundance of that Wood called Brasil-wood, which was found amongst them; as the famous Isle of Cyprus, from its plenty of Cypresses.

It reacheth from the 29 to the 39 Degree of Southern Latitude; or measuring it by miles, it is laid to be 1500 miles from North to South, and 500 miles in breadth from the sea to the Andes; which must be understood with reference to the whole extent of it; for otherwise all that which is possessed by the Portugals under the name of Brasil is so short of taking up all the breadth hereof, that they possess nothing but the sea-coasts, and some few Leagues (comparatively) within the Land: the greatest part of it being so far from being conquered, that it hath not hitherto been discovered.

The Country is full of Mountains, Rivers, and Forests, diversified into Hills and Plains always pleasant and green. The Air for the most part sound and wholesome, by reason of the fresh Winds which do reign amongst them: there being all along the Coasts certain quick Winds rising from the South about 2 hours before Noon, which do much benefit the Inhabitants: yet in regard it is somewhat moist, it is held to be more agreeable to old men than to young. The Soil is in most parts very fruitful, were it not cloyed with too much Rain; but howsoever liberally provided of Sugar-canes, (no one Country more) for the refining of which they have their Ingénios, (as they call them) or sugar-houses, in most parts of the Country, in which they entertain many thousand slaves, brought yearly from Guinea and Congo, and other Maritime parts of Africa. A Trade in which the Portugals are much delighted, and I cannot blame them; there being few years, in each of which they bring not out of Brasil to Portugal 150000 Arrobes of Sugar; every Arrobe containing 25 Bathels of our English measure. Here is also infinite quantities of that red Wood used in dying cloth, which we commonly call Brasil-wood; (but whether the Wood took that name from the Country, or the Country rather from the Wood, I determine not;) the Trees whereof are of that incredible greenness, that whole Families live on an arm of one of them, every Tree being as populous as the most of our Villages. In other Commodities, common to them with the other Americans, we need not give particular instance.

Amongst the Rarities heretofore reckoned, 1. the Plant called Copiba, the Bark of which being cut doth send out a Balm, the sovereign virtue whereof is so well known to the very Beasts, that being bit by venomous Serpents, they resort unto it for their Cure. 2. The Herb called Sentida, or Viva, which roughly touched will close the Leaves, and not open them again till the man that hath offended it be gone out of sight. 3. A kind of Wheat in the Valley near unto S. Selkian, which is continually growing, and always ripe; or never wholly ripe, because always growing; for when one Ear doth grain, another doth Bloom; when one is ripe and yellow, another is green. 4. The Ox-fish, with Eyes, and Eye-lids, two Arms a Cubit long, and at each an Hand with five Fingers and Nails, as in a Man; under the Arms two Teats, Inwards like a Cow, in every Female. 5. A Creature found off-shore about the Bay of Al Saints, which had the Face of an Ape, the Foot of a Lion, and all the rest of a Man; of such a terrible Aspect, that the Soldier who shot him fell down dead. But this I rather look on as an Aberration of Nature, than a Rarity in kind. 6. Beasts of such strange Shapes, and such several kinds, that may be said of Brasil, as once of Africa, Semper aliquid apparet novi, every day some new object of Admiration.

The people here are endowed with a pretty understanding; as may seem by him who partly blamed the Cover-outs of the Spanish, for coming from the other end of the World to dig for Gold, and holding up a Wedge of Gold, cried out, Behold the God of the Christians! But in most places they are barbarous, the Men and Women go stark naked, and on high Festival days hang Jewels in their Lips. These Festival days are when a company of good neighbours come together to be merry over the roasted body of a fat Man, whom they cut in Collops, called Bacon, and eat with great greediness and much decoration. They have two vile qualities, as being mindful of Injuries, and forgetful of benefits. The Men Cruel without measure, and the Women infinitely lascivious. They cannot pronounce the Letters L. F. R. The reason of which, one being demanded, made answer, because they had amongst them neither Law, Faith, nor Rulers. They are able Swimmers, as well Women as Men; and will stay under Water an hour together. Women in Travel are here delivered without any great pain, and presently go about their business belonging to good Housewives: the good Man (according to the fashion of our kinder sorts of Husbands in England, who are said to breed their Wives (children) being sick in their bed, and keeping their Beds; so that the bath Broths made him, is visited by his Gossips, or Neighbours, and bath Junks sent to comfort him. And amongst these there are some Rarities, if not monstrosities, in nature: it being said of those which live towards the Andes, that they are hairy all over like Beasts, such as Orson is signified to have been in the old Romance, and probably so ingendered; also that the Guaynaries disbowel Women with Child, and roast the Children; and finally, that the Savage Nation of Cumaniara have their Paps almost down unto their Knees, which they tie about their waste when they run, or go faster than ordinary.

Rivers of note I find not any till I come to Maragony, though that be a Boundary rather betwixt this and Guiana, then proper unto this alone. If any chance to come in our way as we cross the Country, we shall not pass them over without some remembrance. And so proceed we to the Division of the Country, not into Provinces or Nations, as in other places, but into Prefectures, or Captainships, as the Portugals call them. Of which there are 13 in all, which we shall severally touch on as we trace the Coast, from the Province of Rio de la Plata unto that of Guiana; that is to say,

1. The Captainship of S. VINCENT, bordering on Rio de la Plata, inhabited by the most civil people of all Brasil. Chief Towns whereof are, 1. Saint, at the bottom of an Arm of the sea, capable of good Ships of burthen, but distant from the Main three Leagues. A Town of no more than 120 Houses, yet the best of this Prefecture; beautified with a Parish-Church, and two Convents of Friars. Taken and held two months by Sir Tho. Cavendish, Anno 1591, since that envircd with a Wall, and fortified with two Castles. 2. S. Vincent, better built, but not so well fitted with an Haven, of about 70 Houses, and 100 Inhabitants. 3. Irange, and 4. Casanea, two open Burroughs, but capable of lesser Vessels. 5. S. Paul, upon a little Mountain, at the foot whereof run two pleasant Rivers, which fall not far into the River of Imbabu. A Town of about 100 houses, one Church, two Convents, and a College of studies; neighboured by Mines of Gold found in the Mountains called Pernambuco. 6. S. Philip, a small Town on the banks of Imbabu, which there begins to enlarge it self and passing thence falleth at last into the River Parana, one of the great R. Tributaries to Rio de la Plata.

2. OF RIO DE JANEIRO, or the River of January, so called, because entered into that month by John Dias de Sales, Anno 1515, neglected by the Portugals, it was seized on by the French, under the conduct of Villegaigne, employed herein by Admiral Chabillon, a great Friend of the Hugonots, to whom it was intended for a place of Refuge, as New-England afterwards for the likes) but within three years after their first coming thither (An. 1558, regained by the Portugals, and the French put unto the Word. Places of most consideration in this, 1. Colignia, the Fort and Colony of the French, so named in honour of Galpar Colligni, commonly called Chabillon by whole encouragement it was founded. Situate on the Bay of the River January, which the French called Canabara. 2. S. Sebastian, built at the mouth of the same Bay by the Portugals, after they had expelled the French, and fortified with four strong Bulwarks. 3. Angra des Reges, distant 12 Leagues Westward from the mouth of the Bay; is not long since made a Portugal Colony. Besides these, there are two great Burroughs of the natural Brasilians, in which are said to be above 2000 Inhabitants.

3. OF THE HOLY GHOST, (del Spiritu Santo) one of the most fertile Provinces of all Brasil; is well stored with Cotton-wool, and watered with the River P. rayba, large, and full of Fish. The only Town of note in it is Spiritu Santo, inhabited by about 200 Portugals. The chief building of it, a Church, Dedicated to S. Francis, a Monastery of Benedictines, and a College of Jesuits: the chief convenience, a safe and commodious Haven, capable of the greatest Vessels.

4. OF PORTO SEGURO, the secure haven, so called by Capralis, who first discovered it, when being tossed at sea by a terrible Tempest, he had here refreshed himself. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Porto Seguro, built on the top of a white Cliff, which commands the Haven, most Antiquity then Vine, of more fame then bigness, as not containing fully 200 Families. 2. Santa Cruz, three Leagues from the other, a poor Town with as poor an Harbour. The Patrimony and Inheritance of the Dukes of Avicira in the Realm of Portugal. 3. Santa Amara, or S. Omer, once of great note for making Sugars, for which use here were five Inganios, or Sugar Engines; deserted by the Portugals for fear of the savages, against whom they had not power enough to make good the place, and the Sugars destroyed of purpose, that they might not come into the hands of the barbarous people.

5. OF DES ILHEOS, or of the Isles, so named from certain Islands lying adjacent the Bay on which the principal Town is seated, called also Ilheos, or the Islands, with like Analogy as a Town of good note in Flanders, hath the name of Isula or Lisse. The Town consisting of about 150 or 200 Families, situate on a little River, but neighboured by a great Lake of 12 Leagues in compass. (Out of which that River doth arise) full of a great, but wholesome Fish, which they call Monatus, some of which are affirmed to weigh 28 pounds. This Colony was much endangered by the Guaynaries, a Race of Savages more savage than any of their Fellows, who, being driven out of their own Country, fell into this Prefecture, which they had utterly destroyed, if some of S. George's Reliques, as the Jesuits tell us, (but I bind no man to believe it) sent by their General from Rome, Anno 1581, had not flayed their fury, and given the Portugals the better.

6. OF TODOS LOS SANTOS, or All Saints, so called from a large Bay of that name, upon which it lieth, in breadth two Leagues and an half, 18 Fathoms deep, and full of many little Islands; but flourishing and pleasant, and well stored with Cotton-wool. A Bay in which are many safe Stations and Roads for shipping, and therefore of great use and consequence in those furious Seas. Memorable for the hardy Enterprize of Peter Heyn, a Dutch man, Admiral of the Navy of the United Provinces; who, in the year 1627, seized on a Fleet of Spaniards, consisting of 26 sail of ships, (four of them being Men of War) all lying under the Protection of the Forts and Castles, built for the safety of that Bay. For thrusting in amongst them with his own Ship only (thereat not being able to follow) he laid about him, that having sunk the Vice-Admiral, he took all the rest, conditioning only for their lives, notwithstanding all the shot which was made against him from the Ships and Castles, and 42 pieces of Ordnance planted on the shore. Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Salvador, built on a little Hill on the North-side of the Bay by Thomas de Sousa, and fortified (besides the Wall) with three strong Castles, the one called S. Anthony, the other S. Philip, and the third Tappeto. Yet not so strong by reason of some Hills adjoining which command the Town, but that it was taken by the Hollanders, Anno 1624, recovered by the Spaniards the next year after, and since lost again. 2. Paripé, more within the Land, four Leagues from S. Salvador, 3. Serrippe del Rey, a small Town, and seated on as small a River, but amongst many rich Pastures, and some Veins of Silver.

7. OF FERNAMEUCK, one of the richest Prefectures for Tobacco, Sugar, and the great quantity of Brasil-wood, which is brought hence yearly for the Diers, in all this Country; but destitute of Corn and most other necessities, which supplied from the Canaries, and sometimes from Portugal. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Olinda, the largest and best peopled of all Brasil, containing above 2000 persons; is not reckoning in the Church-men, nor taking the great number of Slaves which they keep for their Sugar-works into the account; for whose use they have here eight Parochial Churches, five Religious Houses, and some Hospitals. Situate near the Sea-side, but on an uneven piece of ground, as makes it not capable of a regular Fortification; the Haven being little, and not very commodious, but defended at the entrance, by a well-built Castle, and that well planted with Beas-pieces. Which notwithstanding, in the year 1595, the Calle and the Suburbs along the Port (wherein they used to stow their chief Commodities) were taken by Captain Jones Lancaster and some few of the English, who having landed in the Haven above a month, brought home with him eight of his own Ships, four French men, and three Hollanders which came in by chance, all laden with the choice Merchandise of Brasil and Ledia. 2. Atmatta de Brasil, ten miles from Olinda, the Inhabitants whereof live by killing the Brasil-wood. 3. S. Laurencio, a well-frequented Village, but as yet unwall'd. 4. Poincar, upon a River so named. 5. Antonio de Cabo, near the Cape of S. Auguſtines; both of good note for the great quantity of Sugars which are made in each. 6. Garajá, about five Leagues from Olinda, inhabited for the most part by poor and mechanical persons, till the year 1632, when taken by the Hollanders, and planted with a people of higher quality. This Prefecture, belonging formerly to the Earls of Albuquerque, (a great House in Spain) is now wholly in the hands of the States of the Provinces united: the Town of Olinda being taken by them in the year 1629, the Port and all the Avenues unto it so strongly fortified, that they have hitherto enjoyed it.

8. OF TAMARACA, so called from an Island of that name, distant about five miles from Olinda, of no great note, but for the Haven, and an impregnable Castle on the top of an Hill for defence thereof. Which when the Hollanders could not take, they built a strong Bulwark at the mouth of the Port, and to block it up, that it hath since been of no use to the Spaniards. This is the least Prefecture in Brasil, but withal the ancientest; extended three Leagues only in length, and but two in breadth: the Patrimony of the Earls of Montano in Portugal, who received hence yearly, when entire, thirty thousand Ducats. But his Reuts are much diminished, if not quite extinct, since the loss of the Haven.

9. OF PARAIBA, so called from a River of that name (but by the Spaniards called Domingo) of most note herein, on the banks whereof standeth Paraiba, the chief Town of it, at the bottom of an Arm of the sea, about 3 Leagues from the main, but capable of pretty good Ships to the very Town. The Town inhabited not long since by 500 Portugals, besides Slaves and Negrees. Nor walled, till they began to stand in fear of the Hollanders, on the loss of Olinda; but more secured by a strong Castle on the Promontory called Cabo Dely, which the Hollanders have in vain attempted, then by any works within the Land. A Castle which acknowledgeth the French for the Founders of it, who for a while were possessed of this Tract, and gave name to an adjoining Haven, called, Port Francois, but outed by the Portugals, Anno 1585, who have since held their footing in it, but with fear of the Hollanders; especially since their taking of a little Island lying over against them, called the Isle of Noronha.

10. OF RIO GRANDE, so called from the River Patingis, (as the Natives term it) which the Portugals call Rio Grande, or the great River; not made a Prefecture till of late. For lying upon, as it were, to the next Pretender, time of the French began to fix here, Anno 1597. But the King of Spain, not willing to have any such Neighbour, commanded the Captain of Paraiba to drive them thence; which was done accordingly. But then the Savages beginning to rise up in Arms, the Captain of Paraiba was fain to seek aid from him of Fernambuco, by whose help having slain five thousand, and took three thousand of them, the rest became Vassals to the Portugals, who built here an impregnable Castle, (which is all the footing they have in it) well manned, and furnished with Ammunition and all other Necessaries very few Portugals, except those of the Garrison, being yet come over.

11. OF SIARA, a late Prefecture also, in which the Portugals have no more than a Castle, with a dozen Houses, or thereabouts, besides that of the Governor adjoining to it. So named from an Haven called Siara, but of no great note, and capable but of little Vessels. Of some Trade in regard of the Crystals, Cotton-wool, and some precious stones found in the Country hereabouts; and certainly would be of greater, if once the Portugals would be active and pursue the Conquest, here being great plenty of Sugar canes, but no Works to make it.

12. OF MARAGNON, an Island lying in the mouth of the great River for called, in the farthest parts of Brasil Northwards, and many Leagues distant from Siara, the last of their Prefectures; the Country intervening not yet discovered, or otherwise made known unto us, then by the names of the Ports and Promontories found upon the Coast. An Island of fruitful foil, if pains and Husbandry were not wanting; affording naturally Maiz; and a root called Manioc, both which the Savages use for Bread; good food of Cotton-wools, Saffron, Brasil-wood, and the best Tobacco; and in some places Balm and Amber. Watered with many fresh Rivers and pleasant Springs; well wooded both for Timber and Fuel; and, in a word, blessed with so temperate an Air, (though to near the Equator) that no place can be more commodious for the Life of Man. The People strong of body, healthy and long-lived, without any balneis, industrious in their Feather-works and Manufactures of Cotton; Women curious in ordering their Hair, fruitful in Child-bearing, and that till 80 years old, and sometimes more. Both sexes naked till their Marriage, and then apparelled only from the Waste to their Knees.

The Villages hereof possessed by the Natives consisted but of four great Houses; each of them two or three hundred foot in length, and twenty or thirty foot in breadth.

breadth fopaced as they resembled a quadrangular Cloyfer; and in each Houfe fo many Houtholds, that commonly each of their Villages, or Taves, (for fo they called them) contained three hundred perfons, and fome twice that number. Of thefe were twenty feven in all, whole names I hold impertinent to be multered herewith the total estimate of the people when the French came thither amounting to 12000 Souls. For the French trading in this Ifland, and carrying themselves courteoufly amongst the Natives, found them not unwilling to admit a Colony of that Nation, if fent over to them, by whole Aid they might free themselves from all other Pretenders, and be inftructed in the Gofpel. Accordingly a Colony and four Capuchin Friars are fent over to them, Anno 1612. fome Savages gained unto the Faith, and a ftrong Caſtle, called S. Lewis, commodiouly built, and planted with 22 pieces of Ordnance, the effect of that Voyage. But long they had not reſted there when difturb'd by the Portugals, ſent thither under the conduct of Hierome d'Albuquerque, Anno 1614. Who to the Caſtle of S. Lewis, which the French had built, added thoſe of S. Mary, and S. Francis, planted two Villages in the Ifland by the names of S. Andrews, and S. Jago, and ever ſince have held it without moleſtation.

13. Of P. R. A. the moſt Northern Prefecture of Brazil towards Guiana, fo called from the River of P. r. a. (ſuppoſed to be a branch of the River of Amazon) which runneth through it. The River at the mouth of it is two miles in breadth, and in the middle of the Channel fifteen Fathoms deep: on the banks whereof (but on an higher ground than the reſt) the Portugals have built the Caſtle of P. r. a. in form quadrangular, and well-walled, except towards the River: the Country thereabouts being inhabited by 300 Portuguese, beſides the Garriſon.

Now for the Fortunes of the whole, it never did acknowledge any one Supreme. Divided into many Tribes, and each Tribe governed by their Chiefs, as in other Countries. Theſe Tribes fo many, and the Muller of their names fo ufeleſs, that I now forbear it. In this cluſte they lived when diſcovered firſt, but by whom firſt diſcovered will not be agreed on. The Spaniards, to get fome colour of a Title for the Crown of Caſtile, aſcribe it to John Pinſone and Diego de Lope, two of their own Country, who, as they ſay, had landed on it in the year 1500 before the coming of Capral, though the fame year alſo. The Portugals attribute the Diſcovery of it to Pedro Alvezes de Capral, ſent by their King Emanuel to the Eſt-Indies; who being driven over thither from the Coaſt of Guinea, took poſſeſſion of it, and as a Memorial Cruis, or the Holy Croſs, to this new Diſcovery. That name changed afterwards to Brazil, from the abundance of that Wood (as it is conceived) which was found amongst them. Notice hereof being given to the Court of Portugal, Americus Vefputius, a noble Portuguese, Anno 1501. and after him John de Empoli, another of that Nation, in the year 1503, were by Emanuel employed in a further Diſcovery, Who ſpeeding fortunately in it, the Portugals did accordingly ſend over ſome Plantations thither. But a great controverſie growing betwixt them and the Spaniards, to whether of the two it of right belonged; the Spaniards were content to yield it to the Crown of Portugal, though by the Bull or Edict of Pope Alexander the ſixth (by whom the whole undiſcovered World was divided betwixt thoſe two Kings) it ſeemed to fall within the Grant made to the Crown of Caſtile. Enjoyed by Sebastian, (which Sebastian the Jeſuits look on as the Founder of all their Colledges in this Country) and by the Spaniards, ſince the death of Henry, (whole Reign continued but a year) though in the name and right of the Crown of Portugal, ſince the death of Henry, (whole Reign continued but a year) though in the name and right of the Subjects of Spain to grow great amongst them, for they poſſeſſed entirely without any Rivals, (I mean, for ſo much of the Country as they had ſubdued) till of late years the Hollanders put in for a part, and got the Prefectures of Fernambuck and Toda les Santos (or the Bay) by the right of War. The reſt with all the other Members of the Crown of Portugal, in the late Revolt of that Nation from the King of Spain, ſubmitting unto John the fourth, of the Houſe of Braganza, whom the Portuguese had made their Kings, Anno 1639.

OF G U I A N A.

GUIANA is bounded on the Eaſt with the main Atlantic; on the Weſt, with the Mountains of P. r. a., or rather ſome undiſcovered Countries interpoſed betwixt them; on the North, with the River Orenoque, and on the South, with that of the Amazon. The reaſon of the name I find not, unleſs it be fo called from the River Wiz, of which more anon.

It is ſituate on both ſides of the Line, extended from the fourth Degree of Southern to the eighth of Northern Latitude. The Air, notwithstanding this ſituation under the Equator, is ſaid to be temperate, the Eaſtern winds (which they call the Brizes) conſtantly blowing about Noon, and mitigating the extreme heat thereof by their cooler blaſts. The Country towards the Sea ſide flat and level, the inland parts more mountainous and ſwelled with Hills: in all places fo adorned with Natures Tapeſtry, the boughs and branches of the Trees never unclothed or left naked, (fruit either ripe or green growing full upon them) that no Country in the World could be better qualified. The particular Commodities of it we ſhall ſee anon, when the particular parts hereof come into diſcourſe.

Of the People it is ſaid in general, that they have amongst them no ſetled Government, and though they acknowledge ſome Superiority in the Chiefs of their Tribes, yet it is only voluntary, as long and as little as they pleaſe. Adultery and Murder, which are only puniſhable, are not otherwiſe expiated but by the death of the Offender. The richer ſort have two or three Wives, and ſometimes more; the poor but one, and hardly able to keep her; they that have more, and they who have but one, alike jealous of them; and if they take them in Adultery, without any farther Ceremony or Formalities of Law they beat out their Brains. Their Wives, eſpecially the elder, they uſe for Servants; and he which hath moſt ſlack is the greateſt man. Without Religion, or any notion of a Godhead; not fo far onwards on the way to the worſhip of the true God, as to be Idolaters: for though Idolatry be miſtaken in the proper Object, it ſuppoſeth a Deity; and they who have this principle, (that there is a God) have learned one, and not the leaſt, of the prepoſits of their Catechiſm. Their Accounts amongst themſelves they keep with a bundle of ticks, which they diminiſh or increaſe according to the times of their Contract. Their Funerals they ſolemnize with a Feaſt, but with ſuch diſcrity in the department of both Sexes, that while the Women houl extremely, the men perform the Obſequies with ſinging and excellent drinking; the one as improper for a Feaſt, as the other for a Funeral.

Rivers of moſt note in it, beſides 1. Orenoque, and 2. the River of Amazon, and thoſe rather Boundaries betwixt this and the neighbouring Provinces, then proper unto this alone. 3. Aravari. 4. Conamini. 5. Caſiparough, or Caſſipure, all falling into the ſame main Atlantic; betwixt the River of Amazon and Wiapeco: the laſt riſing out of the Lake of the Aracobi, half a mile broad at the mouth or Influx into the Sea, and but five fpanns deep. 6. Wiapeco, of which more hereafter. 7. Wia. 8. Cajane. 9. Marnine. 10. Eſſequibe, a River of twenty days journey long, betwixt Wiapeco and the River of Orenoque, or Rallana.

The whole divided commonly into theſe four parts: 1. Rio de la Amazona, or the River of Amazon. 2. Wiapeco, or Guiana ſpecially fo called. 3. Orenoque. And 4. RIO DE LAS AMAZONES, or the River of Amazon, containeth that part of this Country which lieth along the Traſt of that famous River. The Soil is in ſome places dry and barren, in others fertile and productive of the choicelt Fruits, full of large Woods, and in thoſe Woods moſt ſort of Trees which are to be found in America: One amongst others of moſt note, (and perhaps peculiar to Guiana), which they call the Totoke; a Tree of great bulk, and as great a Fruit; this laſt aſbig as a mans head, and ſo hard withal, that when the Fruit grows ripe and ready to fall, the people dare not go into the Woods without an Helmet, or ſome ſuch ſhelter over their heads, for fear of beating out their Brains. The kernels of it, for the moſt part ten or twelve in number, have the taſte of Almonds, and are ſaid to be provocative in point of Vnery. Of which the Savages have this By-word, Pigue ſeſe in Saccone pigeon Totoke; that is to ſay, Eat Totoke if thou wouldſt be potent in the acts of Venus. Here are alſo Sugar-canes in ſome places; and the Plant called Pira, the taſte whereof is ſaid to be like Strawberryes, Claret Wine, and Sugar.

The principal Inhabitants of this part of the Country, the Taoes, Cockitians, Pattients, Tockians, Tomees, and Wackebans, dwelling on the Continent; the Maranos and Arrianis, poſſeſſed of the Iſlands. Towns of note I have met with none amongst them, though every houſe (moſt of them 140 foot in length, 20 in breadth, and entertaining at the leaſt an hundred perfons) might paſſe ſufficiently for a Village. Yet they are ſaid to hold them ſo, for otherwiſe their Houſes would afford them but little comfort in the overflows of the River, which drown all the Country: and therefore they beſetke themſelves to the tops of Trees, and there remain: like Birds, with their ſeveral Families, till the Waters be drawn in again, and the Earth become more comfortable for habitation. Yet I find none of theſe their dwellings called by proper Names: as, 1. Mataram. 2. Roakry. 3. Auracopok. 4. Hauman. 5. Wumiam: and 6. Cogomymu. But I find nothing but their names, and enough of that.

The firſt Diſcoverer of this River and the parts adjoining was Orellana, the Lieutenant of Gonſalves Pizarro, whom his Brother Franciſco Pizarro, then Vice-roy of Peru, had made the Governour of Quito. Moved by the noiſe of ſome rich Countries beyond the Andes, he raiſed ſufficient Forces, and paſſed over thoſe Mountains, where finding want of all things for the life of man, they made a Boat, and ſent this Orellana to bring in Proviſions. But the River which he chanced into was ſo ſwift of courſe, that he was not able to go back; and was therefore of neceſſity to obey his fortune in following the courſe of that ſtrong water. Paſſing along by divers deſolate and unpeopled places, he came at laſt into a Country planted and inhabited, where he firſt heard of the Amazon, (by whole Savages called Comaypurá) of whom he was bidden to beware as a dangerous people. And in the end, having ſpent his time in paſſing down this river from the beginning of January, to the end of Auguſt 1540, he came at laſt into the Sea, and getting into the ſide of Cubagua, ſailed into Spain. The courſe of this Voyage down the Water, he eſtimated at 1800 Leagues, or 5400 Engliſh miles; but found no Amazon in his paſſage, as himſelf affirmed; only ſome maſculine Women ſhewed themſelves intermixt with the Men, to poſſeſs his landing; and in ſome places he found Men with long Hair like Women: either of which might make theſe parts believed to be held by Amazon. But to proceed, arriving at the Court of Spain, he got Commiſſion for the Conqueſt of the Countries by him diſcovered; and in the year 1549, he betook himſelf unto the ſervice. But though he found the mouth of the River, one of them at leaſt, he could never hit upon the Channel which brought him down, though he attempted often. Which ill ſuccels, with the conſideration of his loſs both in Fame and Fortunes, brought him to his Grave; having got nothing but the honour of the firſt Diſcovery, and the leaving of his name to that famous River, ſince called Orellana. The Enterprize was puniſhed, but with little ſuccels, by one Pedro de Orſina, Anno 1560, after which the Spaniards gave it over. And though the Engliſh, and the Hollanders have endeavoured an exact Diſcovery, and feverally begun ſome Plantations in it, yet they proved as unfortunate as the other; their Quarters being beaten up by the neighbouring Portugals, before they were ſufficiently fortified to make any reſiſtance.

2. WIAPOCO, or GUIANA ſpecially fo called, taketh up the middle of this Country, on both ſides of the River of Wiapeco, whence it hath its name. A River of a long Courſe, but not paſſible up the Stream above 16 miles, by reaſon of a Cataſt or great fall from the higher ground: in breadth betwixt that Cataſt and the Aſturium, about the tenth part of a mile at the Aſturium, or Influx, a whole mile at leaſt, and there about two Fathoms deep.

The Country on both ſides of this River very rich and fertile; ſo natural for Tobacco, that it groweth to nine handfulls long. Sugar-canes grow here naturally without any planting, and on the Shrubs great ſtore of Cotton, and the Dye by ſome called Orellana. Plenty of Vnion in their Woods, and of Fills in their Rivers: their Fields well ſtored with Beatts, which themſelves call Moyes, in shape and use resembling Kine, but without any Horns. The people generally of a modest and ingenuous countenance, naked, but would wear cloaths if they had them, or knew how to make them. Their Bread is made of a Plant called Cassavi, of which also being dried and chewed, and then strained through a Wicker Vell, they make a kind of Drink, in colour like new Ale, but not so well tasted, and of less continuance. The greatest part of their Food is Fish, which they intoxicate with a strong-scented Wood, and to take them up as they lie floating on the top of the Water. Much troubled with a Worm like Flea (by the Spaniards called Nigua) which get under the nails of their Feet, and multiply there to infinite numbers, and the no less torture of the Patient, without speedy Punction. No better Remedy found out, then to pour Wax melted hot on the place affected, which being pulled off when its cold, draws the Vermen within, sometimes 3000 at a pull. The women have such easy child-birth, that they are delivered without help, and presently bring the Child to his Father, (for they have so much natural modesty as to withdraw from company upon that occasion) who washeth it with water, and painteth it with several colours, and so returneth it to the Mother.

Rivers of note here are very many; no Country under Heaven being better watered, nor fuller of more pleasant and goodly streams. The names of some of them on both sides of the Wapoco we have had before: the chief of which I take to be Wia, affirmed to be of a long course, a goodly River all the way, and at the Mouth thereof to be large and broad, which passing through the heart of the Country, in the fourth Degree and 40 minutes of Northern Latitude, may possibly occasion both the whole and this part more especially to be called Wiana, and by the Dutch, who cannot pronounce the W, Guiana. Certain I am, that by the name of Wiana, I have found it written in approved Authors. But what need further search be made after lesser Rivers, (which will offer themselves to us of their own accord) when we have a Lake to pass over like a Sea for bigones, Macagnan, Sanfium, & Watum, Ashtar, Naris, as my Author hath it; by the Tau or Tau called Kapomintin, by the Caribes (the old Inhabitants of this Country) Parimay; situate about a days journey from the River Esequibo, and neighbored by the great and famous City Mama, which the Spaniards call El Dorado, (or the Golden City) from the abundance of Gold, in Coin, Plate, Armour, and other Furniture, which was said to be it. The greatest City, as some say, not only of America, but of all the World. For Diego de Ordaz, one of the Companions of Cortez in his Mexican Wars, and by him condemned for a Mutiny, put into a Boat alone without any Victual, and so call out to seek his Fortune, affirmed at his return; that being taken by some of the Guianians, and by them carried to their King, then residing at Mamabe, entered the City at high noon, travelled all the rest of that day, and the next all until night, before he came to the Kings Palace; but then he saith that he was led blind-fold all the way. And therefore possibly enough this City might be no such Miracle as the story makes it. Don Diego being either abused by the Reports of the Savages, or willing to abuse the World with such empty Fictions. For though the Spaniards and the English have severally sought out that with incredible diligence, to find out this City, yet none of them have hitherto had the fortune to fall upon it. So that I fear it may be laid in the Poets Language.

Essequibo inquam — f. e.

That which is no where to be found.

Think not to be above the ground.

Relations of the great Court kept here by one of the Ingos; who being, forthwith, one of the younger Brethren of Atabalipa, the late King of Peru, at the Conquest of that Kingdom, with many thousands of his Followers, came into this Country, and subduing the Caribes, erected here a second Peruvian Monarchy. For, besides that Atabalipa had no Brethren but Guscar and Mango, who both died in Peru, how improbable must it needs appear, that this Guianian King, knowing full well the thirst of the Spaniards after Gold, would either suffer him to return and disclose the Secrets of his State, or send him away loaded with Gold, as 'tis said he did? who sheweth his Treasure to a Thief, doth deserve to die. And therefore, letting pass these dreams of an El Dorado, let us descend to places of less Magnificence, but of greater Reality. Amongst which I reckon, 1. Caripou, most memorable for a Colony of English there planted by Captain Robert Harcourt, Anno 1600, situate on the Banks of the Wapoco, near the Mouth thereof, on the advantage of a Rock, and that Rock of difficult access, that they feared no danger from an Enemy. The Air is found and answerable to the constitution of an English body, that of 30, which were left there for three years together, there died but six, and those six rather by misfortune, and some cross accident, then by any Diseases. 2. Gomeribou, on the top of an Hill, near the mouth of the Bay of Wapoco, possessed by a while by some Hollanders, but soon deserted. 3. Moyemon, a Village of the Paragoti, on the banks of the River Murivou. 4. Crevinay, on the other side of the same River, possessed by the Caribes. The King of the fish (for each Tribe had its several Princes) being named Maperitica, affirmed to be a virtuous man, and kind to Strangers; of the latter, Minapa. 5. Tanparamenou, about an hundred Leagues from the mouth of that River; and 6. Morogbes, four days journey from the other: both possessed by the Caribes. The King or Cacique of those last, as Captain Harcourt's being there, (of which time we speak) was named Aracurita, affirmed to have a skin like a piece of Bull.

The principal Families of this part, besides the Tau or Tau, and the Marauis, spoken of before, who possess almost all the Sea Coasts of this Country, are said to be the Arancea, the Sapayay, the Moyes, and the Aracurita of different Languages and Customs, though near neighbours unto one another. Originally Inhabitants of the Island of Trinidad, and the River of Orenoque: whence driven by the Spaniards they came into this Tract, and beating the old Inhabitants, whom they call by the common name of Caribes, higher into the Country, possessed themselves of the Sea shores and the parts adjoining; each Tribe or Family being governed by its several Chief, as before was intimated. The Netherlanders for a time had some footing in it, but they quickly left it; endeavouring nothing more in the time of their short stay amongst them, then to make the people disaffected to the English, of whose pretensions to these parts, and designs to plant them, they had good intelligence. And so much was confided by some of the Natives, when they had found by good experience and acquaintance how much the English were abused in those Mist-reports. Afterwards in the year 1503, Captain Charles Leigh set sail from Wolrich on the Thames, and in May fell upon the River of Wapoco, where he was kindly entertained, granted with an House and Garden, and his Aid craved against the Caribes and other Enemies. He took possession of the Country in the name of King James, and the Crown of England, and caused the River of Wapoco to be called (by his own name) Caroleigh; but that name ended with his Life, and that shortly after, he dying in his return on Ship-board. The design went forwards notwithstanding, withstanding, and in the year 1608, an English Colony is brought hither by Captain Harcourt, a new possession taken in the name of King James, the Colony planted at Carpo before mentioned, the Country farther searched into by that noble Gentleman then ever formerly by any or by many since. After three years, the Colony, wanting its Supply, returned home again; the Plantation never since pursued, though by some projected. Yet so far are these Savages beholden to the English Nation, that as they did defend them at their being there against the Caribes, so at their going off they taught them the use of Arms, and put them into a posture of defence, enabling them thereby to preserve themselves against all their enemies.

3. O R E N O Q U E, or the Province of the River Orenoque, comprehendeth the North parts of Guiana, lying upon and between the Banks of that famous River, of which we have already spoken. The Country is very rich and pleasant, confiding of large Plains many miles in compass, adorned with the Embroidery of Flowers and unknown Plants, exceeding pleasant to the Eye; and sometimes interlaced with Hills, reported to be furnished with rich Mines of Gold, and Silver. The Rivers liberally stored with Fish, and the Forests both with Beasts and Fowls. No Country in America, nor Peru it self, did to be comparable to it for abundance of Treasure. Some also add a whole Mountain of Crystal to be seen afar off from Wineaporo; and tell us (but in general terms) of more goodly Cities then elsewhere in all Peruana: but neither the Spaniards nor the English could ever see them, though they diligently searched into all parts of the Country.

The People, as of several Nations, of of several Natures. The Capuri and Macures, for the most part Carpenters, live by making Canoes or Boats, which they sell unto Guiana for Gold, and to Trinidad for Tobacco, in the immoderate taking whereof they exceed all Nations. When a Cacique or Commander dieth, they make great lamentation; and after the Fish is putrified and fallen from the Bones, they take up the Skeleton, and hang it up in the House where he dwelt, decking his skull with Feathers of all colours, and hanging Gold Plates about the bones of his Arms and Thighs. Of the Tritonius, dwelling upon some of the Northern Branches, it is affirmed by Sir Walter Raleigh, that they are a goodly and valiant people, and to have the most manly and most delicate speech of any Nation in the World. A people, which eat of nothing that is fit or fowly; the Children of Dame Nature, and therefore will not be beholden for their livelihood unto Art or Industry; using the tops of the Palmito-Tree for Bread; Fish, Deer, and Swines-Rub for the rest of their sustenance. The Assaway, Sayma, Wigiri, and Aroras, affirmed to be as black as Negroes, but with smoother Hair; and to use Arrows dipped in so strange a poison, as doth not only bring death, but death with most unpeakeable torments, especially if the wounded party be permitted to drink. Of the Arancea of this Tract I find nothing singular, but that when any of their Kings or Caciques die, their Wives and nearest of the Kindred beat their Bones to powder, and mingle it with their drink, like Spice.

Places of most importance in it (for to speak anything particularly of those many Rivers which fall into the Orenoque were an endless labour; are, 1. Comoliba, on the mouth of Orenoque, but somewhat distant, in which they keep their annual Fairs for the sale of Women. One of our English men, left by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1595, at Armench that he bought eight of them (the eldest not above eighteen) for a half penny red-hatted Knife, which he brought from England. But withal, rather us, for his credit, that he gave them to some Spaniards of his acquaintance. 2. Moquiro, a known Port upon some branch of the Orenoque; of much use to the English in their shift Discovery of these parts. 3. Wineaporo, so called from another branch of that River bearing this name, from whence was shewed an high Hill, said to be of Crystal, but so far off, that it was thought better to believe then to go and see. Others report of this Mountain, that above it there is a mighty River, which, falling down this Cataract on the lower grounds, makes a terrible noise, as if a thousand Bells were knocked one against another. And so little enough it is, that this great fall of Water discerned far off may (with the help of Sun-shine) carry some resemblance of a Crystalline Mountain. 4. S. Thomas, situate on the main Channel of the River Orenoque, a Town of 140 Houses, stretched out in length for half a mile, but flighly built; a Parish Church in the midst of it, and at the west end a Convent of Franciscan Friars. The only Town of all Guiana possessed by the Spaniards, not fortified till against the last coming of Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1617, but taken by him at that time, and since that by the Hollanders, Anno 1629; though by both quitted not long after, it returned to the Spaniards.

The several Nations of this Tract have been named before. Discovered first by Diego de Ordaz, Anno 1531, furnished with a Patent for the Conquest of it by Charles the Fifth, But not hitting on the right Channel, or otherwise not able to overcome the difficulties which lay before him, he returned to Spain, effecting nothing but the opening of the way to others. Followed herein by Hierem de Ortal, Anno 1533, and after by Herrera, who proceeded farther then the others, Anno 1536, and finally by Gonsalvo Ximinez de Quisada and Antonio Berro, with far better fortune: who by beginning their journey from the New Realm of Granada in the search of Guiana, fell casually into this great River, as Orellana did before into that of the Amazon. But yet not perfectly discovered till the year 1595, in which Sir Walter Raleigh having taken Prisoner this Antonio Berro, and learning of him the success of his Expedition, resolved upon the Undertaking; and searched for far into the Country by the course of this River, that some have since called it Ruliana. The business was followed the next year (after his return) by Captain Lawrence Keymis, employed by Raleigh in that Service, who at his coming found the Country possessed by the Spaniards; by whom 20 or 30 of the moveable houses of the Savages had been laid together like a Town, and all the Natives, who would well to the English, dispersed and scattered. So that without any other check of this journey, then the finding out the true mouth of the Orenoque (which he first discovered) he set sail for England. In the mean time it had been moved at the Court, that a Colony of English should be planted there, and some proportionable force sent over to make good the Action. But the motion was upon good advice rejected, first in regard of the distance of it from the main body of our strength; and secondly, because the Spaniards, bordering near upon it, might easily cast out small forces, and make the enterprise dishonourable to the English Nation, who had then the better of him in the point of honourable Achievements. It was permitted notwithstanding unto private Adventurers to try their Fortunes on it, without engaging of the State: whereupon followed the Voyages of Leigh and Harcourt, before spoken of. But they, not being able to go through with so great a business, let it fall again. And so it relied till the last unfortunate Voyage of Sir Walter Raleigh, licensed by Commission under the Great Seal to search into some Mines of Gold and Silver, which he was credibly informed of when he was in this Country. A design followed with great hopes by the Undertakers, most of them being persons of honour, and well attended: but so unfortunate in the issue, (the Spaniards being being made acquainted with it before his coming) that at the taking of S. Thome he lost his own Son, and a great part of his Forces, and after his return (not able with the residue to make good his ground against the enemy) was executed on a former Attainder in the old Palace of Westminster, Octobr. 29. Anno 1618. Of whom I cannot but note what was said by Camden Clarenceux in his Annals: Pir erat iniquam satis laudato studio & Regionis re-mota detegendi, & Navalem Anglie gloriam promovendi. And so I leave him to his rest in the Bed of Peace.

4. The ISLANDS which properly are accounted of as parts of Guiana, lie either scattered on the shore, or in the mouths or bodies of the greater Rivers; some of them not inhabited, others of no name, and none at any of any reckoning. Only the Isle of 1. Trinidad, and 2. Tabago, are of some esteem: which though somewhat farther off from the shores of this Country, yet being that of Trinidad lieth in the mouth of the Orenoque, and that both of them with Guiana pass but for one Prefecture, or Provincial Government, we shall describe them in this place.

1. TRINIDAD, or Insula S. Trinitatis, lieth at the mouth of the River Orenoque, over against Paria, from which separated by a Frith, or Streight, by Columbus, who first discovered it, called Boca del Drago, or the Dragon mouth, because of the dangerousness of the passage. Extended from the ninth to the tenth Degree of Northern Latitude; the most Southern Angle of it called Punta del Gato, as that on the North-east Punta de Galera. The Frith, or Streight but three miles over, yet made more narrow by the Interposition of four or five little Islands, which the Sea breaketh through with great violence, leaving only two entrances for Shipping into the Gulf, called the Gulf of Paria. The length hereof 25 Leagues, the breadth 18. Of a cloudy and unhealthy Air, but a fertile soil, abundantly well stored with such Commodities, as are of the natural growth of America, viz. Maize, Sugar-canes, Cotton-wool, and the best kind of Tobacco, much celebrated formerly by the name of a Pipe of Trinidad. Here is also a sufficiency of Fruits and Cat-tel for the use of the Natives; and here and there some Veins of Gold, and other Metals: such store of Pitch, that innumerable Ships might be laden with it; but that it is conceived to be unfit for the calking of Ships, because it softneth in the Sun. The place in which it groweth is by the Spaniards called Terra de Brea, by the Natives Pichen.

The People of the same nature and disposition with the other Americans, distinguished into several Tribes, but most of them reduced under the power of two petty Princes. But the greater part of the Inhabitants, to avoid the Tyranny of the Spaniards, took their Country, and retired over into Guiana, where before we found them. The chief Town of it called S. Joseph, situate on the South-side of the Island, on the banks of a little River which the Natives call Carone, the ordinary Residence of the Governour, who hath under him besides this Island the Provinces of Guiana and El Dorado, (for so goes his Title) yet a small Town, confining but of 40 Houses when it was taken, Anno 1595. by Sir Walter Raleigh; Antonio Berreo the Governour of it being then made Prisoner, who furnished his taker with many Notions (and some merely fabulous) towards the Discovery of Guiana.

This Island, first discovered by Christopher Columbus, in his third Voyage, Anno 1497, was by him called La Trinidad, it may be with some reference to the form hereof, shooting into the Sea with three points or Promontories. Nothing else memorable in the fortunes and Story of it, but what is touched upon before.

2. TABAGO lieth on the North-east of La Trinidad, from which eight miles distant: full of fair Harbours for the bigness, watered with 18 little Rivers, and well stored with Woods; amongst which some Palmito Trees, some like that of the Brazil-wood, others not elsewhere to be found. Of Fowl and Fish sufficient to maintain it self. Now called New Wales, with reference to an Island of that name in Zealand, by some of the Low-Country-men, who begin to plant there.

And so much for GUIANA.

P A R I A.

PARIA is bounded on the East with Guiana, and the Islands in the mouth of the Orenoque; on the West, with the Gulf or Bay of Venezuela, and part of the new Realm of Granada, on the North, with the main Atlantic Ocean, or Mare del Noords; the Countries lying on the South not discovered hitherto.

It took this name from a mistake of the Spaniards, (as Pere and Juanon on the like) who asking, as all men do, the names of those new Regions which they discovered, and pointing to the Hills afar off, were answered, Paria, that is to say, high Hills or Mountains, (for here begins the Lodge of Mountains which are thence continued for the space of 3600 miles, to the Straights of Magellan) and so hath ever since held the name of Paria. By some writers it is called Nova Andalusia; but I adhere unto the former.

The nature of the Soil and People being very different, will be more properly considered in the several parts. The whole divided into the Continent and the Islands, which, with their Sub-divisions may be branched into these particulars, viz. 1. Cumana, 2. Venezuela, 3. S. Margarita, 4. Cubagua; and 5. the lesser Islands.

1. CUMANA hath on the East the Gulf of Paria, and the River Orenoque; on the West, Venezuela; on the North and South bounded as before. So called from Cumana, one of the Rivers of it, on the banks whereof some Dominican Friars (who first set footing in this Country) built themselves a Monastery; that name being communicated afterwards unto all the rest of this Tract.

It extended East and West to the breadth of 110 Leagues; the length thereof, from North to South, said to be 400. But there is little of it known, and less of it planted by the Europeans; except some places near the sea: there being no part of all America, the description whereof hath come so imperfectly to our hands, as I may call it. Martyrdom: which was revenged by Alonso de Ojeda, Anno 1520. and he not long after slain by the Savages, who also at the same time destroyed two Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Friars, which had been founded in the year 1518. A second force sent thither under Gonzalo de Ocampo, waileth a great part of the Country, beheads one of their Kings, and hangs some of his people. But that strength being withdrawn, or defeated also, Diego de Castellon is sent over by the Council resident in Hispaniola, to secure the possession of the Country; by whom the Castle first, and after the Burrough of Cumana was built and planted. Some other attempts there were for a farther Conquest, but they proved nothing but attempts; except the building of the Castle of S. Michael de Neve, by Hierom of Ortal, and the Discovery of some of the inland Provinces, 150 Leagues from the sea-side, by Antonio Saldano, Anno 1537, of which nothing followed, but the Registering of that tedious March.

2. VENEZUELA is bounded on the East with Cumana, on the West, with the Bay of Venezuela, the Lake of Maracaybo, and the new Realm of Granada. So called by Alonso de Ojeda, one of the first Discoverers of it, Anno 1509, because he found a Burrough of some of the Savages situate in the midst of the waters, to which was no passage but by Boat: the word importing as much as Little Venice.

It is in length from East to West 130 Leagues; in breadth where broadest about 80. The Soil plentiful of all sorts both of Fruit and Grain, the Country so replenished with kind of Cattel, and excellent Pastures to maintain them, that the Neighbouring Nations call it by the name of the Granary. Such store there groweth from hides of Wheaten Meal, Basket, Cheese, Hogs, fish, Ox-hides, and Cloth of Cotton ready made, as very well deserves that Title. Here is also a very great plenty of Fish, wild Beasts for hunting, Mines of Gold and other Metals: besides an infinite deal of Sarsaparilla sent to Europe yearly. The people are of the same Nature and Disposition with those of Cumana, with whom they do participate in all points of that Character. The Women (which was there omitted) trained up to ride, run, leap, and swim, as well as the men to Till the Land; and look to the business of the house, whilst the men hunt or fish to bring in Provision. They count it a great part of Beauty to have very thick Thighs; which they effect by binding their Legs hard below the Knee from their very Childhood. Shameless enough till married, after more reserved & thought rather for fear of a Divorce, than for love of Modesty.

Rivers of note I meet with none, instead of which are many convenient Harbours and capacious Bays. The chief that called Golfo isle, from some Shipwrecks, or the like misfortune happening to the Name of it. 2. The Bay of Coro, or Venezuela, large and spacious, which by the Frith or Streight hath a League over, receiveth the Tribute of 3. The great Lake called the Lake of Maracaybo, by the Spaniards called Lago de Nuegra Senora, or our Ladies Lake, in compass about eighty Leagues; on the Banks whereof dwell many Nations of the Savages, and into which there falleth a River from the Realm of Granada, by which the two Provinces maintain Commerce with one another.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Maracaybo, the farthest Port upon the East, and one of the best on this Coast, in which the Spaniards of Cubagua had once a Garrison, under colour of defending the Country against the Savages, but in plain truth to use it for an opportunity to seize upon their persons, and carry them away for Slaves. Those parts are hereby unpeopled, or but may call it. Martyrdom: which was revenged by Alonso de Ojeda, Anno 1520. and he not long after slain by the Savages, who also at the same time destroyed two Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Friars, which had been founded in the year 1518. Those parts are hereby unpeopled, or but meanly populous. 2. Venezuela, the most Western Town of all the Province, commonly called Caracas, situate in the Latitude of 11 Degrees: built on the sea, where it hath an Haven on each side: the one capacious but not safe, the other safe enough, but not very capacious. But being built in a sweet and healthy air, and neighboured by the richest soil of all the Country, it hath been long the ordinary seat of the Governour, and the See of a Bishop. (Suffragan to the Archbishop of Domingo in Hispaniola.) Once suddenly surprized by the English, Anno 1595, and burnt to ashes; but as suddenly repaired again. 3. Caravalleda, or Nuestra Señora de Caravalleda, 80 Leagues from Caracas towards the East, seated upon the sea near an unsafe Haven, and defended from assault by the Castle of Caracas: so called from the name of the Tribe in which it standeth. Near unto which the Hills arise to so great an height, that they seem to equal the Pike of Tenassiro so much talked of. 4. S. Jago de Leon, in the same Tribe of Caracas, taken by the English in the same years. 5. Nova Valencia, 2 Leagues from S. Jago de Leon, and from Caracas 60. 6. New Xerez lately built fifteen leagues on the south of New Valencia. 7. Nova Segovia, one league only from New Xerez: situate on the Banks of Baraquicimiri, the most noted River of this Tract. 8. Tucayo in the Valley for called: not very large, but plentifully loaded with rich sugar-cane, for which some sugar-works or Ingenios are here lately built. 9. Traxillo, or Nuestra Señora de la Paz, 18 leagues on the south of the great Lake of Maracaybo, on which the Inhabitants heretofore have a Village which belongs unto it, where they hold a Factory for the sale of their Wares. 10. Laguna, on the bottom of the Lake it self; not else observable but for the multitude of Tigers which do haunt about it.

This Country, discovered by Columbus, and named by Alonso de Ojeda, as before is said, was first pretended to, for Neighbourhood sake, by the Spaniards planted in Cubagua. Afterwards John de Ampuez, by order from the Council resident at Domingo in Hispaniola, was employed in the Discovery of it, Anno 1527. But Charles the Fifth, having taken up great sums of money of the Vesperi, a wealthy Family of Angsburg, pawned this Country to them, by whom Ambrusius Alfinger was sent with 400 Foot, and 80 Horse to take possession. But he and his successors in that Employment not minding so much the Conquest as the spoil of the Country, the Council of Domingo undertook the business once again: and in the year 1545, sent over one John de Caravay, who treading in the steps of the Governor, or rather out-going them in all sorts of Rapine, was ousted on a second Order by one John Perez de Tolosa, by whom the Province was reduced into some good order. In the year 1550, the Negros, brought hither in great multitudes out of Africk, began to mutiny; but their design was discovered, and themselves all slain. Peace and contentment following after all these Troubles, the Country was in little time so thoroughly planted, and the Natives so encouraged in their several Tribes, that notwithstanding the destructions made by the Germans and Spaniards, there were reckoned not long since above 100000 of the Savages: not numbering those above fifty, or under 18 years of age, who, by an Order of the Council of Spain for these parts of America, are exempt from Taxes.

3. MARGARITA is an Island situate over against the Salina or Salt-Lake in Cumana, from the main Land whereof it is distant above seven Leagues. So called from the abundance of Pearls which the Spaniards found at the first discovery, which the Latinists call Margaritas, and from them the Spaniards. Which though it signify no other than the vulgar or common Pearl, yet here were also found of those of the greater climate, such as the Romans by the figure of Antiphras called Uniones, because they always grew in couples. Nalli duo reperitur indissociari, faith Pliny; unde nomen Unionum scilicet Romanæ impoierit delicia.

The Isle is affirmed to be 16 Leagues in length, and fix in breadth; situate under the 11 Degree of Northern Latitude. Well stored with Pearls upon the Shores, when first discovered; but even then, when most plentifully stored with that Commodity, she had not water other own to quench her thirst, compelled to fetch it from Cumana. Otherwise plentiful enough both of Maize and Fruits. The people obsequiously servile to their Lords, the Spaniards: so long accustomed unto Bondage, that it is now grown another nature. Places of most importance in it, 1. Monaster, in the East corner of the Islands a Fort of the Spaniards, built for securing their rich Trade of Pearl-fishing, and to defend their Ships which lie there at Anchor: within the command whereof is a little Borough, and the House of the Governour. 2. Elvado de Santa Luzia, two leagues from the Sea a Spanish Colony. 3. Makana, the chief Village of the Natives.

This Island, first discovered in the third Voyage of Columbus, Anno 1498, grew suddenly into great esteem, by reason of the rich Pearl-fishing which they found on the Shores thereof. And in regard the Natives were ready to betray their Treasures, (of which themselves made little reckoning) they found more favour from the Spaniards, and obtained more Liberties from the King, than the rest of the Savages. Inasmuch that the Spaniards either could not, or would not compel them to dive into the Sea for Pearl; but bought Negroes Slaves from Cumana and the Coasts of Africk, whom they inforced with great Torments to dive into the bottom of the Sea, many times seven or eight fathom deep, to bring up the shells in which that Treasure was included: where many of them were drowned, and some maimed with Sharks and other Fishes. But that rich Trade is much diminished of late, if it fail not quite. The cause thereof to be imputed to the insatiable Avarice of the Spaniards, so greedily upon Pearl, that they destroyed the very Seed, and making gain of whatsoever they could meet with, for a little present profit, lost the hopes of the future. The Island is since less famous, and not much frequented. Visited to its coast in the year 1601, by the English under Capt. Parker, who received here 500 l. in Pearls for the ransom of Prisoners; and took a Ship which came from the Coast of Angola, laden with 370 Negroes to be sold for Slaves.

4. CUBAGNA is an Island lying betwixt Margarita and the Promontory of Arya upon the Continent; from the first distant but one League, from the other fix; it self in compass about three. Rich on the shores by the abundance of Pearls which were found there, but very beggerly on the Land. Destitute both of Grass and Water, by consequence of Cattel also, except only Cornies, and but few of those. So that like many a Gallant, who spend all upon the Back, and nothing on the Belly, he had her out-lid-laced with Pearls, but within nothing to be found but want and hunger. Their Bread and water brought them out of other Countries, and their Fruits too, if they desired to have any there being very few Trees, and those most of Cucuzum. But so abundant in this treasure, that the Kings Fifths for many years amounted to 15000 Ducats yearly out of this poor Island.

In this respect it was presently referred to and possessed by the Spaniards, who planted here a Colony, which they called New Cadix, and grew in short time unto so great power, that they made themselves Masters of the Port of Maracaybo in Venezuela, one of the best upon those Seas. But in the year 1521, hearing that the Savages of Cumana had destroyed the Convent of Francis- cans on the opposite shore, they cowardly forsook the Island, and fled to Hispaniola. Sent back again by the Council there, under the Conduct of Jamer de Castellon, by whom the Town was made more beautiful and strong then ever formerly. In great esteem as long as the Pearl-fishing did continue; now, with that, decayed. Yet still the Island doth deserve some consideration for a Fountain on the East part of it near unto the sea, continuing, though the Pearls be gone, which yieldeth a Bituminous substance like Oil, medicinal for Discaies, and is found 2 or 3 Leagues off floating on the Sea: more profitable for the good of mankind, and more easily found, than the Pearls, which sunk unto the bottom, and maintained our Pride.

cans

Four miles from hence, but appendent to it, lieth a little Island called Crobo, 3 miles in compass, but so abundantly stored with Pearls, that it hath been worth in that one commodity, for some months together, above a thousand pounds a month of our English money. First peopled upon that occasion, Anno 1529, but the occasion failing, the Plantation ended, the Isle being now unpeopled, as not worth the looking after.

5. THE LESSER ISLANDS of this Prefecture, or Provincial Government, lie all along upon the Coast of Venezuela, from East to West. The principal of which, 1. Tortuga, 12 or 14 miles on the West of Margarita: four miles in length, hardly one in breadth but yielding such good store of Salt, that three or four Ships are laden with it every year. Well furnished with Goats and Guaicum, but not else considerable, except for being naturally fenced about with Rocks, and yielding a convenient Harbour for the use of Mariners. 2. Catrina, by the English called The Isle of Providence, as the former is by the name of Assuacion; both which, being void of all Inhabitants and tame Beasts, were possessed by them about the year 1629, at such time as there was open War between England and Spain. After which, not being claimed by the Spaniards in making up the Peace ensuing, they were granted by King Charles, by his Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England, to certain Noblemen and Gentlemen, and their Successors, who for the space of 20 years, or thereabouts, have enjoyed them quietly; the Islands being planted by them with their several Colonies, and all things necessary to maintain and enrich the same. 3. Bonaire, opposite to the Bay of Golfo trile, in the Latitude of 12 degrees; well furnished with Sheep and Goats, and other Cattel brought out of Spain, and peopled with some Savages out of Hispaniola, whom the Spaniards Civilized and sent thither: some Spaniards with their Governor intermixt amongst them. The Island 16 miles in compass; not fruitful naturally, but in Trees, which are great and numerous. 4. Caracas, nine miles on the West of Bonaire, and as many in compass of a more fertile Soil by far, and of very rich Pastures. The people are given to Grazing, and make good store of Cheese, transported thence to other places of the Island, having toward the North a convenient Harbour. 5. Aryba, on the North-East of Caracas, from which 9 miles distant, in compass not above 5 miles, for the most part level. One Hill it hath (amongst some others) fashioned like a Sugar-loaf. Inhabited by few Savages, and fewer Spaniards.

The other Islands on this Coast, as 1. the Tolligos, lying Eastward of Margarita, 2. Blanca, 3. Orchilla, 4. Tococa, and 5. the Iles del Aves, or of Birds, interposed betwixt Tolliga and Bonaire, some of them rather Rocks than Islands, few stored with any living Creatures for the use of men, and none of them at all with men to manure and dress them, I pass over here, and so proceed from these Islands of the Province of Paria, to those which are subordinate to the Council of S. Domingo, and make a Province of themselves, But first we must go back, and bring up some of the Islands of Mare del Zur, which could not be reduced to any of the former Provinces.

And so much of P E R U A N A.

Of the American Islands:

And first of those which are in

MARE del ZUR.

THE AMERICAN ISLANDS scattered up and down the Shores of this New World, are commonly divided into those of Mare del Zur, or the Pacific Ocean, and those of the Atlantic, or Mare del Noerde. The first so called by Magellanus, the first Discoverer, who, passing through those troublesome and tempestuous Straights which now bear his name, found such a change upon his coming into the main, that he gave it the name of Mare del Zur, (quod a tranquillitate vocavit) Mare del Zur, faith the Author of the Atlas Minor from the calm and peaceable temper of it; by the Latins called Mare Pacificum, in the same regard. Called also the Southern Ocean, because of its situation on the South-side of America, in reference to some part of the Gulf of Mexico, and the Straights of Anias: Not known unto the Spaniards till discovered by Nomius Vespucius de Balboa, conducted thither by one of the Caciques or petty Kings of the Country about Nubere de Dios; who seeing the Spaniards so greedily after Gold, told them that he would bring them to a place where their thirst should be satisfied. Accordingly he brought them to the opposite shore, this Balboa being the chief man at that Adventure: who discovering farther on the Sea, opened the way unto Pizarro, and the rest that followed, to the golden Treasures of Peru. He was executed notwithstanding this good service, by Don Pedro de Arila, within short time after. But the more full discovery of it is to be ascribed unto Magellanus, and some later Adventurers, though the Spaniards got nothing by the bargain. For formerly, as long as the Southern Sea was unknown to any but themselves, they conveyed their Gold and treasures from one place to another, from Panama to Peru, from Peru to Panama, without loss or charge, and thought their Ports upon that Shore to be unaccessible:

But

But after the way into this sea was found out by Magellanus, Drake, Cavendish, and the rest of our English Adventurers do to scour these Coasts, that they left them neither Port nor ship which they did not naufrags as hath been evidenced before in former particulars.

As for the Islands of this sea, they lie most of them to near the Shores, as if placed there by Nature to serve as Outworks to defend the Continent. Many in late, but few of consideration; and of those few, some of the chief have been defracted already in their proper places as parts and members of the Province upon which they lie. The residue, which lie too far off to come under such consideration, must be mentioned here; and those reduced to the two Heads, 1. Los Ladrones, 2. The Islands of John Fernandez.

1. LOS LADRONES are certain Islands situate betwixt the main Land of America and the Philippine Islands, in the Latitude of 18 $\frac{1}{2}$  and the 4. Degree of Northern Latitude. So called by Magellanus, who first discovered them, because of the Thievishness of the Inhabitants, (Infulæ Latronum their name in Latine) who had stoln his Cock-boats, which he was forced by main force to recover from them. And they continue till both their name and nature. Found such by Cavendish and Noon in their several Voyages, to whom they came under colour of buying Iron, (a commodity which they highly prize) but either closely or openly flouting whatsoever they met with. The People tall of stature, brown of complexion, and inclining to corpulency; extremely active, and good Divers, continuing a long time under the Water, as it alkited fit to both Elements; inasmuch as the Hollanders then with Noon, to make trial of it, cast five pieces of Iron into the sea, all fetched out by one of them. The Women as good at it as the Men. Both sexes given to filthy and promiscuous Lufts; for which branded (many of them) with the marks of their Incontinency, the Fox having eaten up both their Lips and their Noses.

Their Religion is worshipping the Devil, whose Images they have in Wood on the Head of their Boats; the Chappel and the Saints fit for such Devotions. But for the nature of these Islands, and what subjection the Inhabitants of it yield to the King of Spain, I am yet to feel. But like enough they yield as little as some others do, which yet are reckoned by our Authors to be parts of America.

2. The Islands of John Fernandez are two in number; so called from John Fernandez, the first Discoverer, Anno 1574; each of 5 or 6 miles in compass, and about 300 miles distant from the shores of Chile. Situate in the 33 Degree of southern Latitude; rocky and barren, but well wooded, and those woods replenished with Goats, but their flesh not favourable as in other places. Some flocks of Sanders there is in them, and of Palms no scarcity. Plenty of Fish upon the shores, for which cause visited sometimes by the Spaniards lying in Peru, and fitted with commodious Harbours and Roads for shipping, which makes them not negl. And by other Nations as pass this way. None else of note in all this sea, but such as lie upon the shores of their several Provinces; which we have looked upon already. And therefore passing through the Straights, and coming up unto the Islands of Paria, Mare del Nord, or that part of the Atlantic which washeth the Shores of this New World (the reason of which Names we have seen before) subordinate to the Council or Government of S. Domingo, viz. 1. the Caribæ, 2. Porto Rico, 3. Hispaniola, 4. Cuba, and 5. Jamaica. The rest are already spoken of in their proper places.

1. The CARIBES.

THE CARIBES, or Cannibal Islands, are in number many; 127 of them known by their proper names; the rest of less note; though some of these of little enough not yet so distinguished. Called thus in general, because inhabited by Cannibals, & man-eating people (at their discovery by the World Caribæ do import. They lie extended like a Bow from the coast of Paria unto the Isle of Trinidad of different temper, as must needs be in such variety; & therefore not within the compass of a general Character. Some of the principal we shall consider more distinctly; and for the rest, 'tis enough to name them, or else we will pass them by.

1. GRANADA, the nearest of this crew to the Main Land of Cumana, is situate in the Lat. of 20 Deg. and 15 Min. in form like a Crescent or half Moon, the two horns not a mile asunder, the whole length but 6. Shaded all over with thick woods, but notwithstanding of a rich and fruitful soil. A Haven in it of good use, but no Town of note. The people of the famell condition with the other Savages, but more wit to hide it most mischievously intended when they seem most kind, & then most to be avoided.

2. S. VINCENT, 18 miles on the North of Granada, is of 6 blessed a foil, that it brings forth abundance of Sugarcane without charge to the Husbandmen; watered with many pleasant Rivers, and full of safe and convenient Bays for the use of Mariners. In figure Circular: the Diameter being 6 miles over the circle by consequence 18. The people but of mean stature, foolish, and studious only for the Belly: their love to which makes them adventure in their small Boats, hewn out of the body of a tree, to pass into the Continent, and return again without the help of a compass though distant from it, at the nearest, above 30 miles.

3. BARBADOS, on the North-east of S. Vincent, in the Latitude of 13 Deg. and 20 Min. Of an Oval form, 17 or 18 miles in compass. The soil in show like that of England, but far more fruitful. On the East side thrusting out itself with Points and Angles, which yield more Bays but full of Quick-fands and unsafe for shipping; on the fourth furnished with a large and commodious Harbour. Not very well provided of for Fruits or Cattel, till made a Colony of the English, who brought thither from their own Country Swine and Kine, Oranges and the like from others. The chief Commodity hitherto made of this Plantation comes by the planting of Tobacco, and by a kind of coarse Sugar called Barbados Sugar, which must be quickly spent, or it will melt to nothing. Were they in stock, and not forced to make a quick return of their commodities, they might make here as good Sugars as in other places. Yet this Plantation is said to be worth all the rest which are made by the English, who (as I take it) are the sole Colony in the Island; but at the courtesy of the Spaniards, without whose leave and liking not of force to hold it.

4. MANTININO on the North-west of the Barbados, by the Savages called Mandaminan, with little difference. Every where swelled with hills; of which way is most eminent for height: one of them, which way cover a man looks upon it, carrying the resemblance of an Hat. Inhabited in the time of Peter Martyr, the Historian, with none but women; afterward with a more fierce & barbarous people than the rest of these Islands; but neither men or women to be seen of late: whether destroyed, or removed farther from the shores for fear of their destruction, is a thing uncertain.

5. DOMINICA, seated on the North of Mantini- nina, 12 leagues in length, exceeding fruitful of Tobacco, which they fell unto the Europeans for Hatchets, Knives, and other Instruments of Iron. Famed for two Fountains of hot water, and a commodious Haven at the West-side of it, into which falleth a River 20 paces broad. The people as barbarous as ever, Cannibals or Man-eaters to this very day. At deadly enmity with the Spaniards, & to man truly, but where they cannot hurt, or dare not Both Sexes were their hair long, & colour their bodies over with Oaker. Yet bloody & barbarous though they be, they are ruled by a King of their own, distinguished from the rest in his dress or habit, whom they most readily obey.

6. DESEADA, or the Land of Desire, on the north-east of Dominica, discovered by Columbus in his second Voyage, naked of Trees, and at the first sight afar off not unlike a Galaxy. Of great use to the Spaniards, who always take it in their way to the Canaries; the parts of America, and back again at their return.

The like use do they make of 7. The Isle of GUARDALUPE, parallel to this, but directly Westward: which the Fleets which come from Spain use to take fresh water, and there disperse themselves to their several Ports. Eight miles in length, and of good Anchorage in most parts of the S. a. adjoining. North-east from hence lieth

8. S. Maria del Antigua, commonly called ANTIGUA only, and by some mistakingly ANTEGO. Seven leagues in length, and as many in breadth; difficult of access, and destitute of fresh waters, but well replenished with woods and provided of Fens. Of late times made a Colony of the English, who do fill profits it.

9. S. CHRISTOPHERS, on the North-west of Guadalupe, in the Lat. of 17 Deg. and 20 Min. The length six miles, the breadth in many places four, and in some but two; much swelled with Hills, and towards the East provided of several Salt-wiches. The French and English had sometimes in it several Colonies, by whom the Natives were destroyed, or otherwise compelled to forsake their dwellings; so civil, as was pretended, of some manifest Treachery. But the two Colonies did not long enjoy the sole possession of it. Frederick de Toledo, as he passed this way with his Navy; though suffered to return to their former dwellings as rather profitable than dangerous to the Crown of Spain. Their chief Employment and commodity lies in their Tobacco, by some much commended. Joyning hereto, or but a league from it at the most, is

10. The Isle of NEVIS, which is affirmed to be five leagues in compass, well wooded, and as pleasantly watered; inasmuch as the Inhabitants of the Isle of Dominica used to come thither for their pleasures, but for hunting chiefly. Now famed for more Baths or Hot-waters, found out by the English, who, in the year 1528, placed a Colony in it. But whether subsisting of it, or for a part of their Plantation in S. Christophers, I am yet to learn.

11. SANCIA CRUX, by the Inhabitants called Ayzo, on the North-west of S. Christophers, and the South-east of Porto Rico, from which last distant 15 Leagues. Woody and Mountainous, not well provided of fresh waters; but on the west side furnished with a safe and commodious Road, under the cover of the Mountains. Amongst their fruits are some that resemble a green Apple, which tasted, do inflame the Tongue, that for 24 hours it swelleth in so great extremity, as makes it altogether useless; but after that the little and little it abates again. The like happeneth also to the Face, if walked before Sun rising with their Fenwaters, which are very frequent in this Island; after the rising of the Sun, without any harm at all. In this there is a Colony of the English also, but of later standing than those of S. Christophers and Barbados.

Some of the principal of the rest are 1. Anguilla, 2. Barbuda, 3. S. Bartholomew, 4. S. Lucie, 5. S. Martin, 6. Monferrat, 7. Ratunda, 8. Saba, 9. Virgogard, and 10. Sunbrev, of which we have little but the names: the rest, though known by several names, are not worth the naming. Only we are to add concerning the whole Nation of Caribæ, once here inhabiting, that they did usually hunt for men, as men for Beasts, moving as far as Porto Rico, to seek after their prey; and what they caught was sure to go to the pot, in the worst kind too. Columbus, when he was at the Isle of Guadalupe, found 30 Captive Children, which were reserved to be eaten, and in their households divers Vessels filled with Man's flesh, and some upon the Spit ready to be roasted. Nor had they laid aside this Diet till after the year 1563, but how long I know not. For at that time a Spanish Ship coming to water at the Isle of Dominica, they cut her Cables in the night, haled her to the Land, and devoured all that were in her. But the Islands have been of late times well cleared of these Monsters; some of them brought unto better order, but the most destroyed, as the common enemies of mankind, the Islands where they dwelt being either totally deserted, or taken up by Europeans, and their several Colonies.

2. PORTO RICO AND MONICO.

PORTO RICO lieth on the North-west of S. Maria Cruz, from which distant about 15 Leagues, and near upon as many from Hispaniola, 126 Leagues from the main Land of Paria, and not much less from the Cape of Cognobine in Rio de la Hacha, a Province of Castilla. Azores. It took this name from the chief Town and Haven of it, but was called by Columbus at the first Dicovery S. Johannes Isula, or the Isle of S. John, by the Natives Borinquen.

It is situate under the 18 and 19 Degrees of Northern Latitude, in form quadrangular, but of a greater length than breadth, such as the Geometricians call oblongum: the length heretofore being 30 Leagues, and the breadth but 20. The Air heretofore very pleasant and temperate, not scorched with furious Heats in Summer, nor made offensive by the fall of continual Rains; exposed sometimes (chiefly in August and September) to the troublesome fumes of fadden tempests, called Hurricanes. The soil is indifferently fruitful, though somewhat Mountainous; here being (besides other Hills of inferior note) a Ridge of high Hills which run cross the Country from the one end unto the other. Their chief Commodities are Sugarcane, Ginger, Coffee, and great store of Hides; the Europeans Cattel having so abundantly increased, that they kill thousands for their Skins, leaving the flesh to be a prey unto Dogs and Birds. Some Mines here were of Gold and Silver, but consumed long since. And so are all the Natives also of whom, in this respect, it is impertinent to give any Character.

Chief Rivers of the Island, 1. Cairon, 2. Boyaman, of divers Fountains, and of several and divided Courses. 3. Luyza, and 4. Tos two Rivers growing out of one. The Spring of that one is in the Mountains of Guanayon, whence running Northwards in one Channel 16 Leagues together, it afterwards divides it self into two streams: 5. Guanayon, 6. Azeibon, 7. Guadalupe, of lesser notes but all of them, as well as all the rest before, concluding in some safe and capacious Haven.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Porto Rico, the chief Town, built in a little Island, on the North-side of the greater greater, but joined into it with huge Piles at vast expences, by the command of Philip the First, Anno 1504, well built, with large Streets and convenient Houses, according to the Model of the Cities of Spain, and beautified with a fair Cathedral, the Bishop one of the Suffragans of the Archbishop of S. Domingo in Hispaniola. The Town unwall'd, but fortified with two strong Castles; the one of which secures the Haven, and the other the Town. In vain attempted, and with the loss of 40 or 50 men, by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595, but taken two years after by George Earl of Cumberland, who had a purpose to have peopled it with an English Colony. Discouraged from by the death of 100 of his Men, by change of Air, and some intemperance of Diet, he set sail for England, doing no other hurt to the Town or Island, but the disfigurement of it 70 pieces of Ordnance, and some part of their Treasure, which he brought home with him. 2. S. German, in the Western part of the Island but four Leagues from the Sea; once the chief of the Island, now both unfortified and small. 3. Arcebo, on the River fo called. 4. Leyla, the most noted Port of the Eastern parts, situate on the mouth of the River fo named.

Eastward hereof, betwixt it and Hispaniola, lies the Island of Mona (might not this, think we, be fo called by Madoc ap Owen Gwynedd, of whom before?) three leagues in compass Rocky, and of a brackish Earth, but fit for the production of Limons, Oranges, and such kind of Fruit, which are here in plenty. Not far off, but more towards the West, Monico, or Monetta, as our English call it; where they found such infinite flocks of Fowl, that they flew over their heads as thick as Hail, and made them almost deaf with the very noise; their Eggs fo thick upon the ground that they loaded two Boats with them in three hours, and could hardly pass forwards without treading on them.

But to return to Porto Rico, or the Island of S. John: it was touched upon by Columbus in his second Voyage, Anno 1493, but first inhabited by John Ponce de Leon, Anno 1510. who being courteously entertained by Aiguabana, the chief Prince thereof, planted a Colony of Spaniards in the North part of the Island, which he called Caparra. The Colony 10 years after that removed to Guayama, and from thence to S. German: carrying with it the repute of the chief Town of all the Island; upon civility remove, till the building of Porto Rico, where it since hath fixed. The Island very populous for the bigness of it, when the Spaniards came thither; but the Natives were long ago confuted by several Churches and, as some write, not above 1500 Spaniards are in all the Country. What else concerns the Story of it, we have seen before.

2. HISPANIOLA.

HISPANIOLA lieth on the West of Porto Rico; the Distance we have seen already. By the Inhabitants called Haity, and by some Guissana; but by Columbus it was honoured with the name of Hispaniola, or Little Spain, and of late times beginning to be called S. Domingo, from the chief Town of it.

The form thereof is Triangular, extended in a sharp Angle, called Cabo del Engano, towards Porto Rico; the Western end fashioned like a Bay or Semicircle; the Northern point of which is named S. Nicholas, the Southern Cabo de Donna Maria. The length affirmed to be 150 Leagues, the breadth in some places 60, in some but 30, thence growing less and less, till it come unto the Eastern Angle; the whole compass estimated at 400. Situate betwixt the 18 and 20 Degrees of Northern Latitude. Of an Air much infested with Morning-heats, but cool in the Afternoon, by the constant blowing of a Sea-Gale, which they there commonly call Virfoun. The Country is for the most part beautiful and flourishing; the Trees always in their Summer-livery, and the Meadows green, as if it did enjoy a perpetual spring. In many places twel'd high craggy Mountains, whence the name of Haity, that word fo signifying in the natural Language of the Natives. Of such an excellent Herbage, that the Cattel brought hither out of Spain have increased almost beyond Arithmeticks; grown wild for want of proper owners, and hunted unto death like the Stags of the Forest, though only to rob them of their skins. The soil fo fertile, that in the space of 16 days Herbs and Roots will grow ripe, and be fit to be eaten. So plentifully stored with Ginger and Sugar-canes, that in the year 1587, there were shipped hence 27500 pound weight of Ginger, and 900 Chells of refined Sugar: an evident argument of the richness and fertility of it. A farther proof hereof may be, 1. The rich Mines of Gold, in which they used to find Gold without mixture of dross or other Metals. 2. The great increase of Sugar, one Cane here filling 200 sometimes 30 measures. 3. The wonderful yield of Corn, amounting in some places to an hundred-fold. But the mines were long ago exhausted, inasmuch as the Inhabitants are fain to use brass money: but instead of gold of Gold, they have found out others of Brass and Iron, and some few of silver; but not much searched into of late, for want of Workmen.

The reason of that want is to be ascribed unto the Covetousness and cruelty of the Spanish Nation: who, out of an insatiable thirst for Gold, consumed the people in their Mines; and out of the like thirst for Blood, killed for many of them, that in few years they destroyed three Millions of the Natives. And it is probably supposed, that had not Charles the Fifth restrained them by a penal Edict from compelling the Natives against their wills to those works of servitude, there had not been one Native left in all this Island, nor in any other part of their Plantations. Such as are left are said to be of a low stature, of black hair, and a complexion somewhat inclining to that colour: not differing in Manners, Habit, or Religion, from the Spaniards there.

Rivers of most note are, 1. Ozama, on whose Banks stands Domingo, the chief Town of the Island capable of the greatest Ships to the very Wharf. 2. Nigua, which passing through the rich Pastures, or making the Pastures rich by its secret virtue, runneth towards the West: as do also, 3. Taguima, 4. Nizao, and 5. Neyba, 6. Hayna, of a contrary course to the other three. Tagui, or Jacho, which falleth into the Northern Seas. 8. Nisagaya, 9. Cocintenco, 10. Xanigue. These three last famous hetherofore for their sands of Gold. Some speak of 30000 Brooks and Rivers which are found in this Country; 2 parts of which value number had their golden fands. A thing fo far beyond the charity of the strongest Faith, (though reported by a Grave and Reverend Author) that I know not what interpretation to put upon it, except every Water-course, Ditch, and Gutter, may be reckoned in.

The whole divided when the Spaniards first came amongst them, into several Provinces or Kingdoms: as, 1. Higite, 2. Jacaguana, 3. Samana, in the Eastern parts; 4. Taguima, 5. Boraco, and 6. Xaragua, towards the south; and 7. Guababo, and 8. Cabana, in the West; and in the North, 9. Cibao, rich in Mines of Gold, 10. Marien, the Landing place of Columbus, and 11. Magnana in the Centre of the Island, the King whereof in the time of Columbus was named Canabo, of greatest power of any of those petty Royalties. Another division of it hath been made by Nature, parting it by four Rivers, all rising from one Mountain in the midst of the Island, into four Divions; 1. the River Jacho, running towards the North, 2. Nabiba, halting to the South, 3. Tana, or Juna, towards the East, and 4. Hibibonico, to the West. But these divisions being long since grown out of use, we will survey the chief of the Towns and Cities of it, as they come before us.

And they are, 1. S. Domingo, first built by Bartholomew Columbus, Anno 1494, on the East Bank of the Ozama; and afterwards (in the year 1502) removed by Nicholas de Obando, then Governour of the Island, to the opposite shore. Situate in a pleasant Country among wealthy Pastures, and neighboured with a file and capacious Haven: the Houses elegantly built, most of them of stone, and the whole well walled; beside a Castle at the West end of the Peer to defend the Haven: enriched by the Residence of the Governour, the Courts of Justice, the See of an Archbishop, and (besides many Convents and Religious Houses) an Hospital endowed with 20000 Ducats of yearly Rent. Esteemed of greatest trade and concourse of Merchants, till the taking of Mexico and the discovery of Perez, since that time sensibly decaying, and now reduced unto the number of 600 Families of Spaniards; the greatest part of the City, and all the Suburbs, inhabited by Negroes, Mulattos, and other Strangers. Not yet recovered of the hurt it had by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1586 took it by force, and held it for the space of a month, burning the greatest part of the Houses, and suffering the rest to be redeemed at a certain price. 2. S. Salvador, 68 Leagues to the East of Domingo, 3. Jaguana, called also Santa Maria del Porto, from a late and beautiful Haven adjoining to it; situate in the West part of the Island: of no great bigness, consisting of no more than 1500 Houses when it was at the greatest; but made much less by Captain Newports, who, in the year 1591, burnt it to the ground. 4. Cony, in the North of the Island, opposite to Santa Domingo, from which distant almost sixty Leagues: a little Town, but formerly of great esteem for its Mines of Gold. 5. Concepcion de la Vega, the foundation of Christopher Columbus, for whose sake afterwards adorned with a See Episcopal. 6. Puerto de la Plata, 40 Leagues from Domingo on the Northern shore, there built on a commodious Bay by Nicholas de Obando before mentioned, by him also fortified, the second Town of Wealth and Trade in all the Island. 7. Acaia, now called Campestre, a noted Haven, and resorted to for Sugars, which it yields abundantly.

This Island was first discovered by Columbus, (for I believe not that it was any of the Fortunate Islands which we read of in the life of Strabo); in the first Voyage which he made, conducted hither by some of the Inhabitants of the Isle of Cuba. Landing, and gaining the good will of the Savages by gentle usage, he obtained leave of one of their Kings or Caciques to build a Fort in his Country, which he called Nueva, or Natividad, leaving in it 36 Spaniards to keep possession; whom he found both massacred and murdered at his coming back. Bring now better furnished for a new Plantation, he built the Town called Isabella, (in honour of Isabella Queen of Castile) near the Mines of Cibao, which afterwards was deserted also, and the Colony removed unto S. Domingo; the Spaniards sending one Colony after another, till at last their number was increased to 10000, besides Women and Children. But having rooted out the Natives by their infinite cruelties, and exhausted the riches of the Country with as insatiable Covetousness, they betook themselves to fresher Quarters, abandoning the Island to devour the Continent. Once had the Islanders rebelled and fortified themselves in the Province of Boraco; a place fo naturally strong, that there was little need of the helps of Art. Not brought to leave that Nature but on such Conditions as

4. CUBA.

CUBA lieth on the West of Hispaniola, from which parted by a Frith, or narrow Channel, interposed betwixt the two Capes of S. Nicholas, and that of Mexico, backed on the North with a Frith of Islands called the Lucayos, and some part of the Peninsula of Florida; extended towards the East to the extrem point or Foreland of Jucatan, called Cape de Canache, from which distant about 50 Leagues, and neighboured on the South with the Isle of Jamaica.

It is in length from East to West, that is to say, from Cape Mazie towards Hispaniola, to the Cape of S. Anthony, 230 leagues; in breadth where broadest hardly 40, but 15 in others. For the fertility of the soil containing the Spaniards for the pre-eminence, but in the temperate of the Air a great deal before it. Liberally stored with Ginger, Cassia, Mastic, Aloes, Cinnamon, and Sugar, (not reckoning such commodities as are common unto this with others) besides great plenty of Fish and Fowl, and of Fowl no scarcity. The Gold more drolic in the Mine than in Hispaniola, but the Brags more perfect. Hilly, and full of lofty Mountains; but those Mountains clad with divers Trees, some of which drop the purest Robin, and the Hills tending to the Valleys many notable Rivers. Pestered with many flocks of serpents, not fo much out of any ill condition of the soil and air, as by an old superstition of the Savages, in former times not suffered to kill them when they might, (this being a Dish reserved for the higher Powers) notable afterwards to destroy them, when it would have been suffered.

What other savage Rites they had, is not now material, the Spaniards having took an Order that they should not trouble us in that particular. Yet thus much we may add in memory of the first Inhabitants, that an old man of 80 years, one of the Caciques of the Island, addressed himself unto Columbus at his first coming hither, advising him to use his Fortune with moderation, and to remember that the flocks of men have two journeys when they leave this world, the one foul and dark, prepared for the injurious and cruel person; the other clear, bright, and pleasant, for the men of Peace. It is said also of them, they knew not the use of money, nor understood the niceties of Mens and Tenues; Tenants in common to the Blessings which the Earth brought forth, and Cohesors of Nature.

Amongst the Rarities of this Island, they mention a Fountain out of which floweth a pitchy substance, which is found frequently on the feet into which it filleth, excellent for the calling of fishes. Secondly a navigable river, but the name not told us; the waters of which were so hot that a man could not endure to hold his hand in them. They tell us also, thirdly, of a Valley 15 leagues from S. Jago, which produceth stones exactly round, as if made for pleasure; but yet merely natural. But there are no greater rarities than in other places, nor altogether so great as in Hispaniola. In which they tell us of a fair river whose waters are salt, and yet none but fresh fishes fall into it. Of another Lake (three leagues in compass) on the top of the Mountains, into which many Rivers were known to run without any Exit. Neither of these fo strange or rare as the Ctenery, a kind of Scarabe or Beetle; the eyes and wings whereof, when opened, give so great a light in the darkest places, that a man may see to read and write by it, as well as by a Candle.

themselves on the Banks of the River. 2. Armas, which disburtheneth it self near the Port of Xagua. 3. Rio di Porcos, full of Rocks and Quick-sands at the entrances of it. 4. Rio Ejondada, passing betwixt Habana and the Port of Maracaibo. 5. Marigay, and 6. Tanuco, of less note. Besides these there is Xagua, a safe Station and Road for Shipping; of a narrow entrance, but large and spacious when once entered; above ten Leagues in length, and of breadth proportionable. So fenced on all sides from the Winds, that Ships lie here in safety without any Anchor. Some other Bays there are as useful, though not so considerable.

Towns of note consequence, 1. S. Jago, in the south part of the Island, situate about two Leagues from the Main, but in the bottom of a large and capacious Gulf, the most noted Port of all these Seas; Built by Don Diego de Velasquez, Anno 1514; afterwards made a Bishop's See: beautified with a Cathedral, some Religious Houses; once not inferior unto any numbers of people, though now few enough. 2. Caracas, 30 Leagues on the East of S. Jago, the same foundation as the other, and neighbored by great quantities of Ebony-wood. 3. S. Salvador, by some called Bayamo, according to the old name of the Province in which it standeth; built by Velasco in the most pleasant and richest part of all the Island, but not so fitly as the other for Trade and Merchandise. 4. Porto del Principe, an Haven-town in the North parts: not far from which is the Fountain of a pitchy or bituminous Liquor, spoken of before, which I conceive to be much of the same nature with the Fountains of Naphta in the East. 5. Trinidad, another of Velasco's foundations, nine or ten Leagues Eastward of the Port of Xagua: once well frequented, but now forsaken, and mere nothing. 6. Havana, in the North parts, opposite to Florida, a noted and well traded Port; so strongly situate and fortified both by Nature and Art, that it seems impregnable. The Entrances defended with two notable Castles; a greater then either opposite to the mouth of the Haven; all so commodiously built and well planted with Ordnance, that they are able to keep out and scatter the greatest Navy. Near one of them standeth an high Tower, from the top whereof notice is given unto the Guards of every Ship that cometh within view of the Watchmen. The best assurance not only of this Island but the Bay of Mexico; and therefore honoured for the most part with the Seat of the Governor, and the greatest Trade of all these Seas: the Ships which are bound for Spain from all parts of the Gulf tarrying here for one another till all meet together, and setting sail from hence by the Straights of Babama, amongst the Isles of the Lucas.

This Island was one of the first which was discovered by Columbus: who having almost tired the Spaniards with the expectation, first fell upon the Island of Guanabani, one of the Lucas, to which he gave the Name of S. Salvador. From thence he sailed to Baracoa, on the North of this Island, which he caused to be called Fernandina, in honour of Ferdinand the Catholick King of Castile and Aragon; at whose charge, and the encouragement of Isabella his Heroick Queen, he pursued this Enterprize. Landing, he asked the people if they knew Cipango, (by which name Paulus Ponticus calls the Isle of Japan); and they conceiving that he enquired after Cibao, (of great note for the richest Mines in Hispiania) pointed towards Haiti; some of them going with him to conduct him thither. Cuba was by this means laid aside, and all the thoughts of Spain unto Hispiania, where they found many golden Provocations to invite their stay, till hanging after more Gold, and some new Plantations, they passed over hither, and in few years, by the prudent conduct of Velasco, got such footing in it, and made that footing good by so many Colonies, that their Title and Possession was beyond dispute, and so continues to this day.

5. JAMAICA.

JAMAICA lieth on the South of Cuba, from which distant 20 Leagues, and as much, or very little more from Hispiania. Discovered in the second Voyage of Columbus, by whom named S. Jago, that name changed afterwards to Jamaica.

It is in length from East to West about 50 Leagues, and in breadth 20; the whole compass estimated at 50; the middle of it under the 18 Degree of Northern Latitude. Of a rich soil, abundantly provided of all things necessary, well stocked with Cattle, which either industry or Nature have supplied it with. Great store of Cotton-wood, and such abundance of Jucca, (a Root whereof the Savages once made their Bread) that it was deemed the Granary of the neighbouring Island. And were it not diminished of convenient Ports, (which is all the want of it) it would be as much frequented by sea-faring men as any other in those parts. Once very populous, now deplete of all the natural inhabitants; this Island, and that of Porto Rico, losing in few years 60000 by the Spaniards' Cruelties. Cruelties which not only ragged upon the Men, but destroyed Posterity: the Women, here and elsewhere, so abominating their sad condition, that they strangled their Children in Birth, to the end they might not live to suffer such a cruel Nation.

Chief Towns herof, (for though it be well watered it hath no great Rivers.) 1. Sevilla, in the North part of the Island, beautified with a goodly Monastery; the Abbot whereof hath all Episcopal Jurisdiction, and is privileged to wear a Mitre: in nothing more ennobled, then that Pater Martyr the Historian (to whose Decades all succeeding Ages are beholden for the Chorography and History of these parts of the World) was once Abbot here. 2. Méjilla, a small Town, but memorable for the unfortunate Shipwreck of Columbus on the Shores adjoining. 3. Orizaba, on the South of the Island, fourteen Leagues from Sevilla. 4. De la Vega, now a Ruine only, once a Spanish Colony; and of great fame for giving the Title of Duke to Christopher Columbus, and his Brother Bartholomew. Since whole time nothing happened prejudicial to the state of this Island by the hands of any but the Spaniards, till conquered, but not held by Sir Anthony Sherley, Anno 1596.

Thus having took a short survey of the several parts of this great Body; we now briefly take a view of the Government and Forces of it. The Government is committed chiefly to two great Vice-Roys; the one of Nova Hispania, who resides at Mexico, the other of Pern, who abideth at Lima, the principal Cities of those Kingdoms. The first hath Jurisdiction over all the Provinces of Nova Gallicia, Nova Hispania, Guatemala, Castella Auca, and the Provinces of the Mexican Islands; the other over those of Pern, Chile, Rio de la Plata, and the new Realm of Granada. Such scattered pieces as they hold in Guiana, Paria, and the Caribes, with their Forts in Florida, being reduced to some of these. Of these the Vice-Roy of Pern is of greatest power, because he hath the nomination of all the Commanders and Officers within his Government; which in the other are referred to the King himself. But that of New Spain is counted for the better pretence, because of its nearness unto Spain, (in respect of the other) the Beauties of the City of Mexico, and the Civilities of the People. For the administration of Justice, and ordering the Affairs of the several Provinces, there are ten chief Courts, from which there lieth no appeal: that is to say, 1. Guadalajara, for Gallicia; Nova: 2. Mexico, for New Spain: 3. S. Domingo, for the Province of the Islands: 4. Guatemala, for the Division named: 5. Panama, for Castella Auca. Then for the other Government, 6. Quito, 7. Lima, and 8. Charcas, in the Realm of Pern, 9. Imperial, for Chile: 10. S. Jago, for the new Realm of Granada. From these though no appeal do lie in matter of Justice; yet both from them and the two Vice-Roys an Appeal may lie in Affairs of State, or point of Grievance. And to this end there is a standing Council in the Court of Spain, which is called the Council of the Indies, consisting of a President, eight Counsellors, two Proctors Fiscal (which we call the Solicitors general) and two Secretaries, besides other Officers; to whom it appertaineth to take care of all matters which concern the Government of these Countries, to appoint the Vice-Roys, to dispose of all the great Offices (except those of the Government of Peru) and spiritual dignities, to appoint Visitors to go into those Provinces for the examining the actions of all Officers hearing the Grievances of the People, and to displace or punish as they find occasion, but with the Kings privacy and consent.

As for the Estates of private men, they which hold Lands or Royalities from the Crown of Spain hold them but for life, (except it be the Marquels of Valls in New Spain, of the race of Cortez) after their death returns to the King again; who gives them commonly to the eldest son, or the next of blood; but so, that they receive it as a mark of his favour, and not for any right of theirs. And though they have many times attempted to make these Commanderies and Estates hereditary, and offered great sums of money for it, both to Charles the fifth and Philip the second, yet they could never get it done; the Kings most prudently considering, that these great Lords having the command of the Estates and Persons of their several Vassals, would either grind them to powder without any remedy, or upon any Inquisition into their proceedings take an occasion to revolt. Both dangers of no small importance; both by this uncertainty of their present Tenure exceeding happily avoided.

The Revenue which the King receiveth hence is said to be three Millions of Ducats yearly: most of it rising out of the Fifths of the Mines of Gold and Silver; the rest by Customs upon Manufactures and all sorts of Merchandise, and the Acknowledgments referred upon Lands and Royalities. But out of this there go great Exits: that is to say, to the two Vice-Roys 12000 Ducats; to the President and Officers of the Council of the Indies in Spain 20000 Ducats; to the Judges and Officers of the several Courts of Judicature very liberal Pensions; to every Archbishop and Bishop, of which there are 29 in all 2000 Ducats at the least; and to some much more, to mend their Benefices. Then reckoning in the infinite charges in maintaining Garrisons, and entertaining standing Bands both of Horse and Foot, in several parts of this Estate and the continual keeping of a strong Armada to conduct his Fleet-Fleets to Spain; there must be made a great abatement, and the sum will bear it. For howsoever at the first his Revenue came from thence without any great charge, more than the keeping of a few Soldiers to awe the Savages; yet after he fell foul with England, and startled the Hollanders to Rebellion, he was compelled to fortify all his Havens, and secure his Ports, and to maintain a strong Armada at the Sea, to convoy his Treasures: Before which time the English (as is intimated in several places) did go thence in his Harvest, that they left him scarce enough to pay his Workmen; which if they should attempt again upon any Breach, they would find it very difficult, if not impossible, to offset any thing upon the Coasts as in former times; or indeed any other way, but by making themselves too strong for him at Sea, and thereby either intercept his Fleets, or hinder them from coming to him to supply his needs.

And so much for the AMERICAN Islands.

Having thus travelled over (with Gods Blessing) the Known Parts of the World, and failed through the most difficult Seas which embrace the same; we should now man our Barque again, and try what Discovery we can make of the Parts Unknown, or not fully known to us as the others are.

That is to say,

But whither goes my Bark? Return: for we Have slid'd the Capering Brine enough: see, see, The South-wind 'gins to gather Clouds again; 'Tis no safe tarrying in to fierce a place. Whilst thou halt time, retire, thou wearied Bark, Into safe Harbour, when the Clouds which dark The World's Bright Eye shall be dispell'd away, And shining Phœbus make a lightsome day. Triton's shrill Trump shall thee recall again, From the safe Harbour to the foaming Main: And we with all our Powers will boldly try What of this UNKNOWN WORLD we can defy,

AN APPENDIX TO THE FORMER WORK,

Endeavouring a Discovery of the UNKNOWN PARTS of the WORLD.

AND here we are upon a new and strange Adventure, which no Knight Errant ever undertook before. Of things unknown, as there is commonly no desire, so less Discourse can probably be made upon them. By unknown therefore we must understand less known, or not well discovered; and in that sense we may as well endeavour to say somewhat of them, as others with more pains and hazard to attempt the Discovery. And to say truth, even in the known parts of the World there is much unknown; as in the best and most flourishing Kingdoms of the Earth there is some waste ground, either not cultivated at all, or not so well inhabited as the rest of the Country. For besides many vast Tracts of ground in the North and North-west parts of Tartary, and such parts of India as lie Northwards towards Delanger, Nangroet; the East parts of Caucasia, and the Realm of Cathay it is conceived that the greatest part of the Midlands of Africa are undiscovered to this day, or the knowledge of them is imperfect as comes near a Nescience; and for America, not reckoning in the Northern Borders, (which are in part to be the Subject of this Enquiry) it is affirmed of the Midlands by John de Laet, (who hath made the most exact description of it that ever was extant) minima sui parte perlustratum esse, that the least part of them hath been discovered hitherto to any purpose. Leaving these therefore as before without farther search, we will divide the UNKNOWN WORLD into these two parts: 1. Terra Incognita Borealis, and 2. Terra Incognita Australis: which with their subdivisions we will now pursue.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS is that part of the Unknown World which lieth towards the North; and is to be considered in these three Notions: 1. As directly under the Pole, which for distinction sake we will call Orbis Arcticus; 2. as lying to the North-east on the back of Europe and Asia; or 3. on the North-west, on the back of America.

1. ORBIS ARCTICUS is that part of Terra Borealis Incognita which lieth under or about the Arctic Pole; the situations and dimensions of which being taken with the Astrolabe by an Oxford Friar, are by Mercator thus described out of the Itinerary of James Cusack of Bairle due, or the Bisick, a Town of Brabant.

Under the Arctic Pole (saith he) is laid to be a black Rock of wondrous height; about 33 Leagues in

"compass, the Land adjoining being torn by the sea into four great hills. For the Ocean violently breaking through it, and disgorging it felt by 19 Channels, maketh four Euripi or hence Whirl-pools, by which the Waters are finally carried towards the North, and there swallowed into the Bowels of the Earth. That Euripus or Whirl-pool which is made by the Seythick Ocean hath five Inlets, and by reason of his straight passage and violent course is never frozen: the other on the back of Greenland, being 37 Leagues long, hath three Inlets, and remaineth frozen three months yearly. Between these two there lieth an Island on the North of Lappia and Esarnia, inhabited, as they say, by Pigmeti, the tallest of them not above four foot high. Acertain Scholar of Oxford reporteth, that these four Euripi are carried with such furious violence towards some Gulf, in which they are finally swallowed up, that no ship is able with never so strong a Gale to stem the Current, and yet that there is never so strong a Wind as to blow a Windmill. The like is reported by Giraldus Cambrensis in his Book De mirabilibus Hibernie. So far and to this purpose he. But Blandevil our Countryman is of another opinion, (as indeed who not?) neither believing that Pliny or any other of the Roman Writers came hither to describe this Promontory; or that the Oxford Friar, without the assistance of some cold Devil of the middle Region of the Air, (and consequently able to endure all Weathers) could approach so near as to measure these cold Countreys with his Astrolabe, or take the height of this black Rock with his Jacob's staff. Leaving this therefore as more fit for Lucian's Dialogues than any serious Discourse: we will proceed to matters of more truth and certainty.

2. The NORTHWEST parts of Terra Incognita Borealis are those which lie on the back of Esthonia, the most Northern Province of America: by which it hath been much endeavoured to find out a passage to Cathay and China, and not to go so far about as either by the Cape of Good Hope, or the Straights of Magellan. Attempted first by Sebastian Cabot Anno 1497, at the charge of Henry the 7. of England. But having discovered as far as to the 67. Degree of Northern Latitude, by the mutiny of his Mariners he was forced to return; when finding great preparations for a war with Scotland, that business for the present was laid aside. Returned by Gaspard Cortrealis a Portugall Anno 1500, and after by Stephen Gomez a Spaniard, in the year 1525; but neither of them went so far to the North as Cabot. The Spaniards notwithstanding would not so give over, but still with five Ships from the Grey, and afterwards by two from New Spain, sent out by Cortez, pursued the Enterprize; which Proving as successful as the former had been, occasioned Charles the 2<sup>d</sup>, then preparing for Italy, on the payment of 350000 Ducats by King John the third, to suspend the Prosecution of it. Followed with greater industry, but as had success, by Sir Martin Frobisher, who made three Voyages for these parts, (the first of them in the year 1579,) and brought home some of the Natives, a Sea Unicorn's horn, (still kept in the great Wardrobe of Windsor Castle) and a great deal of the Ore of that Country, found upon trial, when in England, not to quit the Coast. A great Promotory which he passed by he called Queen Elizabeth's Foreland, in whose name he took possession of it and the Sea running not far off he called Frobisher's Straights. The Seas full set with Ice Islands some of them half a mile about, and eighty Fathoms above Water: the People like the Sanneds, the worst kind of Tartars, in their lives and habit. John Davies followed the design Anno 1585, at the encouragement of Sir Francis Walsingham, then principal Secretary of Estate: and having in three Voyages discovered to the Latitude of 73°, by reason of the many difficulties which he found in the enterprise, and the death of Mr. Secretary, he was fain to give over, leaving out a narrow Sea on the North of Esotland, the name of Francis Davies, in the Latitude of 65° and 20 Minutes by which name it is still called. After him followed Wyomouth, Hall, Hudjon, Batton, Bassin, Smith; all English. The rest of those Endeavours was the finding of some cold Isles and points of Land, which they named King James his Cape, Queen Ann's Cape, Prince Henric's Foreland, Saddle Island, Barren Island, Red-goose Island, Diggs his Island; all of them betwixt 80 and 81: and the imposing on some passages and parts of the Sea the names of Hackley's Headland, Smith's Bay, Hudjon's Straights, Mandin's Sound, Fair Haven, and the like marks and monuments of their Undertakings. Nothing achieved of publick moment, but the Discovery of an Island called Cherry Island in the Latitude of 74°, and the Shores of a large piece of the Continent, which they caused to be called King James his New Land, most commonly Greenland; where they found many white Bears, with white, gray and dun Foxes, Partridges, Geese, and some other Provisions. Sea-Unicorns Horns, great store of Mosses, (or Sea-Horses) the Oil and Teeth whereof yield no small Commodity. But most considerable for the Trade of Whale-fishing, which our men use yearly upon those Coasts; of whose Oil, Bones and Brain (this last supposed to be the true Sperma Ceti, now sold as Medicinal) they raised very great profit.

3. The NORTH-EAST parts of Terra Incognita Australis are those which lie on the North of Russia and Tartary, by which the lipage towards Cashy and China hath been oft attempted; and hitherto with little success. Endeavoured first by Sebastian Cabot, the Son of John Cabot, so often mentioned before, by him trained up in the Discovery of the North-east parts of America. His Employment falling here in England, he betook himself unto the Service of the King of Spain; and coming out of Spain, Anno 1559, was by King Edward the sixth made grand Pilot of England, with an Annual Pension of 166 l. 13 s. 4 d. In the year 1553, he was the chief Dealer and Procurer of the Discovery of Russia and the North-east Voyages, undertaken and performed by Sir Hugh Willoughby, Chancellor, Burrough, Jenkinson; and after prosecuted by Pet and Jackman. Some of which perished in the Action, and were frozen to death; their Ship being found the next year hemmed about with Ice, and a particular account of all things which had happened to them. Others with better fortunes found the way to Russia, (since that time made a common Voyage without dread or danger) and passing down the Volga to the Ca- spian Sea, and by that to Persia, were kindly entertained in the Court of the Sophy. The Hollanders in the year 1594, and in some years after, tried their Fortune also, under the Conduct and Direction of one William Barrow, their chief Pilot; but went no farther than the English had gone before them; yet gave new names unto all places as they passed, as if they had been the first Discoverers, with Pride and Arrogance enough. Nothing since done of any note or consideration for the opening of this North-east passage, or giving us any better account of the North of Tartary, or any Country beyond that but what we had many Ages since out of Pausanias: so that we are but where we were, in the Terra Incognita. And though I would not willingly discourage any noble Actions, or brave and gallant Undertakings, yet when I look upon the nature of those Shores and Seas, those tedious Winters of ten months, with no Summer following, the Winds continually in the North, and the main Ocean paved with Ice so long together; I cannot chuse but rank the hopes of these Northern Passages amongst those Adventures which are only commendable for the Difficulties presented in them.

TERRA AUSTRALIS INCOGNITA.

With better hopes we may go forwards on the next Discovery, and try what may be done on Terra Australis, or the Southern Continent, though hitherto Incognita also, almost as much unknown as the African Islands, which none but my good Friend of Oxford had the hap to meet with. A Continent conceived by our Learned Brethren to be as large as Europe, Asia, and Africa; and that upon such strength of Reasons as cannot be easily overborne by any oppositor. His Arguments in brief are these. 1. That as touching Latitude, some parts thereof come very near to the Aequator, if they come not also on this side of it: and as for Longitude, it keepeth along, though at several distances, the whole continental course of the other Continents. 2. It is clearly known, that in the other two Continents the Land which lieth on the North-side of that Line is four times at the least as large as that which lieth South thereof; and therefore, since the Earth is equally poised on both sides of the Centre, it must needs be that the Earth in answerable measure and proportion must advance it self in some places above the Sea on the South-side of the Line, as it doth in others on the North. By consequence, what is wanting in the South parts of the other two Continents to counter-balance the North-parts of them, must of necessity be supplied in the Southern Continent.

The Country being so large, so free from the Incumbrances of Frosts and Ice and endless Winters, I have oft marvelled with my self that no farther progress hath been made in Discovery of it: considering chiefly by the Site and Position of the Country, especially in those parts which lie nearest Asia, that there is nothing to be looked for elsewhere, either of profit or of pleasure, but may there be found. Whether it be that there is some Nihilum put to humane endeavours, or that this people are not yet made ripe enough to receive the Gospel, or that the great Princes of the Earth think it no good Policy to engage themselves in new Discoveries, till the old be thoroughly planted and made sure unto them; or that the Merchant, who in matters of this nature hath a powerful influence, thinks his hands full enough already, and being fettered in so many and so wealthy Factors, will not adventure upon more: Which of all these, or whether all these together be the cause of this Stop, I am not able to determine. Certain it is, that there is a large Field, enough for Covetousness, Ambition, or desire of Glory, to spend themselves in enough to satisfy the greatest and most hungry appetite of Empire, Wealth and Worldly pleasure; besides the Gallantry and Merit of to brave an Action. Most which hath hitherto been done in it hath been by the encouragement of the Vice-Roys of New Spain and Pera: by the first of which we came acquainted with the Coasts of New Guinea; by the latter, with those Countries called the Islands of Solomon, but whether Continent or Islands, not yet fully known.

And yet we must not rob Magellan of his part of the Honour, who, passing through the Straights which now bear his name, discovered those parts of it which, from the Fire thence seen, he called Terra del Fuego, found by the Hollanders of late under James de Maire to be an Island. Nor do the English or the Dutch want their parts herein, though what they did was rather accidental than upon Design. For in the year 1593, Sir Richard Hakluyt, being bound for the Straights of Magellan, was by a cross wind driven on some parts of this Continent, to which he gave the name of Hankins his Maiden land; a Promontory off shooting in to the Sea with three Points he called Point Tremontin; and a pleasant Isle not far off by the name of Fair Island. Sailing along the Coast of the 50. Degree of Southern Latitude, for the space of sixty miles and upwards, he found the Country as he passed to be very pleasant; and by the Fires which he saw in the night, to be well inhabited. By the like accident, Anno 1599, Sibald de Peert, a Hollander, in his return from the Straights of Magellan, fell upon some Islands of this Southern Continent, in the Latitude of fifty Degrees and forty Minutes, which he caused to be called Sibald's Islands. And besides these we owe to the Portugals the Discovery of such parts hereof as they fell on in their way to the Eastern Indies, of which we have little but the names as: 1. Pittacorum Terra, so called from the abundance of Parrots which they saw on the Coasts over against the Cape of good Hopes. 2. Beach, a Region yielding Gold, and posited by Idolaters, with the two Kingdoms of, 3. Luceah, and 4. Malcatur; all three against the Isles of Java, from which little distant.

But the greatest light we have to see by into this dark business is by the Voyages and Adventures of the Spaniards, employed by the two Vice-Roys of Peru and Mexico, as before was said. For in the year 1543, the Governor of New Spain, then being, sent Pilla Lobos with a Fleet towards the Moluccas, who in that Voyage made a Discovery of a rich and flourishing Country, which he named New Guinea, by others since this time called Terra de Picinaceli: and in the year 1563, Castro the Lieutenant, then Vice-Roy of Peru, sent a Fleet from Lima, which under the Conduct of Lopez Garcia de Castro, discovered the Islands of Solomon. To which if we subjoin the success of the Hollanders in the discovery of Fratum de Maire, and the Lands adjoining, the best Description we can make of this Southern Continent must be in the Chorography and History of their Adventures.

1. Terra del Fuego, 2. Insula Solomonis, 3. New Guinea beginning first with Terra del Fogo, because nearest to us.

1. TERRA DEL FUEGO lies on the other side of the Straights of Magellan, heretofore thought to be a part of Terra Australis Incognita, or the Southern Continent, but is now discovered to be an Island by one Jacob Maire of Amsterdam, accompanied by Cornelius Sebemba of Horn, both Hollanders. They began their Voyage on the 15 of June, Anno 1615, and on the 19. of January following they fell even with the Straights of Magellan. On the 24. of the same Month they had the light of another Strait, which seemed to separate this Terra del Fuego from the rest of the Southern Continent; and on the 25, they entered into it. That part of the Land which (being entered into the Straights) they had on the West, they called Terra Mauriti de Nassau; that on the East, Statenland; the Strait it fell, Fratum de Maire; the entrance into the Strait they found to be in 55 Degrees of Southern Latitude and 50 Minutes; the water running into the North Sea by so violent an Eddy, his aduersum mari glom diffundit superare passum, which he whoso the way of Journal or Ephemerides hath described the whole course of this Voyage. In the whole course thereof nothing so much observable (besides the Discovery) as that they found that at their coming home they had lost a Day, (as multitudes happen unto such as in so tedious a Voyage had travelled Westward) that being Saturday to them which was Sunday to the Hollanders and the rest of Europe; though they had calculated the Days since their going out with all exactness. So that if there were any such Morality in the Sabbath as some men pretend, these men must either keep their Sabbath on a different day from the rest of their Countrymen, or otherwise, to comply with them, must be guilty of the breach of the Sabbath all the rest of their lives. But of this more at large elsewhere. To return therefore to this Strait: it is said to be seven Dutch miles or 28 of ours in length, and of a fair and equal breadth; plentiful of good Fish, especially of Sea-Calves and Whales. About the inferring of which Strait into the third Edition of my Microcosm, I received a Letter at such time as the Parliament was held in Oxon Anno 1625, subscribed G. B. and a little under that, Sub genibus floridus: which whether it were the Gentleman Mottor, or the Anagram of his name, I am not able to say, having never heard more of him from that time forwards, though his desire were satisfied in the next Edition of that Work. For my encouragement wherein he gave me this direction following. "The News (faith he) of this New Strait coming into Spain, it pleased the King, in the year 1618, to send and search whether the truth were answerable unto the Report. And finding it to be much broader than the other, and not above seven Dutch miles long, he decreed, that being the more easy and commodious way for Navigators, and less subject to dangers, his Auxiliary Forces should be sent that way into the East-Indies to defend the Philippine and Molucca Islands, and the way by the Cape of good Hope to be left. In regard that every such Voyage requireth twice as much time; besides the variety of Winds, and often change of the Air, not only troublefome, but full of Disasters, consuming the one half of the men before they return. Whereas this way gaineth time (and, if need be, they may dispatch business in the West as they travel thence to the East) without any extraordinary danger or loss of men. So far the very words of my Letter. The Intelligence given me in this Letter I find confirmed in a Relation of the Voyage made by Captain Don Juan de Mesa, Anno 1618, at the command and charge of the King of Spain, who perfectly arriv'd and furnish'd eight tall Ships to send this new way into his Philippines and Moluccas, under the conduct of Pern Michabius de Cordelien. Since it hath been found by experience that even from our parts to the Moluccas through this Fratum de Maire, is but a passage of eight Months, fine uli infigni navigationis clade, with the Narrator. But of this Strait enough to satisfy my unknown Well-wishers Request, and inform my Reader: being extremely sorry that the Gentleman was not pleased to impart his name, that so his memory might have lived in these Papers, if they themselves be delineate to a longer life.

Now for the nature of the Soil, it is said to be very full of Mountains; but those Hills appalled with Woods

Woods, intermixt with Valleys; the Valleys for the most part full of little Brooks, which fall down from the Mountains, and afford good Pasturage; the Sea-coasts well provided with Bays and Roads, not unsafe for Shipping: though the Air every where, but chiefly near the Sea, be most subject to Tempests. As for the People, they are said to be of a white Complexion; but their Faces, Arms and Thighs, coloured with a kind of Oker: of full stature and well-proportioned, their Hair black, which they wear long, to seem more terrible. The Men most generally naked, the Women only shadded on their secret parts with a piece of Leather.

Towns they have none, nor any Habitations which deserve the name of Houses: so that the most which we can do is to coast the Island. In which we find towards Mare del Nord, 1. A large Arm of the Sea called Entrada de S. Sebastian. 2. The Cape of S. Ives. 3. Mauritius Land. 4. Promontorio de Buen Suceso, or the Cape of Good Success. Opposite wherunto in another Island is the Cape of S. Bartholomew, and betwixt them the Strait called Fretum le Maire. Then in the Nor South-Sea, as they call it, there are, 5. Barnwell's Island. 6. The Islands of S. Idelfonso. 7. Cape Horn, on a fair Promontory, in the South-west Ande, which doubled, the Country goes along with a straight Shore, on which I find some Bays and Capes, but no names unto them; till we come to the Western entrances of the Strait of Magellan, opposite unto Cape Victoria, to often mentioned.

2. INSULÆ SOLOMONIS, or the Islands of Solomon, are situate on the West of Terra del Fogo, 11 Degrees on the South of the Equinoctial. Discovered in the year 1567, by Lopez Garcia de Castro, sent by the Vice-Roy of Peru to find out new Countries. By him thus named, in hope that men would be rather induced to inhabit in them; imagining that Solomon had his Gold from these Lands of Opbir.

In number they are many, but 18 the principal: Some of which 300 miles in compass, others 200, and others of them less, till we come to fifty, and beneath that, none. All liberally furnished with Dogs, Hogs, Hens, Cloves, Ginger, Cinamon, and some Veins of Gold. The chief of these eighteen are, 1. Guadalcanal, supposed to be the greatest of them; upon the Coast whereof the Spaniards sailed 150 Leagues, where they found a Town which they burned and killed, because the people of it, by a sudden surprize, had killed fourteen of their men. 2. S. Jabbell, 150 Leagues in length, and 18 in breadth, the Inhabitants come black, some white, some of brown Complexion. 3. S. Nicholas, 100 Leagues in compass, inhabited by a People whose colour is black of hue, but said to be more witty than the other Savages. All of them situate betwixt the Straights of Magellan and the Islands of Thiver; and yet not well agreed upon amongst our Authors, whether to be accounted Islands, or a part of the Continent, the Spaniards having sailed 700 Leagues on the Coasts hereof, and yet not able to attain unto any certainty. But being they pass generally in account for Islands, and by that name under the Vice-Roy of Peru, who appoints their Governors, let them pass to fill.

3. NOVA GUINÆA hath beyond the Islands of Solomon in respect of us, proceeding, as we have begun from the Land of Fire. Discovered, as before was said, Anno 1543, by Vila Lopes (wherein attributes the Discovery to the Alvares de Saavedra, and sets it higher, in the year 1527) more perfectly made known, if I guess aright, by Ferdinando de Quir, who being sent with two Ships to make a more full Discovery of the Islands of Solomon, and taking his course about the Height of the Magellan Straights, discovered a main Land coming up close to the Equinoctial, on the Coasts whereof he sailed 80 Leagues, till he found himself at last in the Latitude of 15 Degrees, discovering a large Bay into which fell two great Rivers, where he purposed to settle a Plantation, and to that end presented a Petition to the King of Spain. This Country I conceive, by the Site and Position of it, to be Nova Guinea, coming up close as that doth to the Equinoctial; and after turning to the South towards the Tropick of Capricorn, where it joyneth with Malacca. And taking it for granted, as I think I may, I shall afford the Reader this Description of it, out of his memorials, in which it is ischerly affirmed to be a Terrestrial Paradise for Wealth and Pleasures. The Country is plentiful of Fruits, Coconuts, Almonds of four sorts, Pome-granates, Dates, Sugar canes and Apples; plenty of Swine, Goats, Hens, Partridges, and other Fowl, with some Kine and Buffals. Nothing inferior (as it seemeth) to Guinea in the Land of Negroes, and from thence so named. For, as he saith, he saw amongst them Silver and Pearls, and some told him of Gold; the Countrys on the Coast seeming to promise much felicity within the Land. The Air he found to be wholesome and temperate, the Sea-shores to be full of Bays, Havens, and the Exits of Rivers, making shew of another China. The Inhabitants he affirmeth to be innumerable, some white, some like the Malakas, others like the Negroes; diversified in Habit as well as Colour. Their Bread made of three sorts of Roots: without Government, but not without Religion; for they had their several Oratories and places of burial, but neither King, nor Laws, nor Arts. Divided by that want, and in daily Wars with one another: their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and other Weapons, but all made of Wood. Of this Country, whatever it was (if not Nova Guinea) he took possession in the name of the Catholick King, and set up both a Cross and a Chapel in it; the Chapel dedicated to the Lady of Loretto.

The precise time of this Discovery I have now here found, but that the time spent about it is by him affirmed to be 14 years, to the small endamagement of his Health and Fortunes. Nor do I find that any care was taken of his Petition, or any thing else done by others in pursuance of his Propositions. Whether it were on any of the Reasons before laid down; or that there was no credit given to his affirmations, I determine not. Nor find I that he gave any names to the Bays or Promontories as he passed along; but he either took such names as were given before, or found not any thing worth the naming. And for such names as were given before, (still taking Ferdinando Quir's new Country for Nova Guinea) we find a Promontory called Cape Hermosa, in the East parts hereof, near the Islands of Solomon, and not far from the Aquator. 2. Another in the Western part, but as near the Equinox, called Pont Primiro. 3. A third in the first bendings of the Coast towards the South, called Cape de Buena Defensa, or the Cape of good Defence. 4. Rio de Valcanes. 5. Rio de Lorenzo. 6. Rio de S. Augustino, on the East of Cape Formosa towards the Straights. 7. The Rivers of S. Peter. 8. S. Paul. 9. S. Andrew, and 10. S. James, betwixt Cape Formosa and Primiro.

But being there is little certainty of these last Discoveries, and the greatest certainty we have of that little is nothing but a list of names without any thing observable in the state and story of the fame, they may still retain the old name of Terra Incognita. And therefore I try my fortune, and without troubling the Vice-Roy of Peru and Mexico, or taking out Commission for a new Discovery, will make a search into this Terra Australis for some other Regions, which might be found either here or no-where. The names of which are, 1. Mundus alter idem, 2. Utopia, 3. New Atlantis, 4. Fairy Land, 5. The

Painter's

Painter's Wives Island. 6. The Lands of Chivalry, and 7. The New World in the Moon.

1. MUNDUS ALTER ET IDEM, Another world, and yet the same, is a witty and ingenious Invention of a Learned Prelate, writ by him in his younger days, (but well enough becoming the austerity of the gravest Head) in which he distinguisheth the Vices, Passions, Humours, and ill Affections most commonly inclined to mankind, into several Provinces, gives us the Character of each, as in the description of a Country, People, and chief Cities of it; and lets them forth to the Eye in such lively Colours, that the Vicious man may see therein his own Deformities, and the well-minded man his own Imperfections. The Scene of this Design is laid by the Reverend Author in this Terra Australis; the Decorum happily preferred in the whole Discovery; the stile acutely clear, in the Invention singular. Of whom and his New World I shall give you that Eulogy which the Historian doth of Humor, Nec ante illum quem ille imitaretur, neque post illum qui eum imitari posset, inventus est.

2. UTOPIA is a Country first discovered by Sir Thomas More, after Lord Chancellor of England, and by him made a Scene of a Commonwealth, which neither Solon, nor Lycargus, nor any of the Legislators of former times did ever dream of; nor had been fancied by Plato, Aristotle, Tully, or any who have written the Idea's of a Form of Government, though not reducible to practice. Some of his Plots we have taken notice of already: viz. his device to bring Gold and Silver into contempt by making of those Metals Chains and Fetters for their Malefactors, Pans of Clove-hoofs, Chamber-pots, and Vessels of such unclean uses; by imposing it as a penalty on infamous persons, to wear Gold-rings upon their fingers, and the like devices: as also his device to prevent mistakes and dislikes in Marriages, by giving the parties a full view of each other naked. Many more projects of this nature, from which the possible enough, but so unpracticable, to beyond hope of being looked on in the modelling of a Commonwealth, that we may reckon this device amongst those strange Fancies, que nunquam antea fice concepti, nedom operentur erant. The man indeed (considering the times he lived in) was of rare abilities; but this Utopia fitted only to the Meridian of this Southern Continent, this Terra Australis Incognita, in which now we are, and to no place else.

3. NEW ATLANTIS is an Island of this Southern Continent discovered by Sir Francis Bacon, the Learned Vicount of S. Alban's, one of Sir Thomas More's Successors in the place of Lord Chancellor, but far before him in the excellency and fecibility of his Invention. It had this name with reference to Atlantis, an Island of the Western or Atlantic Ocean, mentioned in the Works of Plato, both alike invisible. But for his falling into this Island, his description of it, the City of Befallen, and the manner of his reception there, such handsome probabilities, and so fairly carried, that to one not acquainted with the state of the World it would seem a Reality. But above all things, the Inventions and Designs of Solomon's Houses for perfecting the works of nature, or rather improving Nature to the best advantages of Life, and the benefit of mankind, are beyond comparison. The man I must confess had his personal errors, (I know none without them) of good and bad qualities equally compounded: Mores ejus vigore & levitate mixtissimi, as Paterculus once said of Piso, nor one amongst many thousand (to purport that Character) qui aut oriam vultu diligit, aut facilius sufficit negotio. A man of a most strong Brain, and a Cynical Head, who, if he had been entertained with some liberal Salary, abstracted from all Affairs both of State and Judicature, and furnished with facility both of means and helps for the going on in his Design, would, I am confident, have given us such a Body of Natural Philosophy; and made it so subversive to the publick good, that neither Aristotle, nor Theophrastus amongst the Ancients, nor Paracelsus, or the rest of our later Chymists would have been considerable.

4. FAIRY LAND is another part of this Terra Incognita, the habitation of the Fairies, a pretty kind of little Fiends or Pigmy-Devils, but more inclined to sport than mischief; of which old Women, who remember the times of Popery, tell us many fine Stories. A cleaner and more innocent Cheat was never put upon poor ignorant People, by the Monks and Friars. Their habitation here or no where; though sent occasionally by Oberon and their other Kings, to our parts of the world. For not being reckoned amongst the good Angels, nor having malice enough to make them Devils, (but such a kind of mischievous Spirits as the Latines call Lemures, or Laræ) we must find out some place for them, neither Heaven nor Hell, and most likely this. Their Country never more ennobled then by being made the Scene of that excellent Poem called the Fairy Queen. Intended to the honour of Queen Elizabeth, and the greatest persons in her Court: but shadowed in such lively colours, framed to exactly by the Rules of Poetic, and representing such Idea's of all Moral goodnes; that as there never was a Poem more artificial, so can no Ethical discourse more fashion and enflame the mind to the love of Virtue. Invictum facilius aliquam quam insitutum, shall be Spencer's Motto; and so I leave him to his rest.

5. The PAINTERS WIVES ISLAND is an Island of this Tract, mentioned by Sir Walter Raleigh, in his History of the World. Of which he was informed by Don Pedro de Sarmiento, a Spanish Gentleman, employed by his King in planting some Colonies on the Straights of Magellan, (which we have touched upon before) who being taken Prisoner by Sir Walter in his going home, was asked of him about some Island which the Maps presented in those Straights, and might have been of great use to him in his Undertaking. To which he merrily replied, that it was to be called the Painters Wives Island, saying, that whilst the Painter drew that Map, his Wife sitting by, desired him to put in one Country for her, that she in her imagination might have an Island of her own. His meaning was, that there was no such Island as the Maps presented. And I fear the Painter's Wife hath many Islands, and some Countries too upon the Continent in our common Maps, which are not really to be found on the strictest search.

6. THE LANDS OF CHIVALRY are such Islands, Provinces, and Kingdoms, in the Books of Errantry, which have no being in any known part of the World, and therefore must be sought in this. A gross absurdity, but frequent in those kind of Writers, who in describing the Adventures of their Knights, in despite of Geography, (with which indeed they had no acquaintance) have nor only disjoynd Countries which are near together, and laid together Countries which are far remote; but given us the description of many Islands, Provinces, and mighty Kingdoms, which as the ingenious Author of the History of Don Quixote merrily observeth, are not to be found in all the Map. Of this sort is the Isle of Adamants in Sir Huon of Burdeaux; the Firm Island, in the History of Amadis de Gaul; the Hidden Island, and that of the Sage Altiart, in Sir Palmerin of England; the Islands of Lindaraza, and the Devilish Farnes, with the Kingdom of Lyræ, (of which the Amazonian Lady Anchibolus was the rightful Queen) and many others of that kind, in the Mirror of Knighthood; and divers of like nature in Palmerin de Oliva, Primaleon, and Belianis of Greece, Parismis, the Ramant mance of Romances, and indeed whom not of all that Rabbie! handily humoured by Michael de Cervo in his Island of Barataria, of which the famous Sano Panca was sometime Governour, and the Kingdom of Micomicona. And yet I cannot but confess (for I have been a great Student in these Books of Chivalry) that they may be of very good use to Children or young Boys in their Adolescence. For besides that they divert the mind from worldly cogitations, they perfect him that takes pleasure in them in the way of Reading, beget in him an habit of speaking, and animate him many times to such high conceptions as really may make him fit for great Undertakings.

7. The NEW WORLD IN THE MOON was first of Lucian discovering; a man of eminent parts, but as ill a Conscience, apostatizing from the Faith in which he was bred. Avithaphant had before told us in one of his Comedies of a Nephelococcygia, or a City of Cuckoos in the Clouds. But Lucian was the first who found out this New World in the Moon; of which, and of the Inhabitants of it, he affordeth us in one of his Dialogues a conceited Character. But of late times, that World which he there fancied and propounded but as a fancy only, is become a matter of a more serious Debate; and some have laboured with great pains to make it probable, that there is another World in the Moon, inhabited as this is by persons of divers Languages, Customs, Politics and Religions: and more then so, some means and ways propounded to consideration for maintaining an intercourse and Commerce betwixt that and this. But being there are like endeavours to prove that the Earth may be a Planet, why may not this Southern Continent be that Planet, and more particularly that Moon, in which this other world is supposed to be? Certainly there are stronger hopes of finding a New World in this Terra Australis then in the body of that Planet, and such perhaps as might exceed both in profit and pleasure the later Discoveries of America.

But I am no discourager of Industry and Ingenuity, which I love and honour wheresoever I find it. I know great Truths have many times been started upon less presumptions. Nor would I be mislook, as if in my pursuit of this Terra Incognita I put scorn on any of sublimer thoughts, or that I would have any man so much in love with the present World, as not to look for another world in Heaven above. It is reported, that in some Controversie betwixt the Polander and the Duke of Moscow, the King of Poland sent the Moscovite a curious Globe, representing the whole Heavenly Bodies, with the particular motion of each several Sphere. To which the Moscovite returned this unworthy answer, Tu mihi Coelum misisti, et reddo mihi Terram de quibus contentumus; You send me Heaven, faith he, but that will not last, unless you give me back those Lands which are now in question. And much I fear there are too many of this mind, who would not lose their part on earth for all Heaven it self; whom I desire, if any such part peruse these Papers, to consider, that as much as the most flourishing Country which is here described doth fall short of that Paradise wherein God placed our Father Adam, so much, and infinitely more did that Earthly Paradise fall short of the unspeakable Glories of the Kingdom of Heaven. To the diligent and careful search of which Heavenly Kingdom I heartily commit the Reader: not doubting but the Works of God which are here presented, and that vicissitude of humane Affairs which is herein touched at, may prompt him to some serious thoughts of that mighty God who made all these Works, in whom is no shadow nor shadow of change; to whom be given all Glory both in this World, and that to come.

*Quicquid enim Lunæ gremio completitur Orbis,
Permutat variæque vires, trepidoque tumultu
Assuat, & nunquam sensit pars una Quiescentem.
Nam ruit in sese, & civili vulnere semper
Aut cadit, aut perimit; alioque renascitur unum,
Rursus ut interest: sic non est omnibus unum
Partibus Ingenium, non vis nativa. Sed Orbes
Altitelli, & nudi sublimis Regio Caeli
Immutat senil, & vultu immutabili tuus,
Terpetuum servat scilicet & sincera tenorem.*

The Verses are G. Buchanau's in his Book De Sphæra, which I thus Translate, and therewithal conclude this Work.

The World beneath the Moon its shapes doth vary,
And change from this to that: nor can it tarry
Long in one state, but with it self doth can Kills and is kill'd in endless Civil War.
New form'd again, 'tis but to die; the frame
Neither of Bodies nor of Minds the same.
But that above the Spheres, the Heavens can high,
In which GOD Reigns in glorious Majesty,
Free from old Age, unchang'd, and of one face,
Always presents it self in equal Grace.

Non nobis, Domine, non nobis, sed Nomini tuo detur Gloria.
